(b) The reconsignment privilege has grown up in response to changes that have taken place in commercial adjustments in comparatively recent years. Formerly the large distributive centers of the country were the depots in which supplies were stored by jobbers preparatory to being shipped out in smaller lots through the adjacent territory. As, with the spread of population, this adjacent territory has developed smaller distributive centers of its own, and as the transportation facilities have reached more and more intimately over its area, shipments from the factory have come more directly to the consumer. In many lines the jobber of the city has become largely a broker who directs distribution without directly handling the goods distributed. In a sense, this distributive development in analogous to the earlier transportation development that came with the consolidation into railway systems and the establishment of through routes in place of the separate operation of local lines. In both cases an economic saving is secured through the elimination of unnecessary handlings of commodities. The through route has justified itself in experience, and has become firmly fixed as an essential function of the transportation system. Whether reconsignment shall ultimately win such recognition is for the future to prove; at present it is on probation and is generally regarded with limited favor save by those who profit from its extension. Detroit Traffic Ass'n v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 257, 258.

(c) The primary economic advantage of reconsignment is found in the increase in the fluidity and regularity of the movement of commodities; there is an important elimination of economic waste in the reduction of the handling of goods between the producer and the consumer, celerity of movement is increased, the direction of commodities to the point of most active demand is facilitated. In other words, reconsignment increases the efficiency of transportation facilities in performing their most important function of bringing together supply and demand. The shipper of perishable products is enabled to divert his shipment from a market already overstocked, thus often converting a prospective loss into a gain; he is enabled to take advantage of his latest possible information as to market conditions. Similar advantages are seen in the movement of lumber and grain and other commodities of universal necessity. Detroit Traffic Ass'n v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 257, 259.

(d) Reconsignment is allowed under the tariffs of the several carriers in two distinct classes of cases. A shipment while in transit to a given point may be diverted to another market, provided the order is received before the car has passed the proper junction point. A modification of this privilege is seen where the final destination of a shipment is not announced by the shipper until the car has arrived at a designated junction. Reconsignment in transit is usually allowed by the carrier without any additional charge being made. Reconsignment at terminal on the other hand usually involves a special charge. In most cases cars for reconsignment are so designated at the time of shipment, and upon arrival at the original destination, they are placed on storage or "hold" tracks awaiting the reconsignment order. When the terminal tracks are congested, the carrier often, as a matter of convenience, holds them at some point short of destination, and provided this involves no disadvantage to the consignee, such holding is constructively equivalent to holding at destination. Detroit Traffic Ass'n v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 257, 259.

(e) It is the privilege of reconsignment that enables the jobber of coal to anticipate the orders of his customers, and to direct the flow of traffic to the points where it will do the most good. Were this privilege withdrawn, he would be obliged either to place his orders with the mines after instead of before receipt of orders from his customers, or to provide storage facilities at the points where such facilities are necessarily most expensive. The added expense of such service would be reflected in the price he would be compelled to make to his customer. Were the privilege of reconsignment withdrawn, it would probably mean the elimination or at least the minimizing of the broker as a factor in economic distribution. The expense of storage in a large city would be so much greater than the cost of storage at the point of consumption that the small dealer in the isolated community and the manufacturer would be compelled to draw their supplies direct from the mine. The greater the distance from which supplies are drawn, the greater the uncertainty as to the time of delivery. The proper use of reconsignment has the effect of substituting nearby supplies for the distant supplies at the mines. Were Detroit eliminated as a distributive factor, the coal purchasers in Michigan would be obliged to order their supplies five or six weeks earlier, which in many cases would be a material hardship. Manufacturing development has been very active throughout the state of Michigan, and any such disturbance of the fuel supply would be a serious blow to those interests. Detroit Traffic Ass'n v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 257, 260.

(f) The dealer in a small community, who handles but a limited number of cars of coal each year, usually has a small capital, and is unprepared to tie up any part of that capital in holding coal to insure meeting a prospective demand. It is to his interest to postpone such investment to the last possible moment. The irregularity of seasonal changes, the uncertainty of transportation on account of weather conditions, the congestion of orders at the mines and of demands upon the carriers at the season of active demand, the vastly increased distance from which supplies must be drawn—all of these are factors working to extend the time during which coal must be held by the dealer if he is to be denied the privilege of reconsignment. To the consumer, who is, after all, the person most vitally interested, reconsignment means not merely regularity and timeliness of supply, but economy in securing that supply. Whatever increased expense in handling coal the dealer is put to, whatever additional cost is imposed upon the broker who supplies his dealer, is transferred to the consumers' shoulders, with some slight additions in the way of insurance and interest for the use of capital. Nor is the practice without its advantages to the carrier in the increased regularity of movement, in the greater efficiency in direction of supply, both in quantity and in kind, in the opportunity to relieve congestion at terminals by holding at points short of the terminal, and in the economy of handling that results in the consolidation of shipments to the distributing point, which usually means over by far the greater part of the haul. Detroit Traffic Ass'n v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 257, 260.

(g) It may therefore be considered as a settled principle that within reasonable limits reconsigning privileges are necessary and proper. In re Advances in Demurrage, 25 I. C. C. 314, 316.

(h) If the destination of a shipment is changed before arrival at the original billed destination it constitutes a diversion, but if made after arrival at such destination it is a reconsignment. C. G. Justice Co. v. Penn R. R. Co., 26 I. C. 478, 479.

(i) Where the contents of the car remain unchanged, where the change of destination or route does not involve an out-of-line haul, and request is made in reasonable time, consignment and diversion on the basis of the through rate from point of origin to new destinations, with a fair charge for the extra services performed and reasonable practices, and the denial thereof is unreasonable and unlawful. Central Commercial

C. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 27 I. C. C. 114, 116.

(j) But there is no right inherent with the shipper to demand that any transfer resulting from the reconsignment at his request of freight originally consigned and billed to a given destination, shall be performed by the carrier, either at its own expense or otherwise; nor is there any provision of law under which a carrier may be compelled to possess itself of special equipment in such amount that a considerable portion of it would remain idle for six months in the year. C. & N. W. Ry., Reconsignment Rules, 29 I. C. C. 620, 624.

(l) In no case has the Commission condemned reconsignment as a service. The abuse and not the reasonable use of the practice has been the subject of criticism. If granted, subject to such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent the abuses to which the practice is susceptible, and conditioned upon the payment of a reasonable charge for the additional labor, cost, and liability which the service imposes upon the carriers, there appear to be no substantial reasons for apprehension that a modification of the present rules of the carriers to the extent of permitting reconsignment on basis of the through rate will be attended with injurious results. Reconsignment prevails throughout the greater portion of the United States, and although many carriers have failed to confine the practice within proper bounds, or to make a charge for the service, it has not produced the disastrous effects which some professed to believe would follow the adoption of a more liberal policy in this regard. These facts tend to strengthen the conclusion that reconsignment within reasonable limits is of benefit to the public and not without its advantages to the carriers. The specific objections that reconsignment tends to congestion of trackage facilities and excessive detention of cars at reconsignment points have been considered in other cases. It is only necessary to repeat that these evils may be obviated and that the advantages of reconsignment should not be thrown away in order to avoid abuses which may be controlled by remedies more appropriate to the end sought to be attained. Doran & Co. v. N. C. & St. L. Ry., 33 I. C. C. 523, 528.

(m) The Commission has held that a tariff rule limiting shipments to one reconsignment at the through rate is not unreasonable. Texas State Highway Department v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 252, 253.

II. DISCRIMINATION

See Discrimination.

§2. In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Although shippers cannot compel carriers to stop a commodity in transit for treatment or reconsignment, the carriers in granting such a privilege must not discriminate. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 90.

(b) The services of defendants in handling reconsigned hay at and from East St. Louis is more expensive as a general rule, if not invariably, than the service performed in case of shipments through East St. Louis, while the privilege of reconsigning hay from that point at a charge less than the established local rate is of substantial value to dealers in that city. HELD, 1. The fact that through rates are less than the sum of in and out rates is not of itself a valid ground for objection, nor is it unlawful for defendants to maintain reconsignment rates which are higher in some cases than their proportions of through rates. 2. The fact that the reconsignment rate is sometimes the same as the proportion of the through rate does not warrant an inference of illegal conduct or support a charge of unjust discrimination. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Illinois Co. et al, 11 I. C. C. 486.

(c) The fact that the reconsignment rate is sometimes the same as the proportion of the through rate does not warrant an inference of illegal conduct, or support a charge of unjust discrimination. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 486.

(d) On complaint that defendants reconsigning charges of $2 per car on grain shipped to Kansas City, and from Kansas City to other markets, is unreasonable and unjust, as compared with reconsigning practices at St. Louis, Minneapolis, and Chicago, it appeared that the cars are held by the carriers bringing grain into Kansas City on their "hold tracks" for inspection, sale, and reconsignment order, with forty-eight hours free time before demurrage accrues; that this involves additional service, labor and expense to the carriers and is a valuable privilege to Kansas City dealers, involving also withholding cars from other shipments for the time so detained; that this charge is absorbed by the carrier when reconsigned over its own line, and by other carriers when reconsigned over their lines, when the destination is a competitive point with another line from Kansas City, except by the defendant, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, which makes no distinction as between competitive and noncompetitive destinations; that when the grain is milled or consumed in Kansas City the billing is used by shippers to claim absorption of the charge on some other car that does go forward from Kansas City; that any reconsignment charge not absorbed by the carrier is charged back, by the Kansas City dealer, against the country shipper of the grain; that some roads do make a reconsignment charge at St. Louis and Chicago, and that at Minneapolis a charge of $2 per car, called a "running through charge," is assessed when a car is set at an elevator or a mill and is ordered to another destination without being unloaded. Upon the whole record, HELD, that the reconsignment privilege is apparently wholly in the interest of the grain dealers and of Kansas City as a market, and that the reconsignment charge of $2 per car as applied by defendants is not excessive, unjust or discriminatory. Board of Trade, Kansas City, Mo. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 173.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) Granting a free reconsignment privilege to competitors at another station may constitute undue prejudice. American Hay Co. v. L. V. R. R. Co., 21 I. C. C. 166, 169.

(f) A reconsignment privilege whereby the application of the joint rate is secured is not one to be demanded by the public as a matter of right, but is a concession voluntarily granted by the carriers, but its application must be uniform. Dietz Lumber Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 22 I. C. C. 75, 76.

(g) So long as the handling of order-notify shipments held for surrender of the bill of lading or of shipments placed for inspection is, to all practical intents and purposes, identical with that of other shipments held and reconsigned within switching limits before placement, dissimilarity of service can not be invoked to justify the application of different rules and charges. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 390.

(h) To accord to order-notify shippers a free transportation service that is not required by most others and that is so nearly akin to reconsignment, for which latter service a charge is made, would be an undue preference to that particular class of shippers and traffic. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 391.

(i) Negligence can not be imputed to carrier's agent for failure to divert a shipment before arrival at originally billed destination where only information shown in reconsignment order was car number and initial and that car was in transit to shipper at original destination. Shipper failed to give point of origin, route of movement, commodity, or other information, and made no request to protect the through rate. Facts sufficient to justify agent in holding the order until arrival of the car and executing the instructions of the shipper at that time. Reeves Coal & Dock Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 469.

III. REASONABLENESS OF CHARGES.

See Reasonableness of Rates.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Defendants' rates on reconsignment of hay from warehouses in East St. Louis to points south of the Ohio river, amounting to 2 cents more than their proportional rate from East St. Louis on through shipments, are unjust and unreasonable. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 90.

(aa) In allowing the privilege of reconsigning hay from East St. Louis to Southern destinations, the defendants are entitled to charge for such privilege what it actually costs them. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 90.

(ab) Complainant attacked as unreasonable and unjustly discriminatory proportional rates on hay to southeastern points 2c above the rate from the Ohio river when the shipment is made directly through East St. Louis, but if the hay is reconsigned at East St. Louis the charge is 4c above the Ohio river rate. In allowing the privilege of reconsigning hay at East St. Louis to southern destinations, defendants are entitled to charge for such privilege what it actually costs them; and the fair average cost to the carrier when complainant or others handle the hay through warehouses at East St. Louis, over and above the cost of handling in East St. Louis a through shipment via East St. Louis to southern destinations, is $2 to $2.50 per car, or about 1c per 100 pounds. Shipments routed through East St. Louis are carried from that point to southern destinations at a proportional rate, which is 2c above the rate from Ohio river crossings to the same destinations. Hay reconsigned to such points from warehouses in East St. Louis is charged 4c above the Ohio river rate. Hay appears to be reconsigned from warehouses at Ohio river points, and at Nashville and Memphis, to southern points without additional charge. HELD, that defendant's rates on reconsignments of hay from warehouses in East St. Louis to points south of the Ohio river, amounting to 2c more than their proportional rate from East St. Louis on through shipments, are unjust and unreasonable, complaint entitled to reparation. St. Louis Hay & Grain Company v. M. & O. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 90.

(b) In allowing the privilege of reconsigning hay from East St. Louis to southern destination, the defendants are entitled to charge for such privilege what it actually costs them. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 90.

(c) The fact that the reconsignment rate is sometimes the same as the proportion of the through rate does not warrant an inference of illegal conduct, or support a charge of unjust discrimination. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 486.

(ca) Privilege of reconsigning grain at Kansas City for which a charge of $2 per car is made, which is absorbed by the carrier when reconsigned over its own line, and by all roads but one when reconsigned to a competitive point with another line from Kansas City, any charge not so absorbed being charged back by the Kansas City dealer against the country shipper, as compared with reconsigning practices at St. Louis, Minneapolis and Chicago, held to be apparently wholly in the interest of the grain dealers and of Kansas City as a market, and the charge, therefor not excessive, unjust or discriminatory. Board of Trade of Kansas City v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 171.

(cb) Reconsignment charge of $2 per car held reasonable as compared with reconsigning practices at St. Louis, Minneapolis and Chicago. Board of Trade of Kansas City v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 173.

(d) Complainant attacked as unreasonable and unjust defendants reconsigning charge of $2 per car on grain shipped to Kansas City, Mo., and from Kansas City to other markets, as compared with reconsigning practices at St. Louis, Minneapolis and Chicago. It appears that the cars are held by the carriers bringing grain into Kansas City on their "hold tracks" for inspection, sale, and reconsignment order, with forty-eight hours free time before demurrage accrues; that this involves additional service, labor and expense to the carriers and is a valuable privilege to Kansas City dealers, involving also withholding cars from other shipments for the time so detained; that this charge is absorbed by the carrier when reconsigned over its own line, and by other carriers when reconsigned over their lines, when the destination is a competitive point with another line from Kansas City; that when the grain is milled or consumed at Kansas City the billing is used by shippers to claim absorption of the charge on some other car that does go forward from Kansas City; that any reconsignment charge not absorbed by the carrier is charged back by the Kansas City dealer, against the country shipper of the grain; that some roads do make a reconsignment charge at St. Louis and Chicago, and that at Minneapolis a charge of $2 per car, called a "running through charge" is assessed when a car is set at an elevator or a mill and is ordered to another destination without being unloaded. HELD, the reconsignment privilege is apparently wholly in the interest of the grain dealers and of Kansas City as a market, and that the reconsignment charge of $2 per car is not excessive, unjust or discriminatory, complaint dismissed. Board of Trade of Kansas City v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 12 I. C. C. 173.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) The reconsignment privilege involves extra labor in handling and in clerical work on the part of the carrier, and it is an established principle that the carrier is entitled to repayment of the cost of the service, together with a reasonable profit on that cost. On the other hand, while reconsignment may be granted or withheld at the option of the carrier, when the privilege is voluntarily granted it must be on terms that are reasonable and that do not result in undue discrimination. The first question to be considered in this proceeding is whether the reconsignment charge imposed at Detroit is unreasonable. It may be remarked that the fact of $2 being fixed upon as the charge throughout the greater part of the country raises at least a presumption that this rate covers not only the cost of the service, but a reasonable profit as well. This being so, there is a stronger presumption that the charge of $3 at Detroit is unreasonable unless the local conditions are such as to justify a higher rate there than at other places. Detroit Traffic Ass'n v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 257, 262.

(f) So it has been said that the privilege of trying the market is of great benefit to the producer of live stock, and ought to be continued under reasonable terms and conditions, but as these markets multiply it becomes more and more evident that carriers may with propriety impose a reasonable charge for the performance of the service granted in connection with transit privileges. Investigation of Alleged Unreasonable Rates on Meats, 22 I. C. C. 160, 174.

(g) A rule providing that when the original destination is not out of the direct route of the ultimate destination and the published rate of freight from the point of origin to the original destination is higher than the published rate of freight from the point of origin to the ultimate destination, reconsignment will be made at a charge of $2 per car in addition to the published tariff rate in effect from the point of origin to the original destination, is reasonable. Atlas Coal & Coke Co. v. Penn. R. R., 36 I. C. C. 239.

(h) Reconsignment as a special service, warrants a proper charge in addition to the rate. Reconsignment Case, 47 I. C. C. 590, 630.

(i) If the cost of the service were the controlling factor, it would also be necessary to weigh carefully certain differences in comparison with the service afforded in the case of ordinary diversion or reconsignment, for there is comparatively little of the tracing, letter writing, telegraphing, long distance telephoning and clerical labor upon which so much stress was laid in the Reconsignment case; cars are seldom handled individually, but are moved as a rule in large numbers at the same time. In Minnesota, where so much of the sampling is done at outside points, the cost is brought within still lower limits; and the practice is in certain respects of definite financial advantage to the carriers themselves. However, as the Commission views it, an extended analysis of this phase of the matter is unnecessary, even if it were practicable, since the service is primarily one which by long continued general custom and usage has been treated as covered by the line haul rate. Reconsignment Case No. 3, 53 I. C. C. 455, 469.

(j) One of the conditions precedent to the reconsignment privilege is that the contents of the car should remain unchanged. The David Kaufman & Sons Co. v. C. R. R. of N. J., 55 I. C. C. 268, 270.

(k) Where contents of car remain unchanged, change of destination or route does not necessitate an out-of-line-haul, and request is made in a reasonable time, reconsignment and diversion on basis of through rate from point of origin to new destination, with a fair charge for extra service performed, are reasonable practices. Denial thereof is unreasonable and unlawful and the Commission has power to require their establishment. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 461, 463.

(l) If some reconsignment service has been and is included in the line haul rates, as contended by shippers ,it does not follow that reconsignment as now practiced is included. In other words, the line of demarcation between those that may have been included when the rates were established and the reconsignment service now rendered is not shown. Reconsignment and diversion rules, 58 I. C. C. 568, 580.

(m) An ordinary reconsignment within or beyond switching limits is not a necessary incident of transportation and only occurs on a minority of shipments. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 390.

(n) To accord to order-notify shippers a free transportation service that is not required by most others and that is so nearly akin to reconsignment, for which latter service a charge is made, would be an undue preference to that particular class of shippers and traffic. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 391.

(o) In exercising emergency powers under section 1 of the act, the Commission authorized the publication of special rules and charges to reduce the promiscuous reconsignment of cars which tended to reduce the available car supply. After emergency had passed such rules and charges were promptly cancelled. HELD, establishment thereof was fully justified even though instances might be shown in which they failed of their intended purpose and carriers should not be required to respond in damages for increased charges arising thereunder. Omaha Chamber of Commerce v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 62 I. C. C. 655.

(p) Commission approves a tariff providing that if a car has been placed for unloading at the original billed destination, and is reforwarded therefrom without being unloaded, it will be subject to the published rates to and from the point of reconsignment, plus $5 reconsignment charge. Silica Sand Producers Ass'n v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 63 I. C. C. 217, 218.

(q) Generally speaking, a carrier is not an insurer of its ability to change the destination of a shipment. It is only required to exercise due diligence in following or transmitting such instructions. In the instant case it appeared the request for diversion could not be complied with owing to shipments having left the originating carrier's rails. The request was transmitted to connecting carriers but due to the rapid movement of shipments, which were forwarded under special orders of the government, shipments had also left connecting carriers' rails and arrived at originally billed destination whence they were reconsigned. HELD, since the tariff of originating carrier only provided for transmission of such request to direct connection and connecting lines exercised due diligence in endeavoring to intercept shipments for diversion, charges to and from reconsignment point assessed found not unreasonable or unlawful. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 64 I. C. C. 667.

(r) The contention that carrier having established through rates and provided for reconsignment it was unlawful to assess penalty charges upon shipments held on account of embargoes, notwithstanding tariff provisions to the effect that reconsignment orders would not be accepted to a point against which an embargo was in force at the time the shipment was forwarded from point of origin, not sustained. American Wholesale Lumber Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 393, 398.

(ra) Reconsignment rules are usually more liberal on fruit and vegetables than on dead freight Texas State Highway Dept. v. Director General, as Agent, 69 I. C. C. 252, 253.

(s) Charges on shipments reconsigned from Angora to Paschal and Fifty-second street, within the corporate limits of Philadelphia, Pa., assessed under a tariff rule which provided that cars placed and reforwarded, without being unloaded, to points outside switching limits would be subject to rate from point of reshipment plus reconsignment charges, found unreasonable to extent they exceeded charges based upon a rule which provided that such shipments forwarded to points within switching limits would not be subject to reconsignment charges but would be subject to switching or local rate in addition to rate from point of origin to billed destination. Reparation awarded. Newton Coal Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 33.

(t) Tariff authorized diversion or reconsignment at joint rates but provided that such orders would not be accepted to embargoed points except under authorized permits. Delivering line declined to issue permits to divert en route, but shipments were permitted to move to embargoed points by being first billed to an open destination on its line and then rebilled therefrom under permits, for which combination rates were assessed. HELD, purpose of embargo defeated and permits issued negatived prohibition against diversion or reconsignment to embargoed points. The legal rates were thus the joint rates to final destination, plus diversion or reconsignment charges. Reparation awarded. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 275.

(u) Proposal of the Missouri Pacific to reduce its charges for reconsigning lumber and other forest products at Dupo, Ill., when reconsignment instructions are received after arrival of the car, thereby making the charge the same as when instructions are received before such arrival, found not justified. Similar proposals were found not justified in 66 I. C. C. 393 and 68 I. C. C. 161. Futhermore, uniform reconsigning charges approved in the Reconsignment Case, 47 I. C. C. 590, are in effect throughout the country except in instance herein complained of. Reconsignment of Lumber at Dupo, Ill., 73 I. C. C. 404.

(v) Tariff provided for reconsignment charge of $2.50 per car if order received in time to permit instructions to be given yard employees prior to arrival of shipment at billed destination, with higher charge when such instruction not so received. Shipper gave reconsignment instructions complying with such rule but carrier delayed transmission of the order. HELD, higher charge assessed found inapplicable and reparation awarded. Independent Elevator Co. v. M., St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C. 521.

(w) Complainant attacked diversion and reconsignment rules applicable on hay and straw as unreasonable and unduly prejudicial. The rules provide in substance for but one reconsignment at the through rate, and for a subsequent movement of the car the assessment of a charge of $7 in addition to the combination of rates to and from the point of the subsequent diversion and reconsignment. Kansas City is the largest hay market in the world. Upon arrival the cars are switched to public team tracks and part of the cars are unloaded and placed alongside the car to permit inspection. Hay is not officially inspected and graded, as is grain, and, while apparently there are standard rules governing its inspection and grading, each car of hay is sold as the result of bargaining between the producer and the buyer upon inspection. Following the sale, the bales that have been unloaded are replaced in the car and the commission merchant gives the buyer a memo directing the carrier to deliver possession. This ends the transaction so far as the producer and commission merchant are concerned. The buyer then secures a customer and issues appropriate shipping instruction to the carrier. The inspection at Kansas City as outlined is not a diversion or reconsignment. The record here made is not sufficient to reverse the findings in 47 I. C. C. 590. HELD, rates attacked not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful, complaint dismissed. Kansas City Hay Dealers Asso. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 74 I. C. C. 352.

(x) Tariff rule governing reconsignment for export shipments consigned locally to New Orleans, La., provided that notice of desire to export be given carrier within 48 hours after arrival at the port, otherwise, local rates and demurrage rules apply. Complainant gave such notice within free time but not within 48 hours as provided by the rule. HELD, demurrage charges collected and rule assailed found not unreasonable or discriminatory. A similar rule is in effect on lines of various carriers serving other ports and it can not be condemned as unreasonable merely because it is not published by all carriers serving New Orleans. Foxley Stave & Lumber Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 43.

(y) Rules providing for one diversion or reconsignment at the through rate of c. l. shipments of hay and straw, and for a reconsignment charge of $7 in addition to combination of rates to and from the point of subsequent diversion or reconsignment, found not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful. Kansas City Hay Dealers v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 352.

(z) Diversion requested "with understanding that it be not made unless through rate could be protected." Charges assessed at applicable rate. HELD, failure of carrier to comply with condition attached to diversion order does not constitute violation of the act. Every shipper is bound to take notice of terms and conditions of tariffs governing his shipments. Northwestern Traffic & Service Bureau v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 81.

§3½. Duty of Carrier to Afford.

(a) Carrier or carriers' agent acting as forwarding or reconsigning agent for shipper for purpose of evading or defeating the terms or purposes of the law, or in such manner as to defeat or evade the intent of the law, an unlawful device. Morgan v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 525.

(b) Agents of carriers may not reconsign for shipper. Morgan v. M. K. & T. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 525.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) A provision that a carrier will make reasonable efforts to stop cars on its line and forward to new destination, but will not be responsible in case of failure on the part of any of its employees to make such reconsignment, is both insufficient and unreasonable. It affords the widest opportunity for unjust discrimination between shippers and represents an attempt to evade responsibility which the law requires to be assumed. Reeves Coal v. P. M. R. R. 34 I. C. C. 621, 622.

(d) Less-than-carload shipments generally are not subject to diversion en route. Strobel Co. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 38 I. C. C. 707, 708.

(e) Reconsigning services should be performed by the carriers in connection with their transportation services, and a charge for the service, in addition to the freight rate, based upon cost and including a reasonable profit is proper. Reconsignment Case, 47 I. C. C. 590, 613.

(f) Under modern practice the owner of goods may usually direct the carrier to stop his goods in transit; he may then reconsign them to another consignee; take delivery of them at a point intermediate to the original destination: order them diverted to a different destination, or returned to the original point of shipment. Such control over their property during transportation is freely exercised by shippers in this country and where regularly done in accordance with commercial customs and practices, is customarily provided for by carriers in their tariffs. Sometimes the service is included in the stated rate or charge for transportation, in other instances an additional charge is made. Bills of Lading, 52 I. C. C. 671, 704.

(g) The Commission has repeatedly said that where the contents of the car remain unchanged, where the change of destination or route does not necessitate an out of line haul, and request is made in reasonable time, reconsignment and diversion on the basis of the through rate from point of origin to new destination, with a fair charge for the extra service performed, are reasonable practices; that denial thereof is unreasonable and unlawful and that the Commission has power to require their establishment. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 461, 463.

(h) There is no right inherent with the shipper to demand that any transfer resulting from the reconsignment at his request of freight originally consigned and billed to a given destination shall be performed by the carrier, either at its own expense or otherwise. William Schuette v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 709, 712.

(i) Shippers are entitled, under the Act to Regulate Commerce, to use any through route available under the tariffs. If the tariffs are so worded that routes other than a direct route are possible, such routes should be available alike to all shippers whether availed of under a reconsignment order or upon original billing. The through rate applicable via such route should be assessed against all shipments of the same kind of freight regardless of whether the shipment traveled the particular route because of a reconsignment order or under original billing. The haul for which this rate is assessed in the one instance is identical with that in the other. Reconsignment and Diversion Rules, 58 I. C. C. 568, 573.

(j) The rule under which carriers refuse to reconsign a car after arrival at original destination, to a point which at that time is open for freight, but which at the time shipment was made was embargoed, found unreasonable. The rule approved in the Reconsignment Case, 47 I. C. C. 590, which simply finds "no freight can be reconsigned or diverted . . . . . to a station or point of delivery against which an embargo has been placed," should be reestablished. Boston Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, as Agent, 59 I. C. C. 73, 75.

(k) So long as the handling of order notify shipments held for surrender of the bill of lading, or of shipments placed for inspection, is, to all practical intents and purposes, identical with that of other shipments held and reconsigned within switching limits before placement, dissimilarity of service can not be invoked to justify the application of different rules and charges. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 390.

(l) The holding of order-notify shipments at destination for surrender of the bill of lading before placement properly is, always has been, and necessarily will continue to be inseparable from the transportation of every shipment consigned to the shipper's order. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 390, 391.

(m) To accord to order-notify shippers a free transportation service that is not required by most others and that is so nearly akin to reconsignment, for which latter service a charge is made, would be an undue preference to that particular class of shippers and traffic. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 391.

(n) Reconsignment rules are usually more liberal on fruit and vegetables than on dead freight. Texas State Highway Department v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 252, 253.

(o) Three separate l. c. l. shipments loaded in one car were billed to three consignees at two destinations, and three separate bills of lading and three separate freight bills were issued. Failure of carriers, after shipment left point of origin, to divert to one of the consignees as a c. l. shipment, or to provide by rule for such diversion, found not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful. Consolidated Rendering Co. v. B. & M. R. R., 77 I. C. C. 101.

(p) By operating directions carrier prohibited diversion of cars to points off its line. Carrier at reconsignment point transferred lading to car of foreign line, assessing switching, demurrage, penalty, and transfer charges for this service. HELD, Carriers can not by operating instructions restrict equipment to their own rails when it results in additional expense to shippers when they publish rates to points on rails of other carriers and do not publish equipment restriction in tariff. Charges assessed at reconsignment point found unreasonable and unlawful and reparation awarded. Hixon Lumber Co. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 295.

IV. TARIFFS AND PUBLICATION.

See Tariffs.

§4. Necessity of Publishing.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) So a reconsignment privilege not filed with the Commission cannot afford a basis for reparation. Kile & Morgan Co. v. Deepwater Ry. Co., 15 I. C. C. 235, 238.

(b) Coal forwarded from Dell Rapids to Sioux Falls, S. Dak., under reconsigning order which provided that order was not to be executed unless lowest published rate from Roosevelt, Tenn., could be applied. Local rate collected. Complainant did not demand return of shipment to Dell Rapids without expense but accepted delivery. Act not violated. Reeves Coal Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 37 I. C. C. 707, 708.

(c) Carriers subject to the Act may not lawfully extend reconsignment without tariff authority. Kern & Sons v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 40 I. C. C. 552, 554.

(d) Reparation will not be awarded on the basis of a reconsignment privilege customarily extended by the carrier, but not duly published in its tariff. Sunderland Bros. Co. v. B. & O. S. W. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. 267.

§4½. Embargoed destination.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Carriers may provide in their tariffs that they will not reconsign to an embargoed point, in which event the responsibility for detention at a reconsigning point of a shipment ordered reconsigned to an embargoed point rests upon the shipper, who, under the published tariffs. assumes the responsibility of such detention when the shipment leaves point of origin. Brabston v. C. of G. Ry., 51 I. C. C. 459, 461.

(b) Reconsigning tariff providing that orders for diversion or reconsignment would not be accepted at or to a station or to a point of delivery against which an embargo was in force, or to a point of delivery against which an embargo was in force at the time that the shipment was forwarded from point of origin held to be sufficient authority under which to refuse reconsignment of car, inview of embargo which had been laid. Lowry Lumber Co. v. Director General, 58 I. C. C. 113, 118.

(c) When tariffs contain no restriction against reconsignment to embargoed points, demurrage charges may not be assessed for the car detention resulting therefrom. Krauss Bros. Lumber Co. v. Director General, 66 I. C. C. 637, 638.

(d) Complainant attacked rates charged on 13 carloads of oil well supplies shipped from eastern points to St. Louis, Mo., and Fort Worth and Dublin, Tex., and diverted on authorized permits to embargoed stations in the Texas oil fields, as illegal and unreasonable. No evidence was adduced in support of the allegation of unreasonableness. Embargoes were in force against the points of ultimate destinations and reconsignment tariffs stated that reconsigning instructions would not be accepted to embargoed points except under authorized permits. Permits were allowed but after shipments left point of origin and while they were in transit. HELD, Charge collected illegal to extent they exceeded through rate points of origin to destinations plus reconsigning, switching or other special Charges. reparation awarded. Frick-Reid Supply Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 151.

(e) The theory of reconsignment is that the shipment is one from point of origin to ultimate destination. Assuming in the case of a direct shipment that the car had started from point of origin before the embargo had been laid, all delays between point of origin and point of destination would be chargeable to the carrier and no demurrage would be assessable against the car; and the same would be true, except as provided by tariff, with respect to a diverted or reconsigned shipment. John E. Murray v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 477, 482.

(f) Tariff authorized diversion or reconsignment at joint rates, but provided that such orders would not be accepted to embargoed points except under authorized permits. Delivering line declined to issue permits to divert en route, but shipments were permitted to move to embargoed points by being first billed to an open destination on its line, and then rebilled therefrom under permits, for which combination rates were assessed. HELD, purpose of embargo defeated and permits issued negative prohibition against diversion or reconsignment to embargoed points. The legal rates were thus the joint rates to final destination, plus diversion or reconsignment charges. Reparation awarded. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 275.

(g) Under the tariffs in effect when the shipments moved there was no provision that the defendant would not reconsign to an embargoed point; the embargo was a disability of the defendant; the orders for reconsignment should have been accepted in accordance with its tariffs. American Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Georgia R. R., 80 I. C. C. 759, 760.

(h) Shipment moved under permit during existence of embargo. Prior to arrival at originally billed destination reconsignment requested and denied. Shipment arrived at originally billed destination where demurrage accrued and subsequently upon instructions from shipper, was forwarded to destination requested in reconsignment instructions. HELD, following Skilton case, 56 I. C. C. 251, and Wood case, 53 I. C. C. 183, demurrage charges, and combinations rates to extent they exceeded joint rate to ultimate destination, found illegal. Effective reconsignment tariff did not prohibit reconsignment to embargoed points and fact that shipment moved into embargoed territory under permit did not make tariff applicable. Reparation awarded. American Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. G. R. R., 80 I. C. C. 759.

§5. Construction in General

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) There is an ever-present temptation before the shipper to convert the reconsignment privilege into a means of indefinite storage. So long as the demurrage fees are paid, the consignee regards it as his right to delay reconsignment as long as he pleases. The privilege of reconsignment properly carries no such right. Not a little consideration has been given to this question of unnecessary detention and its relation to the shortage of cars that work such a hardship upon the shipping community generally, and it is not among dealers is coal alone that practices have grown up that do absolute injustice to other shippers. This question of detention, however, is one that must be worked out by itself, and it is not well that the advantages of reconsignment should be thrown away in order to avoid abuses that can be remedied in other ways. If the demurrage charge of $1 a day is not sufficient to eliminate the abuse of excessive and unreasonable detention the remedy lies in increasing the fee to an effective amount, not in the denial of a privilege that has elements of extreme value. Detroit Traffic Ass'n v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 257, 261.

(b) While reconsignment is as a general rule, associated with the application of a specific through rate, which is often less than the sum of the intermediate rates, in and out of the point of original destination, and largely derives its value from that fact, this rule is not without exception. Not infrequently shipments are reconsigned on basis of the sum of the local rates, under authority of tariffs which provide for reconsignment at the through rate, and this may be done without violation of such tariffs for the reason that no specific through rate from the point of origin to the new destination is in effect. The through rate in such cases is made by combining two or more rates instead of by the use of a single rate factor, but the reconsignment rules and charges apply to the same extent as if a specific thru rate were in force. Doran & Co. v. N. C. & St. L. Ry., 33 I. C. C. 523, 527.

(c) Where carriers hold themselves out to perform a reconsignment service after shipment is accepted for transportation at point of origin, the fact that reconsignment is refused and shipment is forwarded to destination from reconsigning point on new bill of lading, does not change its essential character as a through shipment. Nicols & Cox Lumber Co. v. N. Y. C. R. R., 51 I. C. C. 174, 176; Brabston v. C. of G. Ry., 51 I. C. C. 459, 461, 469.

(d) A contention that mere mailing of a reconsignment or diversion order, without regard to its delivery, was in law a compliance with requirements of governing tariffs, by the terms of which, only orders "received" sufficed not sustained. Wheeler v. Director General, 55 I. C. C. 149, 150.

(e) A proposed tariff rule governing reconsignment or diversion before and after placement, where back haul or out of line movements involved, found not justified in so far as it fails to provide for the exception covering shipments placed on public delivery tracks. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 388, 389.

(f) The right to reconsign depends entirely upon the construction of rules, which are required to be filed in the same manner as rates, and if the carriers do not restrict such rules to the extent of their capacity to perform the service, the shipper cannot be held liable for the detention of cars when it is not directly responsible for such detention, and can not abate the cause thereof, as in the case of an embargo, which is a disability of the carrier. Krauss Bros. Lumber Co. v. Director General, 66 I. C. C. 637, 639.

(g) Because of an accumulation of barges alongside vessel, delivery from car float to vessel could not be made. Cars were floated to float bridge adjacent to pier and thence moved along tracks and out upon the pier for delivery, for which service a class rate was assessed. HELD, extra movement to float bridge and beyond amounted to a reconsignment. Charges assessed found unreasonable to extent they exceeded those provided in a local switching tariff for similar movements to cold storage warehouses, plus a reconsignment charge. Reparation awarded. Armour & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 700.

(h) Tariff provided for reconsignment charge of $2.50 per car if order received in time to permit instructions to be given yard employees prior to arrival of shipment at billed destination, with higher charge when such instructions not so received. Shipper gave reconsignment instructions complying with such rule but carrier delayed transmission of the order. HELD, higher charge assessed found inapplicable and reparation awarded. Independent Elevator Co. v. M., St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C. 521.

(i) Diversion and reconsignment are governed by the rules of the carrier upon whose rails the diversion or reconsignment is effected. Kansas City Hay Dealers Asso. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry., 74 I. C. C. 352, 356.

(ia) Uniform reconsignment rule under which only one reconsignment may be made at through rates on carload shipments, approved by commission Reconsignment Case, 47 I. C. C., 590, found not unreasonable. Romann & Bush Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 159.

(ib) Car diverted by complainant, consignee, and subsequently reconsigned to itself at Chicago, Ill., where it maintained no office. Carrier mailed notices of arrival to complainant at Chicago and at point of origin. Contention that demurrage charges accruing at Chicago were unreasonable and in violation of tariff provisions, inasmuch as notice of arrival not received, not sustained. Carrier's duty was fully performed when it placed in mail notice properly addressed to consignee, and notices here given constituted full compliance with tariffs. Sullivan Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 393.

(j) Where a carrier's tariff, imposing a reconsignment charge on each car of coal reconsigned after it reached the city, required the carrier to notify the consignee when the cars passed certain points outside of the city, but the Interstate Commerce Commission had found that the giving of such notice was impracticable, and that the requirement of such notice as a condition precedent would have worked inequitably with discriminatory results, the notice was not a condition precedent to the recovery of the reconsignment charge, and such charge can be recovered, even though one railroad was both carrier and delivering railroad within the meaning of that tariff. New York Cent. Ry. Co. v. Calvert (Mich., 1923), 193 N. W. 295.

§5½. Notice.

See Notice.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Notice should be given consignees before arrival of cars at destination, and if disposition is not made, a charge of $2 per car for reconsignment should be assessed. Becker v. P. M. R. R. Co., 28 I. C. C. 645, 656.

(b) Reconsignment charges assessed on cars to which no notice was given prior to arrival of cars should be refunded. Becker v. P. M. R. R. Co., 28 I. C. C. 645, 659.

(c) Reason and common prudence would dictate that a shipper asking for diversion of a car in transit should give such information concerning it as will enable the carriers to determine not only the character of the shipment but also between what points it is moving, in order that they may form some idea of where it can be intercepted. Reeves Coal & Dock Co. v. Director General, 66 I. C. C. 469, 471.

§6. Retroactive Application.

See Facilities and Privileges §19.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The retroactive applicatoin of a reconsignment privilege cannot be sanctioned, even though the carrier's custom was to permit reconsignment without tariff authority. Cady Lumber Co. v. M. P. Ry. Co., 19 I. C. C. 12, 13.

(b) If the rate from point of origin to ultimate destination applies as of the date of shipment, so too, must the right of reconsignment speak as of the date of shipment, even if the order was given subsequently. Wood v. N. Y. P. & N. Ry., 53 I. C. C. 183, 184.

(ba) The commission has ruled informally that a reconsigning privilege can not be applied retroactively. Conf. Rulings 6 and 166. Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 388, 391.

(c) A reconsignment privilege will not be given retroactive effect unless necessary to correct an unjust discrimination. Menefee Bros. v. R. & W. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. 359.

(a) Complainant attacked as unreasonable and discriminatory the fact that on through shipments from points of origin to Memphis the carriers south of East St. Louis get 10c as their proportion of the through rate, which is exactly the same as their reconsignment rate, whereas on through shipments to Mobile and New Orleans the carriers south of East St. Louis accept 16c as their proportion of the through rate, while maintaining a reconsignment rate of 17½c. Complainant contended that when hay moves to Memphis the total charge is the same whether it is transported as a through shipment or carried locally to East St. Louis and there reconsigned while on hay to Mobile and New Orleans the through rate is 1½c less than the local rate to East St. Louis, plus the reconsignment rate from that point. The service of defendants in handling reconsigned hay at and from East St. Louis is more expensive as a general rule, if not invariably, than the services performed in case of shipments through East St. Louis, while the privilege of reconsigning hay from that point at a charge less than the established local rate is of substantial value to dealers n that city. HELD, the fact that through rates are less than the sum of in and out rates is not of itself a valid ground of objection, nor is it unlawful for defendants to maintain reconsignment rates which are higher in some cases than their proportions of through rates. The fact that the reconsignment rate is sometimes the same as the proportion of the through rate does not warrant an inference of illegal conduct or support a charge of unjust discrimination. St. Louis Hay & Grain Exchange v. I. C. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 486.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(aa) The through rate can not be protected where reconsignment is effected to a point not on a through route to which the rate applied or where a back hauls becomes necessary, except under special tariff provisions. Northern Brokerage Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 182, 183.

(b) Because of an embargo shipper authorized change in destination and ultimately reconsigned shipment to originally billed point. Shipper might have stood upon his right to have joint rate specified in original billing protected, but since he consented to the substitution of a different contract in the face of a warning that change in destination could not be made the effective means of diversion after arrival at new destination, he thereby assumed liability for the combination rates charged and legally applicable over route of movement. George Pottery Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 372.

(c) Reconsignment after placement on public team track at originally billed destination, shipment was refused by consignee and reconsigned. Joint rate in effect from point of origin to final destination but as tariff provision approved in several cases provided that if cars are placed at original billed destination, and is reforwarded therefrom without being unloaded, it will be subject to the published rates to and from point of reconsignment, combination rates charged found not unreasonable or unlawul. Silica Sand Producers Asso. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 63 I. C. C. 217.

(d) So in another case the request was received too late to accomplish diversion and the shipment arrived at original billed destination, where it was placed upon public delivery tracks. Refused by order notify consignee and subsequently reconsigned. HELD, fact that this was an order notify shipment did not preclude carrier from placing car for unloading prior to surrender of bill of lading in absence of instructions to the contrary, and as tariff provided that if a car was placed at original destination and reforwarded without being unloaded it would be subject to rates to and from reconsignment point, combination charged found not unreasonable or unlawful. Sullivan Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 119.

(e) The Commission has approved tariff rules applicable to the reconsignment of carload shipments of fruit and vegetable under which, when a car is stopped short of billed destination after it has had the benefit of such changes of destination as are permitted, transportation charges will be made on the basis of the rates to and from the point at which the last diversion or reconsignment was accomplished. Texas State Highway Department v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 252, 253.

(f) Complainant attacked rates charged on three carloads of lumber from Birmingham, Perrys Mill and Wetumka, Ala., to Canton, O., Detroit, Mich., and Dayton, O., as illegal and unreasonable. From Perrys Mills to Detroit shipment was billed to East St. Louis and reconsigned to Detroit moving via the C. of G., to Montgomery, L. & N., through Evansville to East St. Louis and Wabash beyond, charged 22c to East St. Louis and 12.6c beyond. The tariff nauing the rates was subject to the L. & N. reconsignment circular which authorized reconsignment after a car had reached billed destination at a charge of $5 per car on basis of through rate from point of origin to destination. The rates to and from Cairo of 15 and 14.7 cents made the lowest combination. The shipment from Wetumpka was billed to Herrick, Ill., routed L. & N., to St. Louis and T. St. L. & W. beyond. Because of an embargo against Herrick the car was reconsigned to East St. Louis over the Pan Handle to Dayton, charged 25 cents and 10.5 cents to and from East St. Louis. Tariff naming a through rate of 30 cents contained no routing restrictions and was governed by L. & N. reconsignment circular. HELD, Cairo combination rate of 27.7 cents was applicable from Perrys Mill to Detroit and 30 cents applicable from Weumpka to Dayton, reparation awarded. Baker Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 74 I. C. C. 489.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(g) When the assessment of a reconsigning charge results in greater aggregate compensation to the carrier than the sum of intermediate rates, it can not be considered that section 4 has thereby been violated for the services performed are not the same in the two instances. Romann & Bush v. Director General, 78 I. C. C. 159, 161.

(h) Complainants attacked rates charged on a carload of hard coal from Milwaukee, Wis., consigned to Vesta, Minn., diverted to Darfur, Minn., as unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, unduly prejudicial and unlawful. Shipment moved via C. & N. W. via Winona, and while shipment was at Sanborn, Minn., enroute to Vesta, the consignee requested it be diverted to Darfur, a point south of Sanborn, with the understanding that diversion should not be made unless the through rate could be protected. Charged at combination on Sanborn, plus diversion charge. A rate of $3.645 was contemporaneously in effect from Milwaukee to Darfur over defendant's line via Clinton, Iowa. Distance from Milwaukee to Darfur via Winona and Sanborn is 443 miles, via Clinton it is 546 miles. HELD, rate charged not unreasonable, complaint dismissed. Northwestern Traffic & Service Bureau v. C. & N. W. Ry., 80 I. C. C. 81.

(i) Diversion requested "with understanding that it be not made unless thru rate could be protected." Charges assessed at applicable combination rate. HELD, failure of carrier to comply with condition attached to diversion order does not constitute violation of the act. Every shipper is bound to take notice of terms and conditions of tariffs governing his shipments. Northwestern Traffic & Service Bureau v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 81.

(j) Complainant attacked rate charged on a carload of grapes from Fresno, Calif., to Chicago, Ill., reconsigned to Kansas City, Nov. 25, 1919, as illegal. Shipment moved via Santa Fe through Kansas City to Chicago, reconsigned and moved back over the same line of road to Kansas City, charged at the combination on Chicago. At time of movement the $1.44 commodity rate applied from Fresno to Kansas City, no routing instruction in the tariff naming the rate, the tariff of the Santa Fe permitting reconsignment at through published rate providing there is a published through rate via any route from point of origin through point of diversion to point of final destination. The through rate Fresno to Kansas City was not restricted to any particular routes and would have been applicable via the S. P., through El Paso, Tex., to New Orleans, thence I. C. to Chicago and any carrier party to the tariff beyond. HELD, shipment overcharged to extent it exceeded $1.44, reparation awarded. Ginocchio Jones Fruit Co. v. Director General, 81 I. C. C. 495.

(k) Reconsignment charges assessed on basis of those in effect on date of reconsignment found illegal to extent that they exceeded those effective on date of original shipment. Reparation awarded. Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 388.

(l) Shipments reconsigned become through shipments from original shipping points to final destinations, and applicable rates are those in effect for through movements as of dates of shipment from point of origin, whether joint or combination rates. Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Director General as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 388, 391.

(m) Contention that service of reconsignment and charge therefor are independent of line-haul service and rate, and should, as is demurrage, be controlled by tariffs in effect contemporaneously with performance of service, not sustained. Demurrage is in part penalty for detention of carriers' equipment and to be effective as such must be controlled by tariffs in effect contemporaneously with detention. Reconsignment, on other hand is a special service and in some respects is not unlike a transit arrangement, which the commission has repeatedly found to be determined as of date of origin of shipment. Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 388, 391.

§6½. Rules and Regulations.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) When new bills of lading are issued on reconsigned shipments they should not disclose to the ultimate consignee the name of the original consignor without the consent of the original consignee. Atwood & Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. 42 I. C. C. 385, 387.

(b) A provision in a tariff providing for reconsignment on basis of thru rate when "all the roads over which the shipment travels will join in protecting the through rate," found uncertain and unlawful. National Wholesole Lumber Dealers' Asso. v. L. & N. R. R., 46 I. C. C. 307, 308.

(c) A rule providing that if a request is made for the diversion or reconsignment of freight the carrier will make diligent effort to locate the shipment and effect the desired service, but will not be repsonsible for failure to do so unless such failure is due to negligence of its employees, justified. Reconsignment Case, 47 I. C. C. 590, 617.

(d) The proposed charge of local tariff rates for reforwarding to a point within the switching limits cars which have been placed for unloading but have not been unloaded, found justified. Reconsignment Case, 47 I. C. C. 590, 626.

(e) Experience should enable carriers and shippers to determine where to draw the line between ordinary and extraordinary delays. Reconsignment Case, 47 I. C. C. 590, 631.

(f) While a rule providing that an order designating delivery must be accompanied by the surrender of bill of lading or execution of suitable indemnity bond may be entirely reasonable as related to ordinary reconsignment, where new bill of lading is issued upon the surrender of original bill, there can not be any warrant in law for requiring surrender of a bill of lading unless carrier is able to make delivery of the freight covered by such bill. Reconsignment and Diversion Rules, 58 I. C. C. 568, 576.

(g) To the extent that car shortage brought about by improper detention through reconsignments the shipping public has a right to demand that the Commission prescribe and carriers observe such rules as shall insure the largest possible use of cars, and to this end some restraining rules respecting reconsignment are justifiable. Reconsignment and Diversion Rules, 58 I. C. C. 568, 580.

(h) A tariff rule providing that orders for diversion or reconsignment of commodities other than perishable freight, coal, coke, or fuel oil will not be accepted to a station or point of delivery against which an embargo was in force when the shipment left point of origin, disapproved. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 388.

(i) A tariff rule under which order-notify shipments placed for inspection upon request of consignees or in conformity with billing instructions, and which require subsequent movements, are subject to the same rule and charges as "straight" consignments placed for inspection, found justifid. Diversion and Reconsignment Rules, 61 I. C. C. 385, 389.

(j) Diversion and reconsignment are governed by the rules of the carriers upon whose rails the diversion or reconsignment is effected. Kansas City Hay Dealers v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 356.

(k) Complainant alleged that the uniform reconsignment rule under which only one reconsignment may be made at the through rataes on carload shipments is unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory and in violation of section 4. Shipments involved, one car of smithing coal originally consigned June 16, 1919, from Douglas, W. Va., to Benton, Ill., reconsigned first to Tulia, Tex., and then to Clifton, Ariz. Shipment moved via W. M. to Elkins, W. Va., B. & O., to Salem, Ill., C. & E. I. to Benton, reconsigned to Tulia via I. C. to New Orleans, G. C. L., to Beaumont, Tex., and Santa Fe. Shipment was refused and consignor ordered it forwarded to Clifton, via Santa Fe, Armillo, Tex., Rock Island to El Paso, E. P. & S. W. to Hatichita, N. W., and A. & N. M. beyond. Combination of locals was assessed plus $2 and $5 for reconsignments at Benton and Tulia. The complainant does not attack the reasonableness of the applicable rates, but is founded solely on the alleged unreasonable application of the rates under the reconsignment rule. HELD, rule attacked not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful, overcharge ordered refunded. Romann & Bush Co. v. Director General, 78 I. C. C. 159.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) So damages, including demurrage charges, will be awarded where complainant was deprived of a reconsignment privilege through misrouting of carrier. Beekman Lumber Co. v. L. Ry. & N. Co., 25 I. C. C. 171, 173.

(b) Reparation may be awarded for damages caused by failure of a carrier to cancel reconsigning instructions. Pemeroy & Co. v. Wabash R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. 8.

(c) Through an error of the carrier's agent by not knowing the correct rate when the consignor asked for the shipment to be diverted in transit, the complainant is entitled to reparation. Welisch & Co. v. St. L. S. W. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. A-423.

§8. Parties to Complaint.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Commission cannot enter an order respecting privileges at New Orleans on rice shipped from New Orleans to Houston, where the initial carriers on whose lines the reconsigning privileges are asked are not made parties. §9. Jurisdiction of Commission.

See Jurisdiction of Commission; Interstate Commerce Commission I.

(a) The fact that the property and affairs of a carrier have been placed by a United States court in the hands of a receiver, does not affect the jurisdiction of this Commission under a complaint charging such carrier with violations of the Act. Board of Trade of Troy, Ala. v. A. M. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 348, 351.

(b) When a carload of hay destined to East St. Louis, Ill., is delivered by the carrier at a warehouse designated by the shipper or consignee prior to arrival in that city, or to the proper switching road, or is placed upon the team track of the carrier if no specific delivery is named, the car has been properly delivered, and the carrier may insist that the consignee shall accept such delivery; and in case the consignee intercepts and sells the carload while upon a hold track, after arrival at East St. Louis but before such delivery, he thereby accepts delivery. If the consignee, instead of removing the hay from the car so delivered, sells it to complainant, and a carrier, upon an order of the original consignee or of complainant, moves the car to complainant's storehouse in East St. Louis, that is a new and independent service on reconsignment performed entirely within the state of Illinois, of which this Commission has no jurisdiction; but it is considered that Congress might, directly or through the Commission, require that shippers should be allowed a certain time after arrival in East St. Louis to designate the point of delivery for interstate shipments, and that such delivery be made accordingly. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 82.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) The Commission has jurisdiction under section 15 of the Act as amended in 1906 to require reasonable reconsignment charges. Central Commercial Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 27 I. C. C. 114, 116.

(d) Reconsignment is, under the Act, a service which the carrier may be properly expected to furnish. Becker v. P. M. R. R. Co., 28 I. C. C. 645, 655.

(e) In exercising emergency powers under section 1 of the act, the Commission authorized the publication of special rules and charges to reduce the promiscuous reconsignment of cars which tended to reduce the available car supply. After emergency had passed such rules and charges were promptly cancelled. HELD, establishment thereof was fully justified even though instances might be shown in which they failed of their intended purpose and carriers should not be required to respond in damages for increased charges arising thereunder. Omaha Chamber of Commerce v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 62 I. C. C. 655.

(f) Shipment consigned to intrastate destination, order of shipper notify complainant. Before actual movement complainant sold shipment to another party, who did not take delivery at originally billed destination but reconsigned to destination in other State. Contention that initial movement was intrastate and therefore not within jurisdiction of commission, not sustained. Change of ownership en route did not affect through interstate movement of shipment. Mid-Continent Equip. & Mach. Co. v. M. S. R. R. Co., 83 I. C. C. 393, 394, 395, 396.

ALL OTHER CITATIONS

§10. Damages and Reparation.

See Damages; Reparation.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) In allowing the privilege of reconsigning hay at East St. Louis to southern destinations, defendants are entitled to charge for such privilege what it actually costs them; and the fair average cost to the carrier when complainant or other handle the hay through warehouses at East St. Louis, over and above the cost of handling in East St. Louis a through shipment via East St. Louis to southern destinations, is $2 to $2.50 per car, or approximately 1c per 100 pounds. Shipments routed through East St. Louis are carried from that point to southern destinations at a proportional rate, which is 2c per 100 lbs. above the rates from Ohio river crossings to the same destinations. Hay reconsigned to such points from warehouses in East St. Louis is charged 4c per 100 lbs. above the Ohio river rate. Hay appears to be reconsigned from warehouses at Ohio river points, and at Nashville and Memphis to southern points without additional charge. HELD, upon all the facts, that defendants' rates on reconsignments of hay from warehouses in East St. Louis to points south of the Ohio river, amounting to 2 cents more than their proportional rate from East St. Louis on through shipments, are unjust and unreasonable, and that complainant is entitled to reparation. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., et al., 11 I. C. C. 90.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Where a reasonable rate is prescribed for a transportation service, reparation will not be awarded to the basis of that rate on shipments which have been diverted or reconsigned, but there will be taken into consideration a reasonable maximum charge for the additional service performed. Advance Lumber Co. v. S. A. L. Ry., 51 I. C. C. 149, 150.

(c) The failure of defendant to comply with a condition attached to the diversion order does not constitute a violation of the act, when such condition is to the effect that car should be diverted if through rate could be protected. Northwestern Traffic & Service Bureau v. C. & N. W. Ry., 80 I. C. C. 81, 82.

§1. Jurisdiction of Commission.

See Jurisdiction of Commission; Interstate Commerce Commission.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The Interstate Commerce Commission may determine in respect to the past what was reasonable and just, but as to rates found to be unreasonable, unjust, and unlawful, can make no provision or order for their reduction which the courts are required to enforce or the carrier obliged to obey, except to notify the carrier to cease and desist from violation of the statute. Cary v. Eureka Springs R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 286.

(b) The Interstate Commerce Commission is not authorized to fix a reduced or lower rate of charges which the carriers can be required to respect in the future, even if the ascertained facts warrant a finding as to the extent of the reduction which should be made. Montell v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 412.

(c) Defendants' aggregate charge for the transportation of coal in carloads from Cumberland, Md., to North Garden, Va., and their respective divisions thereof, found excessive in comparison with rates charged by defendants and other carriers to various points; but the Commission is not authorized to fix a reduced or lower rate of charges which carriers can be required to respect in the future, even if the ascertained facts warranted a finding as to the extent of the reduction which should be made. Montell v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 412.

(d) Although railroad companies which carry grain to only one of two competing cities may, by a reduction of the rates charged by them, prevent the correction of an unjust relation of rates in favor of such city, it is the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to condemn the existing relation of rates if it believes it to be unjust, and indicate the basis on which the rate should be readjusted. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 481.

(da) The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to make a reduction in rates only when, upon complaint made, it is of the opinion that such rates are unjust, or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential. Dallas Freight Bureau v. M. K. & T. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 427.

(e) The Commission is authorized under the act to order a reduction in rates only when upon complaint made it is of the opinion that such rates are unjust, or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential. Complainants must therefore prove the issues that they raise by competent testimony or make out a prima facie case sufficiently clear and strong as to require the Commission in the public interest to enter upon an investigation of its own to ascertain the merits of the complaint. Neither of these requirements is satified by a comparison, without any other showing, of the rates complained of, from St. Louis to Dallas, with rates between points in other and distant localities where different physical, competitive, and traffic conditions exist. Dallas Freight Bureau v. Mo., Kans. & Tex. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 428, 433.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(f) It is within the power of the Commission to end a discrimination as between points of origin by a reduction in the rate from a certain point that is discriminated against. Scott Paper Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 601, 603.

(g) Even before the passage of the Elkins act the Commission was empowered to issue a general order requiring the publication of payments by a carrier to a shipper which indirectly had the effect of reducing the transportation charges. Rates on Railroad Fuel and Other Coal, 36 I. C. C. 1, 14.

(h) Objection by state commission to introduction of evidence relating to intrastate rates on stone and gravel when for use in construction of public highways and consigned to federal, state, county or municipal authorities or their agents, on ground that no order affecting such rates could be made by the Commission because of provision of section 22 of the act, HELD, such a construction of section 22 would make it mandatory on carriers to maintain lower rates on such traffic; that section has been construed as being permissive in character; and in granting such reduced rates carriers must not violate sections 2 and 3 of the act. Tennessee Rates and Charges, 63 I. C. C. 160, 172.

(i) Contention that as proposed rates represent reductions, there is no burden upon carrier to justify them, and that in absence of affirmative showing by protestants that undue prejudice will result the Commission must permit them to become effective, not sustained.

following Grain and Flaxseed from Twin Cities, 78 I. C. C. 575. Reduced rates from New York, 81 I. C. C. 312.

(j) In proceedings involving general reduction in rates, the commission has to look to future and exercise its best judgment on record before it. Kansas Public Utilities Com. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 105, 114

Director General, 57 I. C. C. 152, 154; Roasted Coffee from Atlantic Seaboard, 83 I. C. C. 131.

§2. Power to Suspend.

See Interstate Commerce Commission.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Commission has power to suspend reductions in rates where the effect of such suspension will prevent an unjust discrimination, and a prima facie case is presented to justify the exercise that power. Board of Trade of Chicago v. I. C. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 545, 552.

(b) It may therefore be stated that the Commission is authorized under the act to order a reduction in rates only when it is made to appear that they are unjust, or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential. Complainants must, therefore, prove the issues that they raise by competent testimony or make out a prima facie case sufficiently clear and strong to require the Commission in the public interest to enter upon an investigation of its own to ascertain the merits of the complaint. §2½. In General.

(a) A railway company may from considerations of policy grant a reduction in its rates which this Commission could not order as a matter of right under the Act to Regulate Commerce. Holmes & Co. v. Southern R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 561.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) If it be true that the Commission may find existing rates unjust and unresonable, and require that they be reduced below what would be justified by standards heretofore recognized, because an industry is not prospering, then the converse must be true, that at times when the industry prospers the Commission may find justified rates higher than those which under accepted standards would be just and reasonable. The foundations of what is just and reasonable are not set on such shifting sands. National Live Stock Shippers' League v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 63 I. C. C. 107, 116.

(c) The Commission does not feel that particular reductions in rates should be encouraged during a period when it is considering the question of general reductions in rates, especially in view of the admissions and assertions that such proposed reductions, if allowed to become effective, would mark the beginning of a rate war between certain carriers. Reduced Rates on Coal to Kansas City, Mo., 66 I. C. C. 457, 467.

(d) To upset and seriously to menace a general structure lawfully established suffices to make proposed rates calculated to effect such a disruption unreasonable and unlawful. Trunk Line and Ex Lake Iron Ore Rates, 69 I. C. C. 589, 611.

(da) Where a suspicion that proposed reduced rates are noncompensatory is not satisfactorily refuted, even though proposed rates are not shown to be otherwise unlawful, power of the commission, under the law, is not so limited that it may not prevent rates from becoming effective. Import and Domestic Rates on Vegetable Oils, 78 I. C. C. 421, 427.

(e) In all proceedings involving reductions in rates, the Commission has to look to the future, and excercise its best judgment on the record before it.

§3. Charitable Institutions, Fairs or Emergency.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Missionaries may have reduced rates. Re Religious Teachers, 1 I. C. C. 21.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Clergymen acting as editors of officially recognized church papers, as college presidents or professors; as financial agents for a church, or other religious or charitable institutions, including educational institutions under church government; as workers in Christian Temperance of Y. M. C. A. work, and as brothers of religious orders, and sisters of charity devoting their entire time to religious work, who habitually wear a garb distinctive of their order, are not excluded from the privilege of receiving reduced-rate transportation. A clergyman does not lose his ministerial standing by reason of the fact that he leaves the pastorate for some other field of religious activity. Passes to Clergymen and Others, 15 I. C. C. 45, 46.

(c) A charitable institution, as the term bears upon the right of carriers to issue free transportation, is one which is administered in the public interest, and in which the element of private gain is wanting, and the definition includes hospitals, almshouses, orphanages, asylums and missionary societies. Such an institution does not necessarily lose its charitable character from the fact that it is under the management of a particular denomination or sect, or because a charge is collected from some or all of those who enjoy its privileges. It is only necessary that it be conducted in the public interest and not for private gain. In Re Passes to Clergymen and Others, 15 I. C. C. 45, 46.

(d) Where section 22 of the Act authorizes the free transportation of property to and from fairs and expositions, it does not require the carriers to grant such transportation. It follows that they may grant or deny it as they deem best, provided their practices in that respect do not result in unjust discrimination under section 2, or undue preferences or prejudices under section 3 of the Act. Dairymen's Supply Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 28 I. C. C. 406, 408.

(e) While the Act authorizes the free transportation of property for exhibition purposes, it does not require the carriers to grant such transportation. Dairymen's Supply Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 28 I. C. C. 406, 408.

(f) In regard to carriage, storage or handling of property free or at reduced rates to and from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, carriers may grant or deny free transportation provided unjust discrimination under section 2 or undue preference or prejudice under section 3 does not result. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. A-797.

(g) Upon complaint seeking a reduction of 50 per cent in the rates on cotton-seed products, hay, grain, and other feedstuff for cattle from points in Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Colorado and Kansas, and from points in Texas over interstate routes, to afford relief to drought-stricken points in Western Texas, such rates to expire by limitation. HELD, present rates are not unreasonably high, per se, nor under normal conditions and the freight rate factor is a comparatively small item in the total cost of stock feed laid down in Western Texas. American National Live Stock Asso. v. S. P. Co., 74 I. C. C. 760.

(a) A carrier may make special rates with individuals to enable the latter to make proposals to the Interior Department for transportation of Indian supplies, such transportation being for the United States. Re Indian Supplies, 1 I. C. R. 22.

(b) As the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries is one of the agencies of the government, and the distribution of fish and eggs by that Commission is by authority of the government, the transportation of fish and eggs so distributed falls within the exception of section 22 of the Act. Re U. S. Commission of Fish and Fisheries, 1 I. C. R. 606.

(c) Fish and eggs, distributed by the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, are entitled to free transportation. Re United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, 1 I. C. C. 606.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) The Commission has no power under the law to require reduced rates for the United States, state or municipal governments. Metropolitan Paving Brick Co. v. A. A. R. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 197, 204.

(f) So far as the laws administered by the Commission are concerned, the right of carriers to transport government property free or at reduced rates is elective and not mandatory. No duties are delegated to the Commission under, nor can it assume to interpret or determine the purpose or scope of, the so-called public highways act or of statutes under which rights and privileges may be reserved to the United States in return for subsidies in lands or bonds or loan of credit. United States v. U. P. Ry. Co., 28 I. C. C. 518, 524.

(g) What carriers may do is one thing and what they ought to be required to do is quite another thing. Certainly the Commission has no power under the law to order carriers to transport traffic for the United States, state, or municipal governments at reduced rates. Furthermore, it is a matter of common knowledge that the United States, state and municipal authorities rarely lay pavements themselves. Work of this kind is usually let by contract. We know of no reason why lower rates should be made for contractors of brick paving than should be made in favor of any other party who may have contracts for other work for public authorities. Tennessee rates and charges, 63 I. C. C. 160, 173.

(h) Authority is given under section 22 of the act for carriers to transport property free of charge or at reduced rates for the United States, state or municipal governments. Police Jury of Caddo v. St. L. S. W. Ry., 78 I. C. C. 235, 236.

(ha) The commission is without authority to order special rates on sand and gravel for use in building public highways. Sand and Gravel to the Southeast, 83 I. C. C. 436, 440.

(i) Carriers have the right under section 22 of the act to extend special rates to the government, but the Commission cannot compel the carriers to do solely for the United States government what they may not be required to do for other shippers similarly situated. United States v. P. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. A-957.

(j) Under Acts Tenn. 1897, c. 10, §§8, 15, 17, and 24, the Tennessee Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, in the absence of action by the Interstate Commerce Commission, had power to prescribe a reduced rate for the transportation of materials for the state of its municipalities. State of Tennessee v. United States, 284 Fed. 371.

(k) As, under the Interstate Commerce Act, §22, the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot forbid the carrying of freight for a state or municipality at a less price than it charges individuals, its right to regulate or fix an intrastate rate, whether arising under former laws or under Transportation Act Feb. 28, 1920, is subject to the same limitation. State of Tennessee v. United States, 284 Fed. 371.

(l) Under the Interstate Commerce Act, permitting carriage of property free or at reduced rates for state or municipal governments, the preference should not be determined by the mere fact that the government is or is not the shipper or consignee, and apparently is permitted only where title passes to the government, as is vested in it at the shipping point. State of Tennessee v. United State, 284 Fed. 371.

(m) The Interstate Commerce Act, 22, providing that nothing therein shall prevent the carriage of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, state or municipal governments, does not necessarily make it improper that such reduced rates be given pursuant to a tariff regularly filed, or be subject to a measure of regulation or supervision, so that the authorized preference may not be abused, or become a pretext or cover for forbidden discriminations. State of Tennessee v. United States, 284 Fed. 371.

(n) The Interstate Commerce Act, §22, providing that nothing therein shall prevent the carriage of property free, or at reduced rates, for the United States, state, or municipal governments, leaves the Interstate Commerce Commissioin without jurisdiction to forbid the railroads from carrying freight for a state or municipalities at a less price than it charges individuals, notwithstanding sections 2 and 3, forbidding discrimination, or undue or unreasonable preferences. State of Tennessee v. United States, 284 Fed. 371.

(o) Interstate Commerce Act, §22, as amended by Act March 2, 1889, §9, providing that nothing therein shall prevent carriage, free or at reduced rates, for state or municipal governments, etc., must be read in connection with the rest of the act, and interpreted with due regard to its manifest purpose. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. State of Tenn., (1923), 43 Sup. Ct. 583.

(p) Interstate Commerce Act, §22, as amended by Act March 2, 1889, §9 providing that nothing therein shall prevent carriage at reduced rates for state governments, etc., was intended to settle beyond doubt that such preferential treatment was not necessarily prohibited, but does not authorize carrier to subject interstate commerce to undue prejudice, or the state to compel it to do so, as by granting lower rate on road material to state government, when this will give all governmental business to single quarry, to prejudice of others within or without the state. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. State of Tenn., (1923), 43 Sup. Ct. 583.

(q) Interstate Commerce Act, §22, as amended by Act March 2, 1889, §9, providing that nothing therein shall prevent carriage, at reduced rates, for state or municipal governments, etc., confers no new right on the carrier, but only preserves the right theretofore enjoyed of granting, in its discretion, preferential treatment to particular classes in certain cases. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. State of Tenn., (1923), 43 Sup. Ct. 583.

(r) In suit to set aside order of Interstate Commerce Commission increasing intrastate rate on shipments of stone and gravel consigned to state and municipal authorities to the level of the interstate rates, the Commission's finding of undue discrimination is conclusive, when the evidence on which it acted was introduced. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. State of Tenn., (1923), 43 Sup. Ct. 583.

(a) When a reduction is demanded which will apparently throw into confusion an adjustment of rates over a large section of the country, which are not claimed to be unreasonable of themselves, and in respect to which any modification upon one line will result in general disturbance and friction among a large number of shippers and carriers of the same product, there should be a clear right to the relief under some direct provision of the law in order to justify the Commission requiring it. Rend v. C. & N. W. Ry., 2 I. C. C. 313, 317.

(b) In a suit to restrain the enforcement of unreasonable rates it is no defense that the reduced rates may increase the volume of business and make it the more renumerative in the future. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey (C. C. S. D. Iowa), 2 I. C. R. 325.

(c) The continued reduction of relative rates when brought about by the removal of artificial and unnatural differences is not undesirable, but where the difference results from dissimilar circumstances and conditions, and the true difficuty appears to be a real and natural advantage which the one region has and enjoys over the other, such continuing disturbances of rates ought not to be inaugurated, especially when the charges are commodity rates not shown to be unreasonable in themselves. Anthony Salt Co. v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 3.

(d) A rate of $1 per ton from certain mines to Nashville, charged upon coal "run of mines nut and slack," being about 1 cent per ton per mile and $1.15 on screened coal, is not unreasonably low nor disproportionate to a rate of $1.40 per ton to Memphis, which is a little over ½ cent per ton per mile; and any reduction in the Memphis rate should be accompanied by a proportionate reduction in the Nashville rates. Re Louisville & N. R. Co., (Com), 4 I. C. R. 157.

(e) When an article of traffic does not move on account of burdensome rates, and the carrier is hauling a considerable number of empty cars in the direction such article would naturally move if accorded a lower rate, the carrier may be justified in carrying at a rate sufficient to induce the movement of such traffic, provided no extra or additional charge is in consequence put upon other articles carried; but the fact that freight will furnish return loads for empty cars is not a reason for the reduction of rates on such freight, when it does not appear that the rates are unreasonable. F. Schumacher Milling Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., (Com.) 4 I. C. R. 373.

(f) Complainant attacked rates on carload and less carloads of emigrant moveables and limitation or release of liability for damages from Louisville, Ky., to Los Angeles, as unreasonable and unjust. Under the western classification and tariff there are two westbound carload rates from Mississippi river territory to Pacific coast terminals on goods termed "emigrant movables" (including household goods) one a general class rate and the other designated a commodity rate and less than the general rate; the latter rate is published as being open to intending settlers only, but in practice it is given to shippers indiscriminately, and does not appear to be unreasonable in itself. HELD, that there is neither propriety in, nor necessity for, retaining in the classification and tariff either the two rates, or the statement in connection with the commodity rate that it is open to intending settlers only as their retention can only serve to mislead the public and afford opportunity for the practice of favoritism and unjust discrimination as between shippers; that the westbound rate on emigrant movable including household goods from Louisville to Los Angeles should not be in excess of the amount of said commodity rate thereon. Duncan v. A. T. & S. F. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 385.

(g) The only practicable remedy where carriers have maintained, for a considerable period, a relation of rates affecting an extensive territory somewhat more favorable to one community as compared with another than is justified, is by reducing the rates to the latter community. Daniels v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 458.

(h) Where a carrier charges 70 and 80 cents per 100 pounds on cotton from Indian territory points to St. Louis, and 75 for distances of 400 to 600 miles longer, and had long had in force rates of 60 and 65 cents per 100 pounds from these Indian territory points when it did not reach St. Louis over it own line, and at a time when the value of cotton was much higher, and its transportation more expensive than now; when it had made considerable reductions in its rates and charges generally, and upon 99 per cent or practically all its cotton rates except those in dispute; and when its rate on other freight, hauled and handled at greater expense, is much less than cotton rates; and where other roads in the same territory for like rates have much longer hauls, HELD, that such charges of 70 and 80 cents are unreasonable, and to be reasonable should not exceed 60 and 65 cents per 100 pounds. Jerome Hill Cotton Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 601.

(i) The average annual earnings for a term of years would warrant a reduction of the Eureka Springs rates to the basis of rates conceded to the Harrison district, but the current annual earnings do not justify a reduction to the full extent of such discriminations and a moderate reduction is recommended. Cary v. Eureka Springs R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 286.

(j) A slight reduction in freight rates from a large extent of territory upon a staple commodity like grain may result in very largely diminishing the revenues of the carrier, as well as determining whether or not grain can be raised at a profit, and, ultimately, whether it shall be raised at all. Questions of this nature, involving as they do, great interests to both parties, and interests which mean, not the loss or gain of a given sum for a single year, but similar loss or gain year after year, ought not to be determined except upon some reasonable satisfactory showing, if the material for such showing exists. Grain Shippers Asso. of Northwest Iowa v. I. C. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 158, 174.

(k) A railway company may, from considerations of policy, grant a reduction in its rates which the Interstate Commerce Commission could not order as a matter of right under the Act to Regulate Commerce. Holmes & Co. v. Southern R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 561.

(l) The action of a railway company in reducing a rate upon complaint of a shipper is not conclusive that the rate was unreasonable before the reduction, but when the traffic manager of that company, after a careful examination of the facts, makes the reduction, that, too, is in the nature of an admission against the reasonableness of the obnoxious rate at the time of the reduction. Holmes & Co. v. Southern R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 561.

(m) Where a rate is comparatively the lowest in its territory on a given article of freight and by reason thereof has been made the basis of reductions from competitive points, it will not be further reduced on the ground alone that it had at stated periods in the past been somewhat lower, unless it be shown that it is unreasonably high for the service performed. Warren Mfg. Co. et al. v. Southern Ry. Co., et al., 12 I. C. C. 381.

(n) This proceeding was instituted upon motion of the Commission for the purpose of determining whether, and to what extent, if any, further general reductions in rates, fares, and charges of carriers by railroad applicable in interstate or foreign commerce may lawfully be required under section 1 or other provisions of the act upon any commodities or descriptions of traffic; and also to determine what will constitute a fair return on and after March 1, 1922, under section 15a (3) of the act. In 58 I. C. C. 220, the Commission exercised the discretion conferred on it and to the 5½ per cent return as stated in law added the one half of 1 per cent during the two year period to make provision for improvements, betterments, or equipment. Since August 1920, the carriers as a whole, or as a whole in their respective rate groups, have failed by a considerable margin to earn the authorized return. It is obvious that large additions of capital must continually be made. The carriers must attract money to rates of return and stability of investment. Issuance of bonds in a disportionate degree unduly increases fixed charges and tends to weaken the credit of the carriers. In such a process eventually a point must be reached where no new capital can be raised, except for short terms at high rates. The intent of Congress was to create a steady flow of money for enlarging such facilities in order to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation. The Commission may observe that a fair return of 5.75 percent, representing an aggregate annual net railway operating income arrived at after deducting, among other things, the federal income tax on a return of 6 per cent, would be approximately the equivalent of a fair return of 6 per cent, out of which the Federal income tax was payable. The Commission finds no reason to disturb the value of carriers as shown in 58 I. C. C. 220, as except to the extent that subsequent additions to or withdrawals from the property in service, including materials and supplies and working capital, but further depreciation makes adjustment necessary. One of the greatest problems confronting the railroads today is to provide efficient service at a reasonable cost. If the purpose of section 15a to afford carriers a reasonable return is to be attained, earnest efforts toward reduction of operating expenses in all possible ways consistent with good service must be continued. The record does not disclose any general lack of efficiency. FREIGHT RATES AND CHARGES. In 58 I. C. C. 20, the Commission allowed advances of 40 per cent in eastern group; 35 per cent in western group; 25 per cent in southern and mountain Pacific groups; and 33 1-3 per cent interritorially. General reduction ranging from 10 to 22 per cent ordered by the Commission with respect to carload rates on grain, grain products, and hay in the western and mountain Pacific groups became effective during January, 1922, and upon recommendation of the Commission rates on livestock in the same groups in excess of 50c per 100 pounds had been reduced 20 per cent, but not below 50c, in October, 1921. Practically all other carload rates upon products of the farm in the country were reduced 10 per cent in January, 1922. All of these expire by tariff limitation on June 30, 1922. Many rate adjustments, resulting in reductions, have been made since the increases of 1920. Carriers admit that rates are too high and must come down, but they insist that rates can not be further reduced until the costs of transportation are further reduced. Rate stability is one of the important needs of commerce. It is a fundamental law of business that the anticipation of a falling market tends to restrict purchase. The public does not accept the present rate level as stable because of the belief that rates are too high and must come down. One of the needs of commerce is the lessening of the spread in rates between commodities and localities created by the percentage increases of 1918 and 1920. This applies to commodities in general and not merely to basic commodities. The wide range of evidence presented, the numerous and diverse interests concerned, and the competitive relationship of many commodities, accentuate the difficulty of selecting individual commodities for specific reductions. The ratio of coal traffic to other traffic on different roads varies materially, being in some cases 85 per cent and in others as low as 4 per cent of the total tonnage. It is evident, therefore, that loss in revenue from coal rate reductions would affect some carriers greatly and others but little. Some of the less prosperous carriers are among those carrying a high proportion of coal. The Commission feels warranted in taking notice of the fact that since this case was submitted the general condition of the iron and steel industry has materially improved. Transportation charges on the different raw materials are of varying importance to the different manufacturers. Manifestly changes in rates on one raw material unaccompanied by like changes on others tend to cause dislocation of relative production costs. A number of readjustments resulting in reductions of rates on raw materials and finished products have been made by carriers since 1920. Except in particular situations, or to the extent that rates on one or more raw materials are from a transportation standpoint too high as compared with rates on others, it would appear that reductions in rates on the raw materials should, in so far as possible, be made upon all alike. FOREST PRODUCTS. More than 90 per cent of the lumber consumed in South Dakota originates on the Pacific slope. It is not possible upon this record to prescribe specific rates to South Dakota, but the attention of carriers is called to the apparent necessity for some readjustment. AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND LIVESTOCK. Reductions 64 I. C. C. 85, should include carload rates on nursery stock and farm and field seeds in all rate groups; rates on potatoes from Maine, watermelons from points in the southern group, peanuts raw, in the shell, cottonseed and peanut cake and meal, rice and rice products, in carloads, and on cotton and leaf tobacco, any quantity, were not now included. PACKING HOUSE PRODUCTS. It is not practicable to prescribe a specific relationship between the rates on the live animal and on the product, but the carriers should make some revision of these rates from the Mississippi river eastward. WASTE MATERIALS. It is not possible on this record to prescribe definite adjustment, but carriers should promptly revise their rates on waste materials. PETROLEUM AND PRO-

DUCTS. Many short haul rates are materially higher than on other commodities of like transportation characteristics. The rail lines are losing some short haul traffic which they might retain at lower but still renumerative rates. Self interest would seem to dictate revision by them of their short haul rates. Carriers should promptly revise their rates from the southwest to the eastern group in order to lessen the spread as compared with rates between points in central and trunk line territories. ROOFING SLATE. Carriers should promptly revise their rates on other roofing materials. PASSENGER FARES. Carriers may themselves establish party fares, or change their practices in the handling of baggage, if they do so without unlawful discrimination. ELECTRIC RAILROADS. Record is too meager to permit of specific findings as to individual electric lines, or electric lines as a whole. It is the duty of the Commission to initiate such rates as will enable the carriers to earn as nearly as may be a fair return, qualified as provided in the act. High rates do not necessarily mean high revenues, for, if the public can not or will not ship in normal volume, less revenue may result than from lower rates. Manifestly the depression of 1921 resulted primarily from causes other than transportation charges. But it does not follow that under present conditions existing high rates do not tend to retard the return to a more normal flow of commerce. Deflation has taken place to a greater or less extent in wages and origin prices of commodities in nearly all branches of industry but most transportation charges are still near the peak. Practically all agree that stability of freight rates is highly desirable and that normal traffic may not well be expected until the present widespread expectation of rate reductions is realized or dispelled. To essume that rates can or should be stabilized on the present high basis is futile. The Commission finds: That on and after March 1, 1922, a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of the carriers defined in section 15a of the act, determined as therein provided will be 5.75 per cent of such aggregate property value as a uniform percentage for all rate groups or territories designated by this Commission. That the existing freight rates and charges, including charges for switching and other accessorial services and all other charges applicable to freight service which were increased by authority of 58 I. C. C. 220, will be on and after July 1, 1922, unjust and unreasonable to the extent that they may respectively include more than the following percentages of increases over the rates in effect immediately prior to August 26, 1920, in and between the various rate groups as defined in 58 I. C. C. 220, 489. In the eastern group, also between points in Illinois territory and between Illinois territory and the eastern group, 26 per cent instead of 40 per cent. In the western group, and between western group and Illinois, 21.5 per cent instead of 35 per cent. In the southern and mountain Pacific groups, 12.5 per cent instead of 25 per cent. On interterritorial traffic, except as otherwise provided herein, 20 per cent instead of 33 1-3 per cent. Freight rates herein determined should enable carriers to earn 5.75 per cent. That in applying the reductions above prescribed, rates between points within a group and points on the border line of that group shall be reduced as provided for the group. Where a river constitutes a boundary line between two groups, points on both banks thereof shall be considered as border line points. Where rates are constructed by the use of combinations upon gateways between any two groups, each of the factors comprising such through rates shall be reduced separately according to the group in which it occurrs. Under the circumstances described in paragraphs a, b, and c below, carriers should consider existing freight rates and charges as representing those made effective by authority of 58 I. C. C. 220, and shall apply the reductions herein prescribed accordingly, even though in some instances some individual rates or charges may be higher and others lower than those which would result from exact application of the bases above described: a. Where, since August 26, 1920, rates or charges have been readjusted primarily to remove discriminations, prejudices or discrepancies with material effect upon the aggregate level of the rates or charges so adjusted. This does not apply to rates or charges which have been reduced since August 26, 1920, primarily for the purpose of removing all or a part of the general increase of 1920. b. Where previously existing recognized rate relationships were maintained in applying the increases of August, 1920, or where rates have been readjusted since August 26, 1920, to restore previously existing recognized rate relasionships. In these cases, such recognized rate relationships should be maintained in applying the reductions herein prescribed; or, if that is impracticable in the first instance, the rates should be readjusted to restore such relationships as soon as practicable. c. Where, pursuant to decisions by the Commission, rates or charges shall have been changed since August 26, 1920. This does not apply to rates resulting from 64 I. C. C. 85; 63 I. C. C. 107; 66 I. C. C. 68. Where outstanding decisions by the Commission require changes in rates or changes subsequent to June 30, 1922, the rates or charges existing on June 30, 1922 shall be reduced as herein provided, effective July 1, 1922. In proceeding thereafter to comply with such outstanding decisions, the rates or charges which would result therefrom shall be considered as those effective by authority of 58 I. C. C. 220, and the reductions herein prescribed shall be applied thereto except that this provision shall not apply to rates on brick and related articles as prescribed in the eastern group in 68 I. C. C. 213. Those rates are not required to be further reduced hereunder. Where rates on live stock have been reduced under 63 I. C. C. 107, and are now less than the rates herein prescribed the expiration date thereon should be cancelled and the rates maintained in effect. Fractions are to be treated as named in the findings. Where carriers earn specific amounts as their divisions or compensation out of joint rates or charges, such amounts shall be reduced in the same manner as provided for the through rates and charges. Where the divisions of carriers participating in joint rates or charges are in fixed amounts per unit and are absorbed by other carriers, such absorptions shall be reduced in the same manner as the through rate or charge. In instances where application of the bases herein prescribed results in departures from the fourth section, the carriers will be expected to correct such departures by tariffs filed not later than October, 1, 1922. Temporary fourth section relief will be granted by appropriate order. If necessary, interested carriers may bring to the attention of the Commission any of its orders which may require modification to permit prompt and full compliance with the findings herein. The findings apply to all respondents other than electrical lines not operated as a part of a steam railroad system. They do not apply to milk and cream when the revenue from transportation thereof is not included in freight revenue. Nothing herein shall be construed as applying to the proportions of joint through rates or charges to or from points in foreign countries accruing in such foreign countries, or as authority to increase any existing rates or charges. Reduced Rates, 1922, 68 I. C. C. 676.

(na) The needs of commerce can not be met if rates are to fluctuate with market prices of commodities. In bringing down a rate level to meet lowered expenses reductions should be made generally upon all commodities in substantially equal ratio. Reduced Rates, 1922 68 I. C. C. 676, 734.

(o) Horizontal reductions within a limited area necessarily requires some readjustment or rates beyond or across the border, wherever it may be. Rates on grain, grain products and hay, 69 I. C. C. 562, 567.

(p) Where a carrier is not named as a defendant, though it is the delivering line, it would be unjust in view of such a defect in parties, to require a reduction in the rate via a route that carrier participates in. Silica Sand Producers Asso. v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 73 I. C. C. 588, 592.

(q) Proof that a carrier is not earning operating expenses on its State and interstate freight traffic as a whole does not establish that the joint interstate rates on a particular commodity, if reduced in accordance with findings in Reduced Rates, 1922, 68 I. C. C. 676, would be less than just and reasonable. Reduced Rates, 1922, 73 I. C. C. 189, 191.

(r) The Commission's findings in Reduced Rates, 1922, 68 I. C. C. 676, were made with full knowledge that some carriers would incur deficits, that others would earn considerably more than the average, and that subsequent readjustments of rates on particular commodities or of individual lines or divisions of joint rates would doubtless be necessary. These general findings should not be reconsidered or modified in the interest of individual carriers except in cases of extreme necessity. Reduced Rates, 1922, 73 I. C. C. 189, 193.

(s) Rates on gas and fuel oils, in tank-car loads, from Kansas and Oklahoma refineries to Fremont, Nebr., found unreasonable and unduly prejudicial in favor of Omaha, Nebr. Following Fairmont Creamery Co., 43 I. C. C. 515, carriers established rates on fuel and gas oil to Omaha, 5 cents less than on refined oils. Fremont had always enjoyed a parity of rates with Omaha but carriers continued to apply the same rates on all grades of petroleum oil and its products to that point. Reasonable maximum rates prescribed and reparation awarded. Empire Refineries v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 207.

(t) Where carriers voluntarily propose to reduce certain rates to an out of pocket plus basis in order to augment the total traffic carried, a wholly different situation is presented. The menace of compensation is absent, for volenti non fit injuria; and the additional traffic is secured with a resulting augmentation of net revenue instead of laying a burden upon other traffic, affords the possibility of lightening the burden thereon by bringing a greater tonnage under contribution to net revenue. Trancontinental Cases of 1922, 74 I. C. C. 48, 69.

(u) Proposed reduced local rate on iron and steel articles from New Orleans, La., and group points, to Houston, Galveston, Beaumont, and Orange, Tex., and points taking the same rates, found justified. Car-mile and ton-mile earnings under proposed rates compare favorably, distance considered, with earning under the rates from St. Louis, Mo., to the same destinations and from New Orleans, Memphis, and St. Louis to other points in the Southwest. Furthermore, the local movement from New Orleans is very light, and it is stated that a substantial movement could be developed from Jobbers at that point. Iron and Steel Articles from New Orleans, 74 I. C. C. 146.

(v) Rates on containers, beverage, returned empty from points in southern classification territory and points taking the same rates, to Chattanooga, Tenn., found unreasonable to the extent they exceeded the rates on cereal beverages, or the sixth class rates if lower, contemporaneously in effect between the same points in opposite direction. Reasonable basis for rates prescribed, and reparation awarded. Purity Extract & Tonic Company v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 263.

(w) Proposed reduced rates on pig iron from producing points in Alabama and Tennessee to St. Louis, Mo., Ohio River crossings, and related points in c. f. a. territory, found unduly preferential of shippers in Alabama and Tennessee and unduly prejudicial to producers in the southern Ohio district. Pig Iron from Southern Producing Points, 74 I. C. C. 330.

(x) Proposed reductions on salt from Michigan and Ohio producing points and Chicago, Ill., to certain destinations west of the Mississippi River crossings in Iowa and Missouri, found justified. Recommended that Mason City, Iowa, and other important salt-consuming points in northeastern and central Iowa similarly situated be given same reductions as Des Moines, Iowa. Salt from C. F. A. to Western Trunk Line Destinations, 74 I. C. C. 409, 414, 415.

(y) Proposed reduced rates on bulk salt from Detroit and other eastern Michigan points to Chicago, Ill., group points, and intermediate points in Indiana, Ohio, and Michigan, found not justified. Proposed reduction would result in undue preference and advantage to shippers at Detroit and other eastern Michigan points, and subject shippers from Halite, N. Y., to undue prejudice and disadvantage. Salt from C. F. A. to Western Trunk Line Destinations, 74 I. C. C. 418.

(z) Proposed reduced rates on crude petroleum oil, for coastwise movement, from certain Louisiana points to points in the Beaumont-Port Arthur, Texas, group, found justified. Proposed rates will enable carriers to meet pipe line competition, and while subnormal, will yield considerably more than the out-of-pocket cost of transportation. The oil traffic gained can be handled with approximately the present motive power during the greater portion of the year, and will serve to fill out the tonnage of regularly operated trains. Furthermore, if the suspended rates are not permitted to become effective, the oil will continue to move by pipe line, and respondents will be deprived of revenue which they need. Crude Oil from Louisiana Points, 74 I. C. C. 623.

(aa) Respondents proposed reduced rates of 10 cents on crude petroleum oil, carloads, when for coastwise movement, from certain points on the L. & A. Ry., Shreveport, La., and certain points south thereof on the K. C. S., to points in the Beaumont-Port Arthur, Texas, group. At the present time the Atlantic Oil Producing Co. is moving its product from Gilark, Near Minden, La., to Port Arthur exclusively by pipe line. None is moving by rail. If the rates are not permittted to become effective, the Atlantic Refining Co., will seek the acquirement or construction of additional pipe line capacity to move the full volume. Respondent admits the suspended rates are subnormal, but asserts they were published to meet the competition of the lower pipe line rate, because the additional tonnage, which otherwise would be lost, can be handled for considerably less than the out of pocket cost of transportation. These rates, being competitive, cannot be used as the measure of maximum reasonable rates in the southwest. HELD, suspended rates justified. Crude Oil from Louisiana Points, 74 I. C. C. 623.

(bb) Proposed reduced rates should not be disapproved because of possible reductions of other rates as a result thereof. Slack Coal from Arkansas-Oklahoma Mines, 80 I. C. C. 203.

(cc) In initiation of rates, and until they are proven unduly prejudicial in an appropriate proceeding, there is nothing in the regulating statute to prevent the carrier from carrying nut coal between points on its own line on slack coal basis, or to require it to make same screen regulations as obtained at mines served by different carriers. Slack Coal from Arkansas-Oklahoma Mines, 80 I. C. C. 194, 203, 204.

(a) Whether the rate on a second hand dynamo shipped from the electric light station to the repair shop should be lower than is charged upon either a new or a second hand dynamo sent to the station for use, is a question of policy for the railways; and this Commission cannot say that it is unjust or unreasonable to exact the same charge for the new and the second hand dynamo. National Machinery & W. Co. v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 581.

(aa) Old dynamos which have become merely combinations of copper, brass and iron scrap and valuable only as junk should, under suitable regulations fixed by the carrier, be given the rating for junk, basing the same on the highest class metal used in the construction. Natl. Machinery & W. Co., v. P. C. C. & St. L. R. Co., et al., 11 I. C. C. 581.

(b) The fact that freight has been shipped once and paid one way cannot be taken into consideration in fixing charges for a subsequent transaction. The principle underlying the ordinary transit privilege cannot be relied upon in support of the return shipment rule. Transit arrangement in the most common form at least are susceptible of defense only upon the theory that the inbound and outbound movements are, in fact, part of a single continuous transaction. While the freight is delayed at the transit point the shipment is merely suspended temporarily, the present intention of the shipper being to forward the goods to their ultimate destination. Once let it be conceded that the inbound and outbound movements are separate and distinct and the impropriety of applying any rates other than the regularly established locals would be self evident. It is clear that there is no real connection between an outbound shipment today and a "returned shipment" one year hence. There is no room whatever for the argument that the shipment is suspended during the period intervening between the two transactions, for there is no present intent to accomplish the return movement. It is therefore impossible to relate the two services and urge the one as reason for granting special terms to the other. In Re Reduced Rates on Returned Shipments, 19 I. C. C. 409, 417.

(c) It is obvious that application of a different rating to new and second hand articles of same kind would be impracticable. Hirsch & Son Iron & Rail Co. v. W. B. & A. E. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 480, 481.

(d) In principle rates should be no lower on an empty carrier, returned, than on a similar second hand empty carrier. The return element should be disregarded. Rates on Tin Cans and Other Commodities, 37 I. C. C. 360, 362.

(e) The Commission has repeatedly declined to sanction the principle that old and second hand articles are necessarily entitled to lower ratings than the same articles when new. Industrial Traffic Asso. v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R., 37 I. C. C. 607, 608.

(f) While it is not unlawful or improper for carriers, within reasonable limits and without discrimination, to provide for the return free or at reduced rates, of shipments which are refused by consignees, the Commission has never required the granting of such reduced rates. Samuel v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 190, 192.

(g) Complainant attacked third class rates on 68 carloads of canvas in the form of tents shipped during 1919 and 1920 from certain Army camps and supply bases to Kansas City, Mo., as unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory and unduly prejudicial. In these territories tents, new and old, with or without fixtures, are rated third class in carloads. Complainant does not question the reasonableness of this rating on new tents. Ratings are asked for goods rejected and sold by the Government, and not for second hand tents generally. In the trade a complete tent is understood to include not only the canvas but the necessary stakes, poles and guy ropes. Only two of these shipments included stakes and poles and fully 50 per cent of the guy ropes had been removed, were broken, or had rotted off. These tents could be loaded in any kind of a closed car if the roof was tight, and their liability to damage was slight as compared with that of new tents. Complainant admits that 85 per cent of the material purchased was in the form of tents, and that a considerable portion after being repaired was sold as tents, and that some of the cars contained new tents which had never been used and were still in the original bales. HELD, rates and ratings attacked not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful, complaint dismissed. Carnie-Goudie Mfg. Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 68 I. C. C. 40.

(h) Complainant attacked the rate charged on a carload of scrap iron shipped March 3, 1919, from Andrews, S. C., to Harrisburg, Pa., as unjust and unreasonable. Shipment consisted of old worn out log car wheels, originally billed as scrap iron, set up at destination to second hand car wheels, charged at sixth class rate of 52c applicable on car wheels. There was ineffect a carload commodity rate of $5.40 per gross ton on scrap iron and scrap steel, all kinds (except old rails suitable for relaying purposes.) The wheels were not broken into scraps or pieces when tendered for shipment. The description under the commodity rate is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include scrap iron both in its original form and when broken into scraps or pieces. HELD, shipment consisted of scrap iron and entitled to commodity rate of $5.40 per gross ton, reparation awarded. Queen City Iron & Metal Co. v. Director General, 73 I. C. C. 618.

(i) Class rates on a sporadic shipment of second hand iron and steel articles in straight and mixed carloads, from Coalton, Okla., to Swartz, La., found unreasonable as compared with lower commodity rates from various other points to the same destinations. Reparation awarded. Southern Carbon Co. v. M. P. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C. 123, 124.

(j) Fourth-class rates charged on l. c. l. shipments of returned cereal beverage cases, empty, or partially or entirely filled with empty bottles, found inapplicable. The United States Railroad Adminstration with the intention of applying foruth-class rates generally, canceled a provision in the western classification which provided a rating of one-half fourth-class but failed to make a similar change in an agency tariff which governed shipments here involved. Reparation awarded. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C. 637.

(l) Complainant attacked as unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, and unduly prejudicial rates in effect since Dec. 30, 1919, on returned empty beverage containers, carloads, from all points in southern classification territory and from points from which the rates are subject to the southern classification to Chattanooga. Complainants shipments are made in half barrels and quarter barrels and in bottles packed in casks and boxes or carriers. For many years the rates on returned empty beverage carriers were one-half the rate on the beverage, carloads, from and to the same points in the reverse direction. On Dec. 30, 1919, sixth class rates were made applicable to returned beverage containers of all styles. Subsequently most of the carriers in this territory have established rates of 66 2-3 per cent of the outbound rate on the beverage. The movement of returned carriers is regular and of substantial volume, and provides lading for many returning refrigerator cars that would otherwise be hauled empty. The evidence is clear that commercial and other conditions, together with the rates on the beverages outbound, prevent the marketing of complainant's products at a profit except upon low rates for the return movement of the empty containers. HELD, rates attacked not unreasonable or unduly prejudicial except in those instances where, since Dec. 30, 1919, they exceeded rates on beverages, or sixth class rates applicable in the opposite direction; in such instances they are unreasonable to extent they exceeded such beverage rates or sixth-class rates where lower, reparation awarded. Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C. 263.

(m) The Commission has repeatedly approved the cancellation of exceptionally low rates on empty used packages or containers. Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C. 263, 269.

(n) Complainant attacked fourth class rates charged between March 1, and Oct. 18, 1920, on numerous less carloads of returned empty beverage containers from points in North Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois and Nebraska, to Duluth via the G. N., as unreasonable and unjustly discriminatory to extent they exceeded one-half fourth class rates. Western classification from April 1, 1918, to Dec. 20, 1919, provided for one-fourth class rates but it was eliminated on that date. An agency tariff was not changed. The shipments consisted of wooden cases and casks the large majority of which were entirely filled with empty bottles. The word: "Cases" has generally been construed as including both the shell and the shell containing one or more empty bottles. The word does not cover casks. One-half of fourth class has been uniformly applicable in western trunk line territory for many years. HELD, rates applicable one-half fourth class, reparation awarded. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. G. N. Ry., 75 I. C. C. 637.

(o) The Commission will not ordinarily establish a lower rate on second hand articles than on new articles of the same kind. Arizona Copper Company v. A. & N. M. Ry., 78 I. C. C. 358, 360.

(p) It is not a necessary conclusion that, by prescribing for future a lower rate on secondhand boilers and machinery having value for remelting purposes only than on new articles of same kind, the commission has departed from policy that it will not ordinarily establish a lower rate on secondhand articles than on new articles of same kind. Arizona Copper Co. v. A. & N. M. Ry. Co., 78 I. C. C., 358, 360.

(q) In support of contention that burnt cotton should take lower rates than uninjured cotton, complainant refers to practice of according lower rates on old rubber tires than on new rubber tires and other rubber goods. Such old articles are not analogous to burnt cotton. They are, in fact, scrap, and have no value for purposes for which originally manufactured, whereas burnt cotton if damage is not material, may be used for same purposes as uninjured cotton. This distinction has been recognized as material in Minneapolis Traffic Asso., 23 I. C. C., 432. Floyd & Co. v. A. & M. R. R. Co, 83 I. C. C. 485, 487.

(a) A rate which may be reasonable when applied to the transportation of egg cases as a disconnected service may be unreasonable if the carriage of returned cases at favorable rates is in fact a special serivce, the discontinuance of which would unduly durden the business of shipping eggs to points of sale. Rhode Island Egg & Butter Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 512.

(b) Upon complaint of unreasonable classification and rating on returned empty egg cases from Providence, R. I. to Chicago, Ill., Burlington, Ia., and other western points. HELD, that the evidence presented is insufficient to enable the Commission to determine the question. HELD FURTHER, that the defendants and other carriers concerned should be allowed time to consider whether shippers generally are not unduly prejudiced by the increased rating complained of and take or refrain from taking action accordingly, and if the carriers fail to take satisfactory action, that the complainants and any other interested shipper or consignee should have leave, after a specified time, to ask to have the case reopened; and thereupon such other direction be given as will serve to bring in necessary parties defendant, by amended or supplemental complaint or otherwise, as may appear to be required. Rhode Island Egg & Butter Co. v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., et al., 6. I. C. C. 176.

(c) A rate which may reasonable when applied to the transportation of egg cases as a disconnected service may be unreasonable if the carriage of returned cases at favorable rates is in fact a special serivce, the discontinuance of which would unduly burden the business of shipping eggs to points of sale. Rhode Island Egg & Butter Co. v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., et al., 6 I. C. C. 176.

(d) Rates on cut flowers from New Jersey and Pennsylvania points of $1 per 100 pounds; and on empty boxes returned folded from New York City, graduated from 50 to 75 cents per 100 pounds; on empty boxes not folded, $1 per 100 pounds, excessive and unreasonable. Society of American Florists v. United State Express Co., 12 I. C. C. 120.

(e) Complainant attacked rates charged on petroleum and its products from Pennsylvania and Ohio to Pacific coast terminals as unreasonable as well as the return charge on the empty oil cars. The rates charged were considerably higher than the rates from Chicago and a charge of $105 was made for return of empty tank cars. Subsequently the rates from Chicago and from the eastern points were made uniform, and the charge for return of empty tank cars was abolished. HELD, Complaint dismissed. National Petroleum Association v. Pennsylvania R. R., 12 I. C. C. 151.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(f) Original report in this proceeding was issued in 51 I. C. C. 686. Carriers tariffs provided rates for the transportation of articles in suitable containers, the charges under these rates to be calculated upon the gross weight of goods and containers. Complainant asks that freight charges on goods shipped in a steel container be assessed on the basis of the net weight, and that the returned empty container, knocked down, be accorded one-half the fourth class rates in western and southern classification territories and fifth class rate in official classification. The container may be used repeatedly and certain other advantages to the shipper are claimed, but apparently they are insufficient to offset the added expense under existing freight tariffs from the heavier weight as compared with the ordinary wooden box or fibre package. Evidence given is largely speculative as no opportunity has been given to ascertain definitely what saving if any would accrue to the carrier by the use of this steel container. Some ratings in the classification on certain commodities confined them to wooden boxes only, thus excluding the use of complainants container, which should be corrected. HELD, complaint dismissed. Pnuematic Scales Corporation, Ltd. v. A. & R. R. Co., 57 I. C. C. 308.

(g) While it is not unlawful or improper for carriers, within reasonable limits and without discrimination, to provide for the return free or at reduced rates, of shipments which are refused by consignees, the Commission has never required the granting of such reduced rates. Samuel v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 190, 192.

(h) Proposal to increase present charges on empty shipping containers or carriers, returned, found not justified, except on bread and cake empties on which a charge of 10 cents each is approved, to include pick-up and delivery service. Express Classification, 1920, 59 I. C. C. 265, 273, 274.

(i) Contention that a return shipment constitutes a part of the whole movement, as a carload of empty beer carriers is generally ready to be sent back when a car of filled carriers is delivered. HELD, the "returned" element should be disregarded. Marshall Young Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 61 I. C. C. 61, 62.

(a) It is unlawful to apply one rule when shipment is for a railroad and a different rule when for a private individual, if traffic is of like kind moving under similar conditions. Doran & Co. v. N. C. & St. L. Ry., 33 I. C. C. 523, 531.

(b) A carrier may transport its own material free of charge over its own line. Carriers may, if they so desire, and by proper handling, take possession of coal at the junction point and transport it free over their entire line. However, if this is done, the local rate is the lawfully published rate up to the junction points and must be paid. This method has much to commend it not only for fuel coal, but for all so-called company material. Rates on Railroad Fuel and Other Coal, 36 I. C. C. 1, 8.

(c) The railroad company as a shipper or consignee is entitled to the same consideration as any commercial shipper or consignee and no more, and this is true when the shipment moves partly over the rails of the carrier that is in fact the shipper or consignee. It necessarily follows that in such cases the carrier is entitled to a division of the joint through rate. But the division must be fixed by the same consideration which would determine the division upon through commercial shipments in which the railroads have no other interest than that of a carrier. Rates on Railroad Fuel and Other Coal, 36 I. C. C. 1, 9.

(d) The character of a shipment and not formal incidents, such as billing determines the rate and divisions applicable. The rates and divisions to points of actual destination must be applied to railway fuel coal shipments here involved, and the application of rates and divisions to fictitious billed destinations are unlawful and cannot be justified by the theory that such rates and divisions would be proper rates and divisions to the average point of actual destination. Rates on Railroad Fuel and Other Coal, 36 I. C. C. 1, 10.

(e) Carriers are permitted to bill fuel coal purchased at points on connecting lines to local points on their own lines beyond their junctions with their connections, in order to secure tranportation to the junction points at their connections' divisions of the joint rates applicable to the destinations selected instead of the full rates applicable to the junction points. The only limitations are that the billing shall be genuine, that the shipments shall move to the points to which they are billed, and that they shall be given no rate advantage over commercial shipments from and to the same points. Usually the practice benefits the consignee carrier adopting it. But the consequences of the practice in particular cases can not determine the rate legally applicable. If the billing to the actual destination on the consignee's line is genuine the shipment must be treated by the connecting line exactly like an ordinary commercial shipment, whatever the disposition by the consignee carrier of the charges that accrue for the movement over its own rails. Marquette Coal Co. v. Penn R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C. 4, 6.

(f) In Conference Ruling 225 the Commission expressed the opinion that a carrier as a shipper over the lines of another carrier may not be given a preference in the application of rates on interstate shipments, but that it may lawfully and properly take advantage of legal tariff joint rates applying to a convenient junction or other point on its own line provided shipments are consigned though to such point from point of origin and are in good faith sent to such billed destination. It was later held, Conference Ruling 324, that it was unlawful for carriers to make special and discriminatory divisions of joints rates upon railroad fuel as between an originating or participating carrier and a purchasing carrier; that in the division of joint rates a shipping railroad must be treated precisely as any other shipper is treated; and that divisions upon fuel coal must be made in good faith without respect to the fact that one of the carriers is the purchaser of the coal. Tuckerton R. R. Co. v. Penn. R. R. Co., 52 I. C. C. 319, 321.

(g) A railway, as a shipper over the lines of other carriers, is lawfully entited to take advantage of joint rates applying to points on its own line, providing its shipments are, in good faith, sent to such billed destinations. Mississippi River & Boone Terre Ry. v. Director General, 55 I. C. C. 674, 677.

(h) Where stock in one carrier company is owned by another carrier company but both maintain separate organizations and report separately to the Commission, they may not lawfully carry property free for each other. Arizona Rates, Fares and Charges, 61 I. C. C. 572, 583.

(i) Proposed reduced rates on limestone from points on the Western Maryland Ry. to points in western Pennsylvania and northeastern Ohio, found justified. Similar rates from points on the B. & O. to Youngstown, Ohio, found not justified as the ex-lake competition encountered is not such a controling factor as to warrant a reduction in the Youngstown district rates on the ground of dissimilarity of conditions, without making a similar reduction at Beaver Valley, Pa., points. Reduced Rates on Limestone, 74 I. C. C. 249.

(j) Joint rate on bituminous coal, for use of complainant railroad and moving from Cass, Ind., to Kensington, Ill., over the Illinois Central, thence to Michigan City, Ind., over complainant's rails, found not unreasonable, discriminatory, or unduly prejudicial as compared with lower rate contemporaneously in effect from and to the same points over other routes. Rates assessed compare favorably with other rates on coal from same origin group to Indiana points, and mere fact of contemporaneous maintenance of lower rates over other routes does not warrant an award of reparation. C., L. S. & S. B. Ry. Co., v. I. C. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 609.

(k) When a railroad company becomes a purchaser of coal upon lines of a connection, and ships to itself as consignee, it is entitled to same consideration as any commercial shipper or consignee and no more, and this is true when shipment moves partly over rails of carrier that is in fact shipper or consignee. Rates and Railroad Fuel and Other Coal, 36 I. C. C. 1, 9; Divisions of Joint Rates on Railway Fuel Coal, 37 I. C. C. 265; Assigned Cars for Bituminous Coal Mines, 80 I. C. C. 546.

(ka) When a railroad company becomes a purchaser of coal upon lines of a connection, and ships to itself as consignee, it is entitled to same consideration as any commercial shipper or consignee and no more, and this is true when shipment moves partly over rails of carrier that is in fact shipper or consignee. Rates on Railroad Fuel and Other Coal, 36 I. C. C. 265. Assigned Cars for Bituminous Coal Mines, 80 I. C. C. 520, 546.

(l) A carrier as a shipper over the lines of another carrier may not have any preference in the application of transportation rates and charges. Conversely, it may have the same privileges under the tariffs as any other shipper. New Mexico Central Ry. v. A. T. & S. F. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 718, 721.

(m) Paragraph (6) of section 15 of the act deals with authority of Commission to prescribe just, reasonable, and equitable divisions of joint rates, fares, and charges. It must be conceded that on company fuel there are no joint rates to be divided and that therefore this section has no application to this species of traffic. New Mexico Central Ry. Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 718, 721.

(n) Contention that paragraph (2), (5) and (6) of section 15a of the act, taken together, empower Commission to require a railroad to turn over its company material to another road, for transportation via shorter route between points on line of the former, when it is shown that by so doing it wil result in an actual saving to former company, not sustained. While Commission has power and duty, as occasion may require, to investigate and determine whether or not a carrier is operated efficiently and economically, to be taken into consideration in fixing level of rates, the Commission is unable to find any provision of the act which authorizes it by order to require a carrier to conduct its affairs along lines which may seem more efficient and economical than those now followed. New Mexico Central Ry. Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 721, 722.

(o) Contention that a carrier is not a "shipper" as that term is used in paragraph (10) of section 15 of the act, and that company material therefore must be considered unrouted traffic, not sustained. On contrary, Commission has repeatedly referred to carriers as shippers when engaged in transporting material belonging to them. In the Matter of Transportation of Company Material, 22 I. C. C. 439, 440. As a shipper, therefor, it necessarily follows that such carrier has right to route its traffic as it sees fit so far as this provision of the act is concerned. New Mexico Central Ry. Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 721, 722

(p) Interstate Commerce Act, §6, par, 7 (U. S. Comp. St. §8569), requiring uniform charges for interstate transportation, does not apply where the carrier is transporting material to be used by a contractor for the upkeep of the carrier's own road, in view of the provision of U. S. Comp. §8563, cl. 6, prohibiting the transportation of all articles produced by the carrier except such as may be intended for its own use. Devine v. Meramec Portland Cement & Material Co., (Missouri, 1923), 253 S. W. 444.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Proposed reductions in rates on coal from Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, and Oklahoma to Omaha and Lincoln, Nebr., St. Joseph, Mo., and related points for the purpose of placing the southwestern fields on a parity with southern Illinois, found not justified. Such reductions without a concurrent reduction to Kansas City would result in undue prejudice to the latter point. Coal from Southwest to Omaha, 73 I. C. C. 536.

(b) Respondents, Wetern Maryland Ry. Co., and Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., proposed to reduce their rates on limestone crude, fluxing, foundry and furnace, carloads, from points on their lines to points in western Pennsylvania and northeastern Ohio. Points of origin are in the Cavetown, Md., and Thomasville, Pa., groups, about 240 and 300 miles east of Pittsburgh. Points of origin on the B. & O., are in the Martinsburg, W. Va., just south of the Cavetown group about 240 miles from Pittsburgh. Heretofore limestone producers in the Martinsburg and Cavetown groups have always had a parity of rates to the consuming points shown, and rates from those two groups have in turn to most destinations been the same as those applicable from points on the Pennsylvania in the Union Furnace group about 130 miles from Pittsburgh. No protests were received against the proposed rates from the Thomasville group to Pittsburgh district points, and the proposed rates from Cavetown and Thomasville to Youngstown were not protested. Protests were made as to the proposed rate of $1.51 from Cavetown and Thomasville groups to destinations in the Beaver Valley district. Limestone is brought into this destination territory ex-lake, but this competition is not such a controlling factor as to warrant a reduction in the Youngstown district rate on the ground of dissimilarity of conditions, without making a similar reduction at Beaver Valley points. HELD, suspended schedules of the Western Maryland have been justified, but the $1.75 rate proposed by B. & O. from Martinsburg group to Youngstown not justified. Reduced Rates on Limestone from B. & O., and Wetren Maryland Ry. Points to P. & L. E. R. R. Points, 74 I. C. C. 249.

(c) Respondents proposed to reduce the rate on pig iron, carloads, from producing points in Alabama and Tennessee to St. Louis, Mo., Ohio River crossings and related points in central territory. In 30 I. C. C. 597, the Commission found rates on pig iron from these points of origin to Ohio river and points north and east were unreasonable to extent they exceeded $3.40 to St. Louis and $2.65 to Louisville, and as increases are still in effect. The southern producers in marketing their pig iron in this territory encounter strong competition from northern furnaces, including those at Chicago, Granite City, Ill., and points in southern Ohio. Because of this, they requested respondents to so reduce their rates as to give them better access to the northern markets, and as a result the present schedules were filed. St. Louis is the largest pig iron consuming point to which reductions are filed. Prior to June 24, 1918, the relationship between Birmingham and Chicago was $1.82 in favor of Chicago and restoration of this relationship required the establishment of a rate from Birmingham of $4.62. To the Ohio River the basic rate from Birmingham is the rate to Louisville. This was increased 25 per cent on August 26, 1920, as against an increase of 33 1-3 percent to St. Louis. Respondents proposed to remove the effect of this difference in increase by reducing the rate to Louisville so that it will reflect the same percentage relationship to the proposed rate to St. Louis as existed on August 25, 1920. The rate from Birmingham to St. Louis, 475 miles, would be 57 cents less than the rate from the southern Ohio district for the same distance, and the rate to Louisville, 392 miles, would be 29c less than the rate from the southern Ohio district 232 miles. It is evident that the primary purpose of the suspended schedules is to remove the increase in spread to St. Louis, Chicago under Birmingham, and that the proposed reductions to Ohio River crossings are only incidental. HELD, proposed rate would result in undue prejudice to protestants and would unlawful. Pig Iiron from Southern Producing Points, 74 I. C. C. 330.

(d) If carriers elect to reduce rates in order to enable shippers to find a market for their products in a particular field, they must, under the law, accord equal opportunity to competing shippers at other points who are dependent upon them for transportation. Pig Iron from Southern Producing Points, 74 I. C. C. 334.

(e) Proposed reduced rates on crude petroleum oil, for coastwise movement, from certain Louisiana points to points in the Beaumont-Port Arthur, Tex., group, found justified. Proposed rates will enable carriers to meet pipe-line competition, and while subnormal, will yield considerably more than the out-of-pocket cost of transportation. The oil traffic gained can be handled with approximately the present motive power during the greater portion of the year, and will serve to fill out the tonnage of regularly operated trains. Furthermore, if the susupended rates are not permitted to become effective, the oil will continue to move by pipe line, and respondents will be deprived of revenue which they need. Crude Oil from Louisiana Points, 74 I. C. C. 623.

(f) Respondents proposed a reduction in rates on nut and slack coal from Oklahoma and Arkansas mines on the Frisco to Texas destinations on its lines beginning at Adams, just south of the Red river and extending thence to and including Brownwood, also Fort Worth and Dallas, a length of line of some 250 miles. Coal is shipped into Texas from the Trinidad, Canon City and Walsenburg groups in Colorado, and the Raton and Dawson groups in New Mexico. The rates today are lower from Colorado and New Mexico mines. The immediate precipitant of the reductions here proposed from the Oklahoma and Arkansas mines was the readjustment from the Colorado and New Mexico mines. They are not the same in cents per ton but the differential of slack under lump coal will be the same as obtained from those mines. The record does not establish that the proposed rates are below the cost of the service or unreasonably low by comparison with other rates. HELD, proposed rates justified. Slack Coal from Arkansas and Oklahoma Mines to Texas, 80 I. C. C. 194.

(b) Divisions applicable on fuel coal traffic are, in effect, rates, and there is good reason why they should be published by filing with the Commission and open to public inspection. Rates on Railroad Fuel and Other Coal, 36 I. C. C. 1, 13.

(c) In all cases where a carrier receives divisions out of joint rates applicable upon shipments of coal intended for its use such divisions must be filled with the Commission on or before the date of their taking effect, together with a statement of the facts upon which the carrier relies in justifying the amount of the division. All such divisions will be subject to careful scrutiny, and frequent or precipitate changes in the amounts of the divisions will require clear explanation. Rates on Railroad Fuel and Other Coal, 36 I. C. C. 1, 14.

(d) The provisions of section 6 as clearly require the publication of divisions received by a consuming carrier out of the joint rates applicable on its supply coal as they require the publication of allowances made to shippers under section 15. This does not mean that such divisions paid to a consuming carrier aredeemed to be allowances, since the consuming carrier concurs in the joint rates, and the divisions paid, therefore, are paid to it in its capacity as a carrier and not as a shipper. CASES 1887-1908

(a) Ice and the facilities for its transportation in connection with the transportation of perishable traffic requiring refrigeration in transit undertaken by a carrier are incidental to such transportation, and the charge therefor is within the Act to Regulate Commerce, §1, requiring reasonableness in all charges for any service in the transportation of passengers or property, or "in connection therewith." Truck Farmers' Asso. v. Northeastern R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 295.

(b) When carriers undertake the transportation of perishable traffic requiring refrigeration in transit, ice and the facilities for its transportation in connection with that traffic are incidental to the service of transportation, and the charge therefor is a charge in connection with such service within the meaning of section 1 of the act, in respect to the reasonableness of which the carrier is subject to that provision of the statute. Truck Farmers' Asso. v. Northeastern R. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 295, 316.

(c) Whether or not the regulating statute applies to refrigeration charges in all cases, the defendants, by compelling shippers to pay icing charges on citrus fruits as established by the car lines, or do without necessary refrigeration for the traffic, have made these charges part of the cost of transportation, and subject to regulation under the law. Consolidated Forwarding Co. v. Southern P. Co., 10 I. C. C. 590.

(de) The carriers having reduced their rates for refrigeration charges, and the Commission being without authority to fix rates for the future, order will not be made at this time. Re Charges for Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the Pere Marquette and Michigan Central Railroads, 11 I. C. C. 129.

(f) It is not within the province of the Commission to prescribe the method or kind of refrigeration charges which shall be adopted by the carrier. Matter of Charges for Transportation of Fruit, 11 I. C. C. 129, 141.

(g) The charge for refrigeration stands like any other charge for transportation, and it is the duty of the carrier to publish and file the same withthe Commission. Re Charges for Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the Pere Marquette and Michigan Central Railroads, 11 I. C. C. 129.

(h) Refrigeration, being incumbent upon the carrier as part of the transportation, the charge for that service stands like other charges for transportation. It is the duty of the carrier to publish, file with the Commission, and observe its refrigeration charges, and the Commission has the same jurisdiction to inquire into the justice and reasonableness of such charges as of any other charge for the transportation of passengers or property. Matter of charges for Transportation of Fruit, 11 I. C. C. 129, 141.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(i) Where there is no provision in a tariff for assessment of icing charge, and the shipper paid the sum demanded, the Commission has jurisdiction to inquire what was a reasonable charge and to order payment of whatever the carrier has collected over and above such reasonable charge. Memphis Freight Bureau v. K. C. S. Ry. Co., 17 I. C. C. 90, 92.

(j) The fact, that refrigeration services are furnished by a company independent of the carrier, but which while independent in theory is in fact the property of the railroad upon which it operates, does not prevent the Commission from determining the reasonableness of the refrigeration charge exacted by the railroad, but it should be determined exactly as though the service were rendered by the railroad company itself. Arlington Heights Fruit Exchange v. S. P. Co., 29 I. C. C. 106, 109.

(k) The Commission at one time held that excessive icing charges exacted because of misrouting are not within the jurisdiction of the Commission. It is doubtful however, if at this time the commission would adhere to such ruling. International Salt Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 543, 545.

(l) Complainant attacked the rates for transportation and refrigeration of strawberries from producing points in Florida to various points in Eastern trunk line territory as unreasonable, and alleged that the facilities for such transportation were inadequate and defective. There were three methods of transporting strawberries from Florida; (1) by express, in crates," as to which no complaint was made; (2) by express in portable refrigerator boxes termed "pony refrigerators," the rate from Plant City, Fla., to New York, N. Y., being $2.49 for 100 lbs. or 7.75c per quart; and (3) by freight, in refrigerator cars, rate $1.83½ and refrigeration charge 72½c per crate, or 8c per quart, minimum 100 crates per car, or rate $1.30 and refrigeration charge 50c per crate or 5.62c per quart, minimum 175 crates. The time schedule from points of origin to New York was about 4½ days. Florida growers competed with Louisiana growers, whose shipments were also made either by freight or express, and reached market the same day as berries shipped from Florida, though the difference in distance was 500 miles in favor of Florida. The freight rate from Hammond, La., to New York was $1.302 per 100 lbs. and the refrigeration rate $72.50 per car, total 2.74c per quart; the express rate $1.89 per 100 lbs. and refrigeration charge 4.19 mills per quart, total 3.41c per quart. The carload minima from southern producing territories differed widely, as follows: From Florida, 100 crates, 5,000 lbs; from Florida, 175 crates, 8,750 lbs; North Carolina, 236 crates, 11,800 lbs; Maryland, 300 crates, 15,000 lbs; East Tennessee, 400 crates, 13,000 lbs; Louisiana, 340 crates, 17,000 lbs. The rates from Florida produced ton mile earnings which were relatively high, but because of the low carload minima the car mile earnings were relatively low. HELD (1) that the rates and refrigeration charges attacked had not been shown to be unreasonable; and (2), following United States v. Penn. R. R., 242 U. S. 208, that the Commission was without authority, in the absence of undue discrimination, to order carriers to acquire equipment of a special type or to require the transportation of refrigerator cars in passenger or special trains. Complaint dismissed. R. R. Commissioners of Florida v. Southern Express Co., 44 I. C. C. 645.

(m) Under Section 15 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended by the Hepburn Act authorizing the Commission to determine whether rates, or practices affecting rates, are unreasonable, to determine what practice in respect to transportation is just, and to require the carriers to conform, that body by power to cancel a tariff withdrawing a precooling privilege previously recognized by it and to require the carrier to conform to its order establishing a certain charge on pre-cooled shipments. II. DUTY TO FURNISH.

(a) It is the duty of the respondent railroad companies engaged as common carriers in transporting fruits from points in Michigan, to furnish refrigerator cars for such service; but such duty arises out of their common-law liability, not under the Act to Regulate Commerce; and redress for failure to fulfill it must be sought in the courts. Re Transportation of Fruit, 10 I. C. C. 360.

(b) Railroad companies are required at common law to furnish suitable facilities for the conduct of the business in which they engage, and it follows that the respondent railroad companies, holding themselves out as carriers of perishable fruit, must provide the necessary refrigerator cars for the transportation of that traffic. Re Charges for Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the Pere Marquette and Michigan Central Railroads, 11 I. C. C. 129.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) A carrier's duty, under the circumstances, is to furnish refrigeration, and the carrier may insist upon furnishing that service exclusively. Arlington Heights Fruit Exchange v. S. P. Co., 20 I. C. C. 106, 116.

(d) Proposed $10 car-rental charge to be applied on certain privately owned refrigerator cars when used in so-called local service from Pittsburgh, Pa., to destinations in c. f. a. territory found not justified. Unjust discrimination would result as the charge would apply only on the lines of the Pennsylvania to points in c. f. a. territory, and not via other lines which also serve the same destination territory from Pittsburgh. Furthermore, the charge is not made or proposed to points on the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburgh to which shipments of the same character may be forwarded from Pittsburgh in cars of identical ownership. Car Rental Charges on Private Line Cars, 74 I. C. C. 107.

(e) Proposed withdrawal of Terminal R. R. Asso., of St. Louis and certain terminal lines from perishable protective tariff and from service of icing and reicing on team tracks, which would subject shippers to increased charges, found not justified. No evidence offered in support of suspended schedules and respondents declared that it was their purpose to cancel them. Elimination of Terminal Lines from Perishable Tariff, 78 I. C. C. 745.

§3. Incidental Service and Charges.

See Additional Charges and Service; Special Rates and Service; Switch Tracks and Switching §5; Transportation.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Refrigerator cars furnished in winter, must be lined and heated in order to protect potatoes in very cold weather. Best Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 33 I. C. C. 1, 2.

(b) An additional charge may be just and reasonable when refrigerator cars are used for transportation of the ice, but it should be added to the rate for transportation of the commodity and not imposed as a mileage charge for the movement of the empty car. (c) The Commission could not with entire confidence find that precooling can take the place of standard refrigeration under all circumstances. Arlington Heights Fruit Exchange v. S. P. Co., 45 I. C. C. 248, 252.

(d) Carriers are entitled, in addition to the actual cost of the ice furnished, to compensation for haulage, cost of supervision, repairs to bunkers and extra switching, and to an allowance for depreciation of cars, damage claims, and profit. §3½. Icing and Re-icing.

(a) When carriers undertake the transportation of perishable traffic requiring refrigeration in transit, ice and the facilities for its transportation in connection with that traffic are incidental to the service of transportation, and the charge therefor is a charge "in connection with" such service within the meaning of section 1 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, in respect to the reasonableness of which the carrier is subject to that provision of the statute. Truck Farmers' Asso. v. Northeastern R. R. Co. et al., 6 I. C. C. 295.

(b) Carriers should, in the opinion of the Commission, be legally compellable to furnish ice for the refrigeration of refrigerator cars used upon their lines, but if it is not part of the obligation of a common carrier to provide such refrigeration, when it does furnish it and at the same time prohibits the shipper from obtaining it from any other source, the charge for refrigeration is part of the total charge for transportation furnished by the carrier, and must be reasonable. Re Transportation, Etc., of Fruit 10 I. C. C. 360, 374.

(c) Icing is not a mere incident to the transportation service, but is a part of the service itself; and a railroad company which holds itself out as a carrier of a commodity which can only move under refrigeration is in duty bound to furnish that refrigeration. Re Charges for the Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the Pere Marquette, Michigan Central Railroads 11 I. C. C. 129.

(d) Where a railroad company insists that ice shall be supplied only by the party whom it appoints, and where it collects from the shipper and passes over to such party the compensation for that service, it must stand responsible for the refrigeration as for any other part of the tranportation. Re Charges for the Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the Pere Marquette & Michigan Central Railroads 11 I. C. C. 129.

(e) Where a railroad company holds itself out as the carrier of a commodity which can only move under refrigeration, its duty extends ordinarily to furnishing that refrigeration, for the icing is not a mere incident to the transportation service, but is a part of the service itself, and properly speaking, it is not ice but refrigeration that the carrier furnishes to accompany the shipment during every movement on its journey. Where the railroad company insists that the ice shall be supplied only by the party whom it appoints, and where it collects from the shipper and passes over to this party the compensation for that service, the railroad company must stand responsible for the refrigeration as for any other part of the transportation. Matter of Charges for Transportation of Fruit, 11 I. C. C. 129, 140.

(f) Delay in prompt movement obviously increases the amount of ice necessary and consequently the charges. It is no sufficient reply to point to the fact that the tariffs provide that the shipper may specify the amount of ice actually to be used. Should there be delay from whatever cause it is apparent that he would desire ample refrigeration for his shipment and hence would hesitate in exercising this option to specify only an amount of ice which would be sufficient for the scheduled time of movement but not sufficient in case of delay. The facts as to the necessities of refrigeration en route lie peculiarly within the knowledge of the carriers as do the ordinary occasions of delay, and it is no hardship to require the carriers to establish and carry in their tariffs a maximum sum for the service of refrigeration beyond which the carrier must pay for excess refrigeration costs, if any. To permit billing for extra ice, sometimes, in considerable sums and on bills rendered long after the shipment, tends, to say the least, to remove incentive to expedited service. Hill v. N. C. & St. L. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 582, 587.

(g) The statute contemplates that carriers may ice in transit as well as perform the entire refrigeration service. The language of the Act is that transportation shall include "all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration, or icing, storage and handling of property transported. Matter of Private Cars, 50 I. C. C. 652, 704.

(h) Charges for reicing should be upon a just basis considering the costs proper to be included such as salt, ice, labor, etc., together with a reasonable profit. In the Matter of Private Cars, 50 I. C. C. 652, 705.

(i) If it should be deemed, after taking the line haul rates into consideration, that the substitution of stated charges is justified, the Commission is not persuaded that it would be in the interest of conservation and economy, or just and reasonable, wholly to deprive shippers of the opportunity to specify the amount of ice which shall be used, or, whatever may be the legal power of the carriers, of the opportunity to supply the initial ice. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 472.

(j) If after taking the line-haul rate into consideration the substitution of stated charges is found justified, the Commission would not still be persuaded that shippers should be wholly deprived of the opportunity to specify the amount of ice which shall be used or of the opportunity to supply the initial ice. Proposals to meet the objection made. Perishable Freight Investigation ,56 I. C. C. 449, 472.

(k) The quantity of ice supplied to shipments under refrigeration is a most important factor in determining the cost of service. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C., 449, 508.

(l) Respondents proposed to increase charges for the icing and reicing of perishable freight on the team tracks at St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill. Present icing charge $4 sought to be increased to $5.50. All reicing at East St. Louis except team track reicing, is performed for the respondents by the Terminal Car Icing Co., which has erected a plant alongside respondents tracks. No increased charges for reicing at the plant is sought. Respondents team track reicing at St. Louis and East St. Louis is done by the Polar Wave Iron & Fuel Co. It is apparent from the testimony that respondents have not made serious efforts to obtain ice for team track icing at less than $5.50. HELD, proposed schedules not justified. Increased Charges for Icing and Reicing Perishable Freight at St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill., 74 I. C. C., 513.

(m) Upon rehearing, findings in former report, 61 I. C. C., 438, modified so as to permit carriers to increase present refrigeration charges on citrus fruits and vegetables from Florida producing points to various interstate destinations, established pursuant to that decision, to extent that they shall not exceed charges based on 85 per cent of the cost-of-ice factor embraced in such charges in effect at the time of the original decision. Railroad Commrs, of Fla. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C. 157.

(n) Refrigeration rates on preserved fruits and berries shipped from Oregon and California points to various destinations throughout the United States found unreasonable to extent they exceeded the contemporaneous deciduous fruit refrigeration rates between the same points. Reparation awarded. National Preserves & Fruit Products Asso. v. A. & S. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 179.

(o) Proposed withdrawal of Michigan R. R. Co., an electric line, as a participating carrier from perishable protective tariff, thereby increasing refrigeration charges on fresh fruits from Saugatuck, Mich., to Chicago, Ill., and other destinations, and which would result in undue prejudice to shippers of fresh fruit from Saugatuck and give undue preference and advantage to their competitors at Fennville, Mich., found not justified.

Elimination of Michigan R. R. Co. from Fruit Tariff, 74 I. C. C. 228.

(p) Proposed increased charges for icing and reicing cars containing perishable freight on team tracks of Terminal R. R. Asso. at St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill., to the basis of cost to carrier of ice at these points, found not justified. Carrier made no attempt to secure ice at lower cost, and destruction of the uniform charge for icing by zones would mean a return to the cost-of-ice basis, making the charges different at each point and resulting in congestion of traffic at points where the cost of ice is lowest. Charges for Icing and Reicing Perishable Freight, 74 I. C. C. 513.

(q) Shipment of pears moved without instructions as to icing. Subsequently complainant instructed "to ice car full capacity at St. Louis, if possible." Car had passed St. Louis and icing was performed at Kansas City, Kans. HELD: Though no instructions given to ice at Kansas City, no affirmative order was given that if refrigeration could not be commenced at St. Louis, it was not to be commenced at some farther distant point. Carrier reasonably complied with request of complainant, and refrigeration charges were not unreasonable or illegal Lutz v. C., R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 524.

(r) Cars initially iced by shipper and moved with instructions on bills of lading "Do not re-ice. Keep vents closed." Tariffs named stated refrigeration charge and provided that "When shippers instruct that commodities loaded in cars, tanks or which contain ice, are not to be re-iced in transit, full refrigeration rates will apply." HELD: No good reason appears why complainant should have been compelled to pay stated refrigeration charges for service not received and specifically directed not to be furnished. Compulsory protective service and attendant cost under such circumstances found not justifiable and reparation awarded. Palmer Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 371.

(s) Proposed increased charges for icing c. l. shipments of perishable freight on team tracks at Boston, Mass., to basis of cost to carrier, found not justified. Team track icing comprises a relatively small part of respondent's icing service, and record does not disclose that they may not be deriving ample revenue from that service taken as a whole. Protective Service on Perishable Freight, 81 I. C. C. 155, 156, 159.

(t) The New Haven and the Central of New England, proposed to cancel a rule providing that less carload rates include the service of icing, when necessary, on interstate shipments of milk, cream, buttermilk, skim milk, condensed and evaporated milk, and pot cheese, moving in milk or refrigerator cars. The proposed cancellation represented an attempt by respondents to discontinue a tariff provision established pursuant to order in 45 I. C. C. 412. The scale prescribed in this order had the effect of reducing rates on less carload milk for hauls under 270 miles and of increasing those for greater distances. Prior to 1912 when the icing charge was first established, respondents tariffs made no reference to the refrigeration of milk. Respondents did not then, and do not now, possess facilities for performing the service. At no time since respondents have held themselves out to ice less carload shipments have they been requested to do so by the shippers. The cancellation of the icing provision would have the effect of increasing the rates on less carloads of these commodities and would destroy the uniformity of rates and regulations which were prescribed in New York case supra by allowing respondents to publish and maintain a rule different from all other carriers serving the same general territory. The evidence is not convincing that the present rates are less than reasonable. HELD, suspended rates not justified. Icing of milk, cream, and other dairy products, 87 I. C. C. 634.

III. REASONABLENESS OF CHARGES

See Reasonableness of Rates.

(a) HELD, under the evidence in this case, (1) that on shipments of strawberries from Charleston to Jersey City the charge of 2 cents per quart for refrigeration en route is excessive, that the charge therefor should not exceed 1½ cents, and that the total charge per quart for the service of transportation on such shipments and necessary services "in connection therewith," including refrigeration, should not be in excess of 6 cents per quart; (2) that 1.4 cents per package should be deducted from the rate on vegetables shipped in standard barrels or barrel crates from Charleston to Jersey City in cases where the delivery of such vegetables has been changed from New York to Jersey City without a change in rates; and (3) that the rate on cabbages shipped in standard barrels or barrel crates from Charleston to Jersey City or New York should not exceed ¾ of the rate on potatoes so shipped. Truck Farmers' Asso. v. Northeastern R. R. Co. et al., 6 I. C. C. 295.

(b) Upon all the facts and circumstances, including, on the one hand, the difficulties and liability to loss attending the production and shipment of peaches, and, on the other hand, the large percentage of cars loaded above the prescribed minimum weights for carloads, for which excess no charge is made by the carriers, the exceptional character of the service, which involves fast time and prompt delivery at destination, the carriage of a large amount of nonpaying freight, return of cars without loads, and many other conditions relating to the highly perishable nature of the traffic,—HELD, that neither the minimum carload weight nor the transportation charge established by the defendants engaged in the carriage of peaches in refrigerator cars from Georgia points to New York, based upon a rate of 81 cents from Atlanta to New York, is unreasonable or unjust. Georgia Peach Growers' Asso. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 255.

(c) Carriers should, in the opinion of the Commission, be legally compellable to furnish ice for the refrigerator cars used upon their lines; but if it is not part of the obligation of the common carrier to provide such refrigeration, when it does furnish it, and at the same time prohibits the shipper from obtaining it from any other source, the charge for refrigeration is part of the total charge for transportation furnished by the carrier, and must be reasonable. Re Transportation of Fruit 10 I. C. C. 360.

(d) A reasonable refrigeration charge on Michigan fruit shipped to interstate destinations from points in Michigan, when based upon the ice actually used, would be $2.50 per ton. Re Charges for the Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the Pere Marquette & Michigan Central Railroads 11 I. C. C. 129.

(e) Refrigeration, being incumbent upon the carrier as part of the transportation, the charge for that service stands like any other charge for transportation. It is the duty of the carrier to publish, file with the Commission, and observe its refrigeration charges; and the Commission has the same jurisdiction to inquire into the justice and reasonableness of such charges as of any other charge for the transportation of passengers or property. Re Charges for Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the Pere Marquette & Michigan Central Railroads, 11 I. C. C. 129.

(f) A reasonable refrigeration charge on Michigan fruit shipped to interstate destinations from points in Michigan, when based upon the ice actually used, would be $2.50 per ton, and reasonable and just charges, if made by the ton, are also found and stated for the service from Michigan to the destinations involved. As a result of this investigation the Michigan Central R. Co. has established for the present season the reasonable charge of $2.50 per ton for ice actually used, and that company is dismissed from the proceeding. The Pere Marquette R. Co., while under contract to continue its use of Armour cars during the present season, has made reductions in its refrigeration charges amounting to from 15 to 30 per cent to apply during this season, and has filed a statement with the Commission that it intends for the season of 1906 to purchase or lease its own equipment and also furnish refrigeration at $2.50 per ton for the ice used in transit. For reasons stated, including the consideration that the Commission is without authority to fix rates for the future, an order should not be issued at this time. Matter of Charges for Transportation of Fruit 11 I. C. C. 129.

(g) Complainant attacked rates charged for transporting peaches, carloads, from Macon and Atlanta, Ga., to Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Md., Philadelphia, Pa., and New York City as unreasonable. Rates charged to Washington and Baltimore 78c, to Philadelphia and New York 81c. Minimum weight is 20,000 and 22,500 pounds on 36 and 40 foot cars, while a minimum of about 23,000 pounds is in effect on cars for refrigeration; that in addition to the above rates a charge of 12½c per crate is exacted on the basis of the last named minimum carload, irrespective of the size of the car; that defendants refused to furnish suitable refrigeration on less carload shipments; that a penalty of $5 per day is made upon failure to load a car within 24 hours of the time car is placed. HELD, rates charged and refrigeration charge of 12½c unjust and that defendants practices in using one minimum carload requirement for transportation service other than refrigeration and a different minimum carload for refrigeration service is also unreasonable; rate should not exceed 76c to Philadelphia and New York and 73c to Baltimore and Washington, minimum to apply 20,000 for 36 foot cars and 22,500 pounds for 40 foot cars, and refrigeration should not exceed 11c per crate; $5 charge penalty not unreasonable. J. J. Waxelbaum & Co. v. A. C. L. R. R. 12 I. C. C. 178.

(h) Strawberries from Chattanooga and points between Chattanooga and Oakdale, Tenn., to Cincinnati, O., reduced from 17½ cents per crate for transportation, and 9½ cents per crate for refrigeration, with carload minimum of 450 crates, reduced to 12½ cents per crate for freight and 9½ cents for refrigeration, with same carload minimum. American Fruit Union of Cincinnati v. C. N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 411.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(i) The mere assertion that an advance is necessary to meet the demands of a refrigeration car company for use of its equipment is not justification for advancing refrigeration charges. In re Advances on Fruits and Vegetables, 24 I. C. C. 164, 165.

(j) Cost of service is a factor in refrigeration that seems to vary with the location of the shipping points and the source and cost of ice. In re Advances on Fruit and Vegetables, 24 I. C. C. 164, 166.

(k) Where refrigeration service is an entirety, where that service is wholly under the control of the carrier which determines when ice should be supplied and in what quantities, so that the shipper can neither direct the use nor name the amount used; where that amount depends upon the manner in which the car is handled by the railroad company itself, the charge should be the gross sum for the entire service, and a tariff which requires the shipper to pay for the amount of ice consumed in the reicing is unjust and unreasonable and unduly discriminatory between different shippers. The carrier may protect itself against any undue delay on the part of the shipper in loading the car after it has been iced and placed for loading by a charge in the nature of a demurrage charge of so much per day or hour beyond a time fixed within which the car should be loaded, provided, always, that this, as well as the refrigeration charge itself is just and reasonable. Crutchfield & Woolfolk v. S. P. Co., 24 I. C. 651, 653.

(l) Voluntary reduction of refrigeration rates to meet carrier competition does not establish that previous rate was unreasonable. Wattam v. N. P. Ry. Co., 37 I. C. C. 101, 102.

(m) The carriers are entitled, in addition to the actual cost of the ice furnished, to compensation for the haulage of the ice, the cost of supervision, repairs to bunkers and extra switching, to an allowance for depreciation of cars, damage claims, and profit. Loretz, Pegram & Co. v. S. P. Co., 51 I. C. C. 159.

(n) All cost incidental to the extra and special service of refrigeration should be taken into account in fixing a reasonable refrigeration charge, subject to the qualification that where the freight rate already included full compensation for these extra and special services the shipper should not again be required to pay for them in the form of separate charges. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 467.

(o) The cost-of-ice basis does not purport to cover entire cost of refrigeration service, as no allowance is made for haulage of the ice, "bunker damage," or supervision. It is intended to cover only cost of obtaining the ice and placing it in bunkers, including switching of cars. Where basis is in effect, no compensation is received for other factors of refrigeration cost, unless obtained through line-haul rates. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C., 449, 470.

(p) Refrigeration charges can not be based upon efficiency, for no such standard is recognizable; nor is there means of measuring cars in terms of the standard if one could be determined. Even if practicable, such a method of fixing charges would not be just and reasonable. While carriers have been slow to improve, information is not sufficient to warrant a finding that they should be penalized for neglect. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C., 449, 489.

(q) Extra switching made necessary by refrigeration service is a proper factor in estimating its cost, and rate of 35 cents per switch seems well within reason. There is doubt in regard to the actual number of switching movements entailing additional expense and it seems that on the whole, the estimates of this factor of cost are not unreasonable. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 503.

(r) In practice a zone system is necessary for icing, for if the charges varied at every station the traffic would seek the routes where the cost was lowest and congestion would result. Increased Charges for Icing and Reicing Perishable Freight at St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill., 74 I. C. C., 513, 514.

(s) Tariff provided for furnishing of ice and salt for refrigeration throughout c. f. a. territory at carrier's expense. Subsequently rule was adopted for purpose of assessing such charges upon consignor or consignee, creating conflict with the preexisting rule on this point. HELD: Intention of tariff compilers is not controlling, it being well settled that where a tariff contains conflicting provisions the one according the lowest rates or charges governs, and particularly when the rule producing the lower rate or charge was first in effect and has not been legally cancelled. Charges assessed found illegal and reparation awarded. Swift & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 678.

(t) Cars initially iced by shipper and moved with instructions on bills of lading "Do not re-ice. Keep vents closed." Tariffs named stated refrigeration charge and provided that "When shippers instruct that commodities loaded in cars, tanks of which contain ice, are not to be re-iced in transit, full refrigeration rates will apply." HELD: No good reason appears why complainant should have been compelled to pay stated refrigeration charges for service not received and specifically directed not to be furnished. Compulsory protective service and attendant cost under such circumstances found not justifiable and reparation awarded. Palmer Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 371.

(u) Finding in original report, 61 I. I. C. C. 183, that through charges, less allowance for ice and salt furnished by complainant, on certain interstate shipments of perishable freight were not unreasonable, affirmed on further hearing. Complainant's claim involves adequacy of tariff allowance for transportation service undertaken by it, and under section 15, paragraph (13), of the act, the Commission is not authorized to increase an allowance merely because it is inadequate to cover cost to shipper whom carrier has employed to perform the service. Cambria Steel Co., 64 I. C. C. 737, 740. Swift & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 677.

(v) Respondents proposed certain changes in National Perishable Protective Tariff I. C. C. 1 83 I. C. C. 275 covered the proposed changes with the exception of paragraph M of Rule 200 A. This rule reads as follows: When shipments are tendered for transportation in refrigerator cars and shipper has placed ice on top of load, the shipment will be considered as moving under refrigeration, and the rules and charges as provided in this section of the tariff will apply. No allowance will be made for the cost of icing placed on top of load. Whether shipper elects to bill cars "Do not re-ice" carriers will initially ice bunkers at first available icing station, and shipment will be handled under the provisions of rule 240 of tariff. Under this method the shippers save and the carriers lose the stated refrigeration charge of $90 per car. The weight of the ice in the crates amounts to 6,400 pounds or more per car. It is said that crate icing is indispensable for the transportation of lettuce from the Imperial Valley to the east, whether it moves with or without standard refrigeration. It is conceded that the damage to the cars from moisture caused by top icing can not be separated from that due to crate icing. The ice in the crates does not melt quite as rapidly as that placed on top of the load, and some of the meltage from the crate ice is retained in the package, but crate icing does wet the floors and apparently affect the cars in a manner similar to that already described. The rates for the transportation of lettuce and other vegetables from California were established many years ago before the practice of top icing was started, and the only changes therein since that practice began have been the general increases and reductions which affect the general level of rates throughout the country. The Commission agrees with respondents that they did not take into consideration the damage to their cars from top icing in fixing the transportation rates. The Commission believes the respondents are entitled to compensation for the haulage of ice placed on top of the load and for the damage caused thereby to their equipment. The Commission sees no reason why rule 240 should not be amended so as to make the charges applicable when shipments move with ice in the crates and on top of the load, instead of in the bunkers. The weight of the ice hauled on top of the load is not as great as the weight of the ice that is used in bunkers, but the damage to the body of the car for ice placed therein is probably greater than the damage to the bunkers in the case of bunker icing. It is suggested that in case a charge is assessed for ice haulage and damage to equipment on shipments moving under top icing, a limit should be placed on the amount of icing that may be used on top of the load, and 5,000 pounds would be a reasonable maximum. HELD, proposed paragraph M of rule 200 A not justified. Rules for Protective Service on Perishable Freight, 89 I. C. C. 87.

(w) Complainant attacked $4 per ton for ice and 75c per 100 pounds for salt collected for refrigeration of butter, eggs, and dressed poultry, in straight or mixed carloads, from Nebraska, Wisconsin and other states to destinations in official classification territory between August 1 and Dec. 31, 1919, as not authorized. In 77 I. C. C. 678, the Commission found that similar charges during the same period were inapplicable. HELD, charges attacked illegal, reparation awarded. Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Director General, 89 I. C. C. 359.

(a) The respondent railroad companies may provide refrigerator cars by purchase or by lease, and if the latter plan is adopted they may make contracts with one company which exclude the use of cars owned by other companies. Re Transportation, Etc., of Fruit. 10 I. C. C. 360.

(b) Railroad companies are required at common law to furnish suitable facilities for the conduct of the business in which they engage, and it follows that the respondent railroad companies, holding themselves out as carriers of perishable fruit, must provide the necessary refrigerator cars for the transportation of that traffic. Matter of Charges for Transportation of Fruit. 11 I. C. C. 129.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) Tariffs should indicate clearly in what instances and under what conditions refrigeration will be furnished for less-than-carload freight; and where such service is rendered and charges are assessed therefor the tariff should so provide, stating the amount of the charges. Sulzberger & Sons Co. v. M. St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 40 I. C. C. 173, 175.

(d) Refrigeration charges on shipments of fresh fruits and vegetables are not paid to the carriers, but to refrigeration companies, and in no way adds to the revenues of the carriers. Southwestern Dairy Products, 44 I. C. C. 379, 383.

(e) Provision in tariff that freight would be subject to rules and regulations of individual lines relating to car service, switching, reconsignments and storage may not be interpreted as authorizing charge for use of refrigerator cars. Vallance v. N. P. Ry. Co., 45 I. C. C. 131, 132.

(f) Bunker capacities of refrigerator cars now in use vary greatly and are related more or less closely to the age of the car. Larger cars are now constructed than formerly and the capacity of the bunkers in the newer cars is proportionately greater than in the old. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C., 499, 515.

(g) Many refrigerator cars in use are antiquated and so defective that they are very wasteful of ice. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C., 449, 457, 613.

§4½a. Private Refrigerator Cars.

(a) A railroad company may provide refrigerator cars by purchase or by lease, and if the latter plan is adopted they may make contracts with one company which exclude the use of cars owned by other companies. Re Transportation of Fruit 10 I. C. C. 360.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Proposed $10 car-rental charge to be applied on certain privately owned refrigerator cars when used in so-called local service from Pittsburgh, Pa., to destinations in c. f. a. territory, found not justified. Unjust discrimination would result as the charge would apply only on the lines of the Pennsylvania to points in c. f. a. territory, and not via other lines which also serve the same destination territory from Pittsburgh. Furthermore, the charge is not made or proposed to points on the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburgh to which shipments of the same character may be forwarded from Pittsburgh in cars of identical ownership. Car Rental Charges on Private Line Cars, 74 I. C. C. 107.

IV. TARIFFS AND PUBLICATION.

See Tariffs.

§4¾. In general.

(a) When charges for refrigeration are applied in the transportation of perishable freight, such charges should be published and adhered to exactly as all other charges for transportation are published and observed. The same considerations of justice and public policy which require this in case of the freight rate apply to the charge for refrigeration. In the matter of Charges for the Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the P. M. and M. C. 10 I. C. C. 360, 374.

(b) Whether or not the regulating statute applies to refrigeration charges in all cases, the defendants, by compelling shippers to pay icing charges on citrus fruits as established by the car lines or do without necessary refrigeration for the traffic, have made these charges part of the cost of transportation and subject to regulation under the law. Consolidated Forwarding Company v. Southern Pacific Co., 10 I. C. C. 590, 615.

§5. Obligation to File.

(a) When charges for refrigeration are applied in the transportation of perishable freight, such charges should be published and adhered to exactly as all other charges for transportation are published and observed. The same considerations of justice and public policy which require this in case of the freight rate apply to the charge for refrigeration. Re Transportation, Etc., of Fruit 10 I. C. C. 360.

(b) Refrigeration, being incumbent upon the carrier as part of the transportation, the charge for that service stands like any other charge for transportation. It is the duty of the carrier to publish, file with the Commission, and observe its refrigeration charges; and the Commission has the same jurisdiction to inquire into the justice and reasonableness of such charges as of any other charge for the transportation of passengers or property. Re Changes for the Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit Shipped from Points on the Pere Marquette & Michigan Central Railroad 11 I. C. C. 129.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) The practice of a carrier in charging for re-icing fish in transit where there is no tariff provision therefor is unlawful. Bannon v. Southern Express Co., 13 I. C. C. 516, 520.

(d) Where a carrier's tariff makes no provision for refrigeration charges and the defendant collects an excessive charge, the Commission has no authority to authorize the return of the whole payment but only of the excess above a reasonable charge. (Cockrell, Comm'r, dissenting.) Memphis Freight Bureau v. K. C. S. Ry. Co., 17 I. C. C. 90, 92.

(e) Where refrigeration is furnished for less-than-carload freight and charges are assessed therefor, the tariff should so show. Sulzberger & Sons Co. v. M. St. P. & S. Ste. M. Ry., 40 I. C. C. 173, 175.

(f) A carrier cannot recover refrigeration charges on an interstate shipment under any expressed or implied contract without making publishing and filing fixed and definite rates therefor. Cudahy Packing Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 215 Fed. 94, 93.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Complainant attacked charges collected for ice and salt furnished at points throughout central territory on shipments of dressed poultry, butter and eggs in straight and mixed carloads, from, and through central territory between August 1, 1919, and Feb. 4, 1920, as not authorized by tariffs and illegal. Prior to August 1, 1919, the carriers furnished without additional charge the ice and salt used in the refrigeration of shipments of butter, cheese, eggs, dressed poultry, fish, game, and other perishable freight throughout central territory, and provided in their tariffs that they would furnish, on special orders, refrigerator cars for the loading, at one point of origin, by one shipper, to one destination of these commodities subject to a minimum of 15,000 pounds for each car. During that time there were no carload rates on butter, eggs, dressed poultry and cheese, but an any quantity basis applied which was first class on dressed poultry, second class on butter and eggs and third class on cheese. Effective on that date under 53 I. C. C. 59, the carriers established third class rates on butter, butterine, oleomargarine, poultry and eggs, in straight or mixed carloads. On Jan. 1, 1920, all central territory lines provided by appropriate tariff publication that ice and salt would not be furnished without additional cost to shippers except on perishable commodities moving at less carload rates, and since that date the charges for salt and ice have been collected on all carload shipments. It may have been the intention of the tariff compilers to provide for the assessment of charges for ice and salt when the carload rating was established, but that intention was not effectuated until the rules were amended to limit the furnishing of ice and salt without additional cost to the shipper on traffic moving at less than carload rates. HELD, charges collected for ice and salt furnished on carload shipments illegal, reparation awarded. Swift & Co. v. Director General 77 I. C. C. 678.

(c) Complainant attacked defendants application of certain provisions in Fairbanks tariff 1 I. C. C. 6 as without authority and illegal. Under the carriers interpretation of the tariff, a charge is made for refrigeration service in connection with shipments from complainants plants of fresh meats and packing house products initially iced by consignor and delivered to the carrier with instructions not to reice in transit. The initial question is one of tariff interpretation. It is clear that the words, also perishable freight n. o. i. b. n., in the table in section 2 of the tariff is intended to cover, and does cover fresh meats and provided in rule 240 A of the tariff are packing house products. HELD, charges applicable on fresh meats and packing house products from complainants plants initially iced by consignor and delivered to the carrier with instructions not to reice in transit. The record shows as to the unreasonableness of the charges that the cost of ice basis is uniformally applied throughout the country to carload shipments of fresh meats and packing house products, except from points in the six westernmost states; and that the charges provided for in special rule 240 A are not applied to shipments like those made by complainants, except from points in those states; that stated charges for refrigeration service were applied to fresh meats and packing house products from points in the six westernmost states prior to the establishment of perishable tariff No. 1, but only when the shipments were initially iced by the carrier. When they were initially iced by the shipper and forwarded with instructions not to reice in transit, no charges similar to those provided in rule 240 A nor any other refrigeration charges were assessed. Special rule 240 A introduced new charges which had never been applied to fresh meats and packing house products in any part of the country. HELD, defendants have clearly failed to sustain the burden of proof which was upon them to justify the increased charges resulting from the application of rule 240 A. HELD, rates charged under Rule 240 A unreasonable, reparation awarded. Frye & Company v. G. N. Ry. 88 I. C. C. 477.

§9. Liability for Damage.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Rule 200, clause (G), providing that when shippers elect to tender freight loaded in cars the bunkers, tanks, or body of which contain ice with instruction "Not under refrigeration, do not ice" (or when shipper neglects to give any refrigeration instructions), such instructions will be ignored and full stated refrigeration charges will be applied, and bunkers and tanks will be given the necessary icing or reicing, should be eliminated. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C., 449, 574.

(b) Rule 225, limiting half-tank refrigeration service to citrus fruits from Florida, should be revised to include apples from Virginia and fruits from Michigan, formerly afforded; and clause (B), providing that shipments will be transported solely at owner's risk of loss and damage resulting from insufficient refrigeration not caused by carrier's negligence, should be eliminated. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 586.

(c) Rule 410, of special rules and regulations governing service of icing and reicing, relative to initial icing by shipper, in which carriers claim exemption from liability in the circumstances therein described, should be eliminated. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C., 449, 592.

REFRIGERATOR LINES

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) In Transportation Act 1920, §209, subd. (a), defining carriers entitled to the guaranty prescribed by that act, the reference to systems of transportation under federal control at the time such control terminated cannot be considered apart from the words "carrier by railroad," which precede the former expression in the same sentence, and do not extend the guaranty to a refrigerator car company, which had been under federal control, but was not a carrier by railroad. United States v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 288 Fed. 649.

(b) While the failure of a refrigerator car company to file tariffs with the Interstate Commerce Commission is not proof that it is not a common carrier, it is evidence tending to show that it did not regard itself as such. United States v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 288 Fed. 649.

(c) A company which owned refrigerator cars, which it leased to railroad companies, and which at times solicited traffic and issued its own bills of lading, but which was not incorporated as a carrier, owned no railroad lines or motive power, and did not hold itself out to perform carriage by publishing rates applicable thereto, is not a "carrier by railroad," within Transportation Act 1920, §209, guaranteeing a minimum return to such carriers for a six months period, especially in view of the fact that Congress deemed it necessary expressly to include sleeping car companies within the act, thereby implying that such companies were not otherwise covered by its terms. United States v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 288 Fed. 649.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Carriers made no specific reference in the tariff to the Commission's order authorizing the publication of rates based on value as required by section 20 of the act, and if they desire to continue such the tariff should be accordingly corrected. Meridian Traffic Bureau v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 549, 550.

(b) The purpose of the second Cummins amendment was to restore the law of full liability as it existed prior to the Carmack Amendment of 1916, so that when property is lost or damaged in the course of transportation under such circumstances as to make the carrier liable recovery is had for full value or on the basis of full value. Gold Hunter Mining Co. v. N. P. 63 I. C. C. 234, 242.

(c) Under the act, as now amended, the Commission can not fairly or effectively differentiate between released rates and rates based on actual value, for the reason that carriers can have no knowledge of the actual value except as declared by the shipper. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. 69 I. C. C. 235, 241.

(d) Tariffs provided for revision of freight charges on ore in accordance with value based upon smelter returns after assay at destination. HELD: Rates based upon values determined after arrival at destination, where there is no provision for declaration of value upon bill of lading, or for agreement with respect to limitation of liability, are not within purview of section 20 of the act. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 753, 755.

(e) Rates on ordinary live stock which attempt to limit liability, whether published in form of released rates or rates based on values declared by shippers, can not be authorized or sanctioned by the Commission for reasons stated in Express Rates, Practices, Accounts, and Revenues, 43 I. C. C. 510 and Live Stock Classification, 47 I. C. C. 335. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 738, 739.

§1. Jurisdiction of Commission.

See Jurisdiction of Commission.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) It is doubtful whether the Commission has power to require carriers to publish a rate on burnt cotton released to a valuation of 5c a lb., such rate to be lower than on other cotton. Lesser v. Ga. R. R., 18 I. C. C. 478, 480.

(b) If rates on ordinary live stock dependent upon declared value could lawfully be maintained without authorization by the Commission there might and probably would be instances in which conflict would arise as between the liability imposed by the Act upon the carrier and the prohibitions of section 10 of the Act affecting shippers. Released Rates, 43 I. C. C. 510, 513.

(c) Under the Act, as now amended, we can not fairly or effectively differentiate between released rates and rates based on actual value, for the reason that carriers can have no knowledge of the actual value, for the reason that carriers can have no knowledge of the actual value except as declared by the shipper. Williams Co. v. N. Y. Transfer Co., 48 I. C. C. 269, 274.

(d) The Cummins amendment requires rates on domestic traffic based on value to be expressly authorized by the Commission before they can be regarded lawful. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co. v. G. M. & N. Ry., 50 I. C. C. 32, 33.

(e) The second Cummins amendment placed rates and ratings dependent upon the value "declared in writing by the shipper" and those predicated on the value "agreed upon in writing as the released value of the property" in the same category; such rates and ratings are unlawful unless and until expressly authorized by the Commission. Express Rates, 43 I. C. C. 510; Live Stock Classification, 47 I. C. C. 335; Williams Co., 48 I. C. C. 269, reaffirmed and followed. Silk Asso. of American v. P. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 50, 53.

(f) The maintenance of rates on ordinary live stock in terms of value subsequent to the amendment of the Act by the Cummins amendment of August 9, 1916, was unlawful. Wilson & Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 50 I. C. C. 126, 129.

(g) If a carrier desires to carry rates on ore based upon declared or released values it should seek approval of rules that will clearly effect the purpose and be free from question as to conformity with the Cummins amendment. Climax Molybdenum Co. v. Director General, 61 I. C. C. 369, 371.

(h) Nothing in either the first or second Cummins amendments contemplates establishment by the Commission of rates graded to correspond with actual value, ascertained after shipment has been delivered and consequently after the carriers' liability has ended, and it was not necessary for carriers to secure the Commission's authorization to publish rates based on gross value, and therefore such rates were not unlawful under section 20 of the act. Gold Hunter Mining Co. v. N. P. Ry. Co., 63 I. C. C. 234, 243.

(i) Following U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co., 68 I. C. C. 389, and other cases, limitations attached to rates on newsprint paper, dependent upon value, and published without the commission's authorization, found unlawful and void, but such rates found lawful and applicable. Waco Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 708, 709.

(j) Tariff provided for commodity rates on granite when of value not in excess of prescribed amounts and for application of class rates when of greater value, such restrictions having been published without authority from Commission. Shipments of greater value than prescribed moved at specified class rates. HELD, since no authority granted under second Cummins amendment to section 20 of the act for publication of rates on this traffic dependent upon value, limitations were void but commodity rates were lawful and applicable. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Bloom & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I .C. C. 283.

„(k) Request for leave to amend complaint, to seek reparation, to basis of declared values during period when there were no "declared value" or released rates in effect between points involved, denied. Question of what value might have been declared if such rates had been in effect with permission or authority of Commission under section 20 of the act, would be hypothetical. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 753, 755.

(l) It is not necessary for carriers to secure the commissions authorization under the second Cummins amendment in order to publish rates based upon smelter returns at destination when there is no tariff provision for declaration or agreement as to value. Gold Hunter Mining Co., 63 I. C. C., 234. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 255, 257.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Carriers must establish and afford to all shippers rates that are reasonable and unconditional as to the amount of the carrier's liability in case of loss or damage. In some instances it is reasonable to make varying rates on the same commodity, dependent on the value thereof. This is true where there is a wide range of actual value in the different grades or qualities of the same article. In such cases, where the carrier has established different rates, depending upon difference in actual value, the valuation by the shipper becomes a part of the description of the article shipped, and if he misrepresents the value to procure a rate applicable to the grade or quantity of less value than that actually shipped, it is in the nature of a false description of the property. Norcross Bros. Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 29 I. C. C. 109, 112.

(b) The Cummins Amendment has abolished in interstate commerce the whole system of released rates based on agreed valuation as distinguished from actual value. Iowa Railroad Commissioners v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 36 I. C. C. 79, 81.

(c) Carrier's agent has sufficient knowledge as to true value of shipper's product to require notation "Value over $100 per net ton" to be placed on bills of lading to prevent misdescription. This was in no sense 'the value declared or agreed upon in writing as the released value of the property" within the purview of the second Cummins amendment. Billing so indorsed does not limit recovery of the full actual value whatever it might be. Climax Molybdenum Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 61 I. C. C. 369, 371.

(d) To require shippers to mark the value on packages, when shipments are subject to rates based on value, would seem to be in the interest of operating efficiency and not unreasonable, but if carriers desire to enforce such a regulation, it should be plainly stated in its schedules and uniformly observed. Viscose Co. v. American Ry. Express Co., 62 I. C. C. 32, 33, 34, 35.

(e) Commodity rates were prepaid on alcohol of an "actual value not exceeding $2.50 per gallon." Subsequently on the ground that actual value exceeded $2.50 per gallon charges were corrected to the basis of class rates applicable on alcohol without limitation as to value. HELD: Limitations attached to commodity rates were unlawful and void under the Cummins amendment but such commodity rates were lawful and applicable as to these shipments, as commodity rates take preference over class rates and specific commodity rates take preference over general commodity rates. Shipments found overcharged and refund directed. U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 389.

(ea) Released rates and rates based on declared values limit the liability of carriers for loss, damage, or injury to property transported. If carriers could lawfully base rates upon declared values, the value declared would be a part of the description of the commodity and the shipper who, by undervaluing, secured a lower rate than he was entitled to would be guilty of violating section 10 of the act, and, by claiming full value in case of loss or damage, would subject himself to prosecution. North Packing & Prov. Co. v. C. M. & S. P. Ry. Co., 69 I. C. C. 241.

(eb) When there are two published rates, based upon differences in value, the legal rate automatically attaches itself to the declared or agreed value, and neither the intentional nor accidental misstatement of the applicable published rate will bind the carrier or shipper. Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Carl, 33 Sup. Ct. 391, 395; 227 U. S. 639.

(f) Released Rates can not be effectively differentiated from rates based on values declared by shippers, and without such differentiation it necessarily follows that rates based on declared values, as well as released rates, limit or attempt to limit liability of carriers for loss, damage, or injury to property transported. In case of released rates attempt is direct, whereas in case of rates based on declared values attempt is indirect, but quite as effective. North Packing & Provisions Company v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. 80 I. C. C. 737, 739.

(g) Rates based on values declared by shippers are not in form released rates. The purpose of both Cummins amendments to section 20 of the act, however, was to make not only limitations of liability attached to released rates unlawful and void unless such rates were authorized by the commission, but to make unlawful and void, unless so authorized, all attempted limitations of liability for loss, damage, or injury to property transported, whatever the form of the attempted limitation. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C., M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 738, 739.

(h) Rates based on declared values, as well as released rates limit or attempt to limit liability of carriers for loss, damage or injury to property transported. In the case of released rates the attempt is direct, whereas in the case of rates based on declared values the attempt is indirect, but quite as effective. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 739.

(i) Complainant attacked rates on ordinary livestock between August 9, 1916 and March 9, 1918. During this period carriers generally maintained rates on livestock dependent upon value.

When the value per head, as declared by the shipper, did not exceed a specified amount, which varied in the different classifications, the standard or basic rate applied. When a higher value was declared, a fixed percentage of increase, dependent upon the value so declared, was added to the standard or basic rate. The rates attacked were based on declarations of value made by the shippers and exceeded the standard or basic rates. HELD, the standard or basic rates were applicable, reparation awarded. North Packing and Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737.

(j) As released rates and rates based on values declared by shippers can not be effectively differentiated, it necessarily follows that rates based on declared values, as well as released rates, limit or attempt to limit the liability of carriers for loss, damage, or injury to property transported. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. 69 I. C. C. 235, 241.

(k) Tariff provided for commodity rates on granite, when of value not in excess of prescribed amounts and for application of class rates when of greater value, such restrictions having been published without authority from Commission. Shipments of greater value than prescribed moved at specified class rates. HELD, since no authority granted under second Cummins amendment to section 20 of the act for publication of rates on this traffic dependent upon value, limitations were void but commodity rates were lawful and applicable. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Bloom & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 283.

(l) Upon reargument, findings in former report, 69 I. C. C. 235 that rules and regulations requiring declarations of value by shippers of ordinary live stock and all limitations attached thereby to rates were unlawful and void but that rates, rules and regulations were not unreasonable, discriminatory, or unduly prejudicial, affirmed. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737.

(m) Contention that rates in issue were not released rates, but were based on actual differences in value, and that there is nothing in tariffs publishing the rates which limited liability of defendants for loss, damage, or injury, to live stock transported under such rates, not sustained. None of tariffs provided any means, other than declarations by shippers, by which values of animals shipped were to be determined. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 738.

(n) Released rates can not be effectively differentiated from rates based on values declared by shippers, and without such differentiation it necessarily follows that rates based on declared values, as well as released rates, limit or attempt to limit liability of carriers transported. In case of released rates attempt is direct, whereas in case of rates based on declared values attempt is indirect, but quite effective. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 739.

(o) Rates based on values declared by shippers are not in form released rates. The purpose of both Cummins amendments to section 20 of the act, however, was to make not only limitations of liability attached to released rates unlawful and void unless such rates were authorized by the Commission, but to make unlawful and void, unless so authorized, all attempted limitations of liability for loss, damage, or injury to property transported, whatever the form of attempted limitation. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 738, 739.

(p) An unlawful and void limitation of liability attached to a rate can gain no sanction by tariff publication. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 740.

(q) Tariffs provided for revision of freight charges on ore in accordance with value based upon smelter returns after assay at destination. HELD, rates based upon values determined after arrival at destination where there is no provision for declaration of value upon bill of lading, or for agreement with respect to imitation of liability, are not within purview of section 20 of the act. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 753, 755.

§2. Duty to inform shipper.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The quotation of a released rate should be accompanied with notice of its nature. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 18 I. C. C. 180.

(b) When it is the purpose of carriers to offer different rates applicable to the same commodity, dependent not upon difference in value, but upon release of the carrier's liability for loss and damage, to the extent that this may lawfully be done, the tariffs should provide for the exercise of choice of rates, by means of a statement in the bill of lading, signed by the shipper, that the shipment is released to a value stated in the tariffs. Norcross Bros. Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 29 I. C. C. 109, 113.

(c) The words "just and reasonable" imply the application of good judgment and fairness, of common sense and a sense of justice, to the facts of record, and are not fixed unalterable mathematical terms. Moreover, as has been recognized by the Supreme Court, 206 U. S., 1, 26, there must exist range for "the flexible limit of judgment which belongs to the power to fix rates," and there could be no flexible limit of judgment if all rates were to be measured by their relation to cost or by a predetermined rule. Reparation as Relating to Increase of Rate, 68 I. C. C. 5, 6.

(d) Operating conditions prior to June 25, 1918, on which date rates were increased by the director general, including the retroactive application of the wage award of the Railroad Labor Board, were important factors, but they were not necessarily controlling in determining the reasonableness of rates after January 1 of that year. Reparation as Relating to Increase of Rates, 68 I. C. C. 5, 7.

(e) The commission would not be warranted in announcing any general rule for determining the reasonableness of rates exacted on shipments moving before or after June 25, 1918, on which date rates were increased by the director general, or any other date. In proceedings against the director general, as in all others, the commission must adhere to the sound and salutary principle that whether and to what extent a rate was or is unjust or unreasonable in a particular case is a question of fact, to be determined by the exercise of good judgment, informed by experience, in the light of all the pertinent facts of record. Reparation as Relating to Increase of Rates, 68 I. C. C. 5, 8.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where a carrier's agent had sufficient knowledge as to the true value of shipper's product to require notation "Value over $100 per net ton" to be placed on bills of lading to prevent misdescription. Such notation was in no sense "the value declared or agreed upon in writing as the released value of the property" within the purview of the second Cummins amendment. And billing so indorsed did not limit recovery of the full actual value, whatever it might be. Climax Molybdenum Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 61 I. C. C. 369, 371.

(b) If the shipper desires the lower of two rates based on valuation, he should declare the valuation, for, in the absence of knowledge, the carrier has a right to assume that the higher of the rates based upon value applies. Kansas City S. R. Co., v. Carl, 33 Sup. Ct. 391, 394; 227 U. S. 639.

(a) The rates charged on "household goods" will not be declared unlawful on the mere fact that as a condition of granting them the defendants require the shipper to release all claim for damages in case of loss to the amount of $5.00 per 100 lbs. or $1000.00 per carload of 20,000 lbs., there being no proof showing that such rates are unreasonable in view of said limitation. In cases of loss, the shipper's remedy is at law, and the question of the reasonableness or validity of a contract limiting the carrier's liability is to be determined in the courts on the facts in each case. Duncan v. Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. 4 I. C. R. 385.

(b) The rates charged on "household goods" will not be declared unlawful on the mere fact that as a condition of granting them the defendants require the shipper to release all claim for damages in case of loss to the amount of $5.00 per 100 pounds, or $1,000.00 per carload of 20,000 pounds, there being no proof showing that such rates are unreasonable in view of said limitation. In cases of loss, the shipper's remedy is at law and the question of the reasonableness or validity of a contract limiting the carrier's liability is to be determined in the courts on the facts in each case. Blanton Duncan v. A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co., et al. 6 I. C. C. 85.

(c) That the rates under the common-law liability specified in a rate sheet filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by two carriers engaged in interstate commerce are unreasonable and exorbitant does not render the rates themselves reasonable. The action was by an insurance company to hold the carrier liable for a loss which had occurred while the goods were in its possession, and for which the insurance company reimbursed the owner. The court said: "It is a matter of common knowledge that the great bulk of the freight of the country is now transported under bills of lading limiting the common-law liability of the carrier. It is the exception, and not the rule, for property to be carried under the full common-law liability. Hence, where the difference between the two rates is fixed upon a horizontal percentage basis, it would seem to be a very convenient method to state specifically and in detail only the rates under the uniform (or limited liability) bill of lading under which the great bulk of the business of the country is done, and then state generally the percentage of increase over these rates where goods are transported with the full common-law liability . . . . In this case . . . (the shipper) knew, or is chargeable with knowledge, of the contents of the official classification. . . . With this knowledge, he consented and agreed to ship his property under the uniform bill of lading, and thereby assented to and accepted all its terms and conditions. Mannheim Insurance Co. v. Erie & Western Transportation Co., 8 I. C. C. App. LXVII.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) The Cummins amendment requires rates on domestic traffic, based on value, to be expressly authorized by the Commission before they can be regarded lawfully. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co. v. G. M. & N. Ry., 50 I. C. C. 32, 33.

(e) The law prohibits all limitations upon the carrier's liability for the full loss, damage or injury caused by it to property transported by it, and also all attempts to so limit liability in any form or manner, except when rates dependent upon the value declared in writing by the shipper, or agreed to in writing by the shipper as the released value, are authorized by us. The Commission has held that a rate dependent upon the actual value of the shipment is unlawful, because the carrier cannot know that value except as it is declared by the shipper. The ratings determine the rates and therefore governed by the same law. There are commodities as to which rates and ratings dependent upon declared or released values are proper and desirable. The declaration or the release limits the liability of the carrier to the sum so declared or agreed to. The provisions of the schedules containing such rates or ratings must be clear and in lawful form. The rates and rating must have been authorized or ordered by the Commission. It must be stated as dependent upon the value declared in writing by the shipper, or upon the released value agreed to in writing by the shipper. There can be no such thing as a "declared released value." Consolidated Classification Case, 54 I. C. C. 1, 67.

(f) The first Cummins amendment did not invalidate rates based on actual differences in value. Neither did the second Cummins amendment. The plain and unmistakable purpose of both amendments was to make unlawful and void, except as otherwise provided therein, all attempted limitations of liability for loss, damage, or injury to property transported, without respect to the manner or form in which they are sought to be made. U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co. v. Director General 68 I. C. C. 389, 391.

(g) Complainant attacked rates on carload and less carload shipments of soap from Chicago, Ill., to various points in southern classification territory, made between Nov. 27, 1917 and Dec. 20, 1918 as unlawful under section 20 and unreasonable. The southern classification and commodity tariffs making reference thereto provided for application of sixth class rates, any quantity, or commodity rates less than sixth class, on soap of an actual value not exceeding 12c per pound, the shipper being required to declare in writing at the time of shipment that the actual value did not exceed 12c. When the actual value exceeded 12c per pound, or no value was declared, third class rates applied. In November 1917, general increase in the cost of ingredients entering into the manufacture of soap had made it impossible for complainant to truthfully declare an actual value not in excess of 12c per pound upon grades of soap which formerly had been shipped under such declarations. No authority was granted by the Commission under the second Cummins amendment for publication in terms of value of the rates here attacked. On March 15, 1918, the Cummins amendment authorized ratings based on value in southern classification but they were not made effective by the carriers until Dec. 20, 1918. HELD, sixth class or lower commodity rates, governed by southern classification, were applicable to the shipments, shipments overcharged, reparation awarded. Swift & Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 537.

(h) Rates dependent upon declarations of value made by shippers but not authorized by the Commission under the second Cummins amendment would limit carriers liability, and such limitation as to value is void, but the rates stripped of the void limitation, are valid and applicable. Swift & Co. v. Director General 68 I. C. C. 537, 538.

(ha) Neither the first nor the second Cummins amendment invalidated rates based on actual differences in value. The plain and unmistakable purpose of both amendments was to make unlawful and void, except as otherwise provided therein, all attempted limitations of liability for loss, damage, or injury to property transported, without respect to the manner or form in which they are sought to be made. U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co. v. Director General 68 I. C. C. 389, 391.

(hb) Rates on ordinary live stock based on declarations of value by shippers, and rules and regulations under which such rates were assessed, found not unreasonable, discriminatory, or unduly prejudicial; but rules and regulations requiring declarations of value by shippers of ordinary live stock, and all limitations attached thereby to the rates, found unlawful and void on and after date of approval of the second Cummins amendment. Standard or basic rates found to have been applicable. Reparation awarded. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C., M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 69 I. C. C. 235.

(i) The plain and unmistakable purpose of both Cummins amendments was to make unlawful and void, except as otherwise provided therein, all attempted limitations of liability for loss, damage or injury to property transported. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. 69 I. C. C. 235, 241.

(j) Since there was no authorization for the publication prior to Oct. 1, 1919, of rates dependent upon value, the limitations attached to those rates were void, but the rates were lawful and applicable. Waco Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, 73 I. C. C. 708, 709.

(k) Following U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co., 68 I. C. C. 389, and other cases, limitations attached to rates on newsprint papers, dependent upon value, and published without the commission's authorization, found unlawful and void, but such rates found lawful and applicable. Waco Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 708, 709.

(m) Rates on ordinary live stock which attempt to limit liability, whether published in form of released rates or rates based on value declared by shippers, can not be authorized or sanctioned by the commission for reasons stated in Express Rates, Practices, Accounts, and Revenues, 43 I. C. C. 510 and Live Stock Classification, 47 I. C. C. 335. North Packing & Provisions Company v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 80 I. C. C. 739.

(n) The sole effect of the second Cummins amendment on rates to which were attached limitations of liability, and which were not or could not be authorized by the Commission, was to render unlawful and void the limitations of liability. The rates, stripped of such unlawful and void limitations were not rendered unlawful. What that amendment declares to be unlawful it also declares to be void and it does not declare any rate to be void. Expressed in another way, if there were two or more commodity rates on ordinary livestock at the same time over the same route between the same points, and if the difference in the rates was dependent on the value declared by the shipper, the limitations as to value attached to each of the rates would be unlawful and void and should be treated as not present in the tariff. The rates would remain and would not be unlawful. To determine which of the rates was applicable would be a matter of tariff interpretation. If established at the same time the lower of the rates would be applicable, irrespective of the value of the animals. North Provision & Packing Co. v. C. M. & St. P. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 739.

(o) Rates based on values declared by shippers are not in form released rates. Purpose of both Cummins amendments to section 20 of the act, however, was to make not only limitations of liability attached to released rates unlawful and void unless such rates were authorized by the Commission, but to make unlawful and void, unless so authorized, all attempted limitations of liability for loss, damage, or injury to property transported, whatever the form of the attempted limitation. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 738, 739.

(p) Released rates can not be effectively differentiated from rates based on values declared by shippers, and without such differentiation it necessarily follows that rates based on declared values, as well as released rates, limit or attempt to limit, liability of carriers for loss, damage, or injury to property transported. In case of released rates attempt is direct, whereas in case of rates based on declared value attempt is indirect, but quite as effective. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 739.

(q) An unlawful and void limitation attached to a rate can gain no sanctity by tariff publication. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 740.

(r) Tariffs provided for revision of freight charges on ore in accordance with value based upon smelter returns after essay at destination. HELD, rates based upon values determined after arrival at destination, where there is no provision for declaration of value upon bill of lading, or for agreement with respect to limitation of liability, are not within purview of section 20 of the act. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 753, 755.

(s) Request for leave to amend complaint to seek reparation to basis of declared values during period when there were no "declared-value" or released rates in effect between points involved, denied. Question of what value might have been declared if such rates had been in effect with permission or authority of the Commission under section 20 of the act would be hypothetical. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 753, 755.

(t) Rates on ordinary live stock which attempt to limit liability, whether published in form of released rates or rates based on values declared by shippers, can not be authorized or sanctioned by the Commission for reasons stated in Express Rates, Practices, Accounts, and Revenues, 43 I. C. C. 510, and Live Stock Classification, 47 I. C. C. 335. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 737, 739.

(u) When authorized or required by the commission, rates based upon declared or agreed values are sanctioned by the act. Arlington Silver Mining Co., v. G. N. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 255, 257.

IV. REASONABLENESS.

See Reasonableness of Rates.

§5 In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) If fruit is damaged through negligence of the carrier while in transit there is no reason why the carrier cannot be required to respond in damages to the full amount of the injury sustained without regard to the valuation placed upon it, and defendants' regulation whereby the freight rate on peaches and other fruit from Georgia points is increased in proportion to the carload valuation fixed by the shipper is unreasonable and unjust. Georgia Peach Growers' Asso. v. A. C. L. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 255.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Tariffs should clearly distinguish between rates based on value and rates based on release of carrier's liability to a certain amount. Norcross Bros. Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 29 I. C. C. 109, 112, 113.

(c) A rate based upon agreed value must bear a reasonable relation to the unconditional rate. Louisiana Sugar Planters' Assn. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 31 I C. C. 311, 320.

(d) In 226 U. S. 491, the Supreme Court construed the Carmack amendment and held that, under contracts for transportation which limited liability, the shipper could not recover in excess of the valuation specified in the contract. North Packing & Provision Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 69 I. C. C. 235, 237.

(e) Complainant attacked class and commodity rates between Meridian, Miss., and points in Alabama as unreasonable. Original report found in 60 I. C. C. 5. The following modification is ordered: HELD, ordinary livestock, as described below, subject to notes and rules as specified under "Ordinary Livestock" in consolidated classification, in cars of 36 ft. 6 inches or less in length.

Further, soap, soap powders, washing powders, or scouring compounds, or cleaning compounds, dry: When the value declared by shipper in writing in shipping order, or agreed upon in writing as the released value, does not exceed 20c per pound; in bulk in barrels or boxes or in inner containers, other than glass or earthenware, or in wrappers, in barrels or boxes, l. c. l. Meridian Traffic Bureau v. Southern Ry., 74 I. C. C. 372.

(f) Rates on ore from Okanogan to Tacoma, Wash., during Federal control, in accordance with value based upon smelter returns after assay at destination, found reasonable as compared with rates on ore from Republic, Wash., to Tacoma and for comparable movements in same general territory, and to extent they exceeded lower rates subsequently established. Okanogan is nearer to Tacoma than Republic, ore from the two points being practically identical and of approximately same value. Reparation awarded. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 753.

(g) It is not unreasonable, for the purpose of graduating freight according to value, to divide the particular subject of transportation into two classes; those above and those below a fixed maximum amount. M. K. & T. R. R. Co. v. Harriman Bros., 33 Sup. Ct. 397, 400; 227 U. S. 657.

(h) Tariff provided for rates on ore based upon released value declared by shipper, under authority of released-rates order of commission; and for subsequent revision of freight charges at destination based on assay values at smelter. HELD, either basis of determining applicable rate standing alone would be lawful. But defendants can not be permitted to limit their liability, even though under appropriate authority from the commission, and then assess on same shipment rate in excess of that provided for liability they assume. Rule found unreasonable, and rule prescribed providing for assessment of charges on basis of rate dependent upon value at melter or other points of destination, without providing for waybilling at rates based on released value. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C., 255.

V. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

See Loss and Damage §9.

§6 Effect in General.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Rates authorized for the transportation by express of property, except ordinary live stock, dependent upon the value declared in writing by the shipper or agreed upon in writing as the released value. Released Rates, 43 I. C. C. 510.

(b) If rates on ordinary live stock dependent upon declared value could lawfully be maintained without authorization by the Commission, there might and probably would be instances in which conflict would arise as between the liability imposed by the Act upon the carrier and the prohibitions of section 10 of the Act affecting shippers. Released Rates, 43 I. C. C. 510, 513.

(c) Under the Cummins Amendment a carrier can only relieve itself from liability in those cases where it is ordered or authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission to so limit its liability in consideration of a reduced rate. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that even under such conditions it cannot, in certain cases, relieve itself from liability for negligence. A provision in a uniform live stock agreement filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and covering an interstate shipment which limited the shipper's damages for unusual delay resulting from negligence to the amount actually expended by the shipper in the purchase of food or water for the stock while detained is invalid as a contract exempting the carrier from liability for its own negligence, and cannot be sustained as a contract limiting recovery to an agreed valuation in consideration of a reduced rate. Boston & M. R. R. v. Piper, 38 Sup. Ct. 354, 246 U. S. 439, 62 L. Ed. 820.

(d) Tariff provided for rates on ore based upon released value declared by shipper; and for subsequent revision of freight charges at destination based on assay value at smelter. Contention that since tariff rules provided for rates based upon declared and agreed values complainant has right under Cummins amendment to ship at lower freight rates based upon such values, and that portion of rule regarding subsequent revision on basis of actual value is void, HELD: Complainant's position is at variance with plain wording of tariff. Purpose of latter portion of rule is to make value determined by smelter assay basis of freight rate, and there is no inhibition in the act against rates based on actual value. Arlington Silver Mining Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 255, 256, 257.

VI. TARIFFS AND CONSTRUCTION

§7 In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Specific freight rates in a rate sheet filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by two connecting carriers engaged in Interstate Commerce will be deemed to be based upon a bill of lading limiting the common-law liability of carriers, where the rate sheet states that the rates are subject to an official classification filed with the Commission which specifically states in detail the rates under a form of bill of lading called uniform bill of lading, limiting the common-law liability and stating that rates on property not shipped subject to the conditions of the uniform bill are a specified percentage higher than the reduced rates under the uniform bill, where the Commission has always treated such classification as a component and concomitant part of every schedule rate. CASES 1887-1908

(a) The Commission will not make an award of damages in a case where the defendant is entitled to have the amount of damages assessed by a jury. Riddle, Dean & Co. v. N. Y., L. E. & W. R. R. Co., 1 I. C. R. 787.

(b) If an Act of Congress gives a penalty to a party aggrieved, without specifying a remedy therefor, it may be enforced in a state court; but if a right is conferred by statute, or a specific remedy is provided, or a new power and means of execution are granted, the right can be enforced only in the mode prescribed by the Act. Copp v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 625.

(c) The provisions of the eighth, ninth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth section of the Act construed in the light of recent decisions in Federal courts. HELD, that a procedure for the enforcement of lawful orders of the Commission founded upon controversies requiring trial by jury having been provided by the amendment of March 2, 1889, of the sixteenth section of the act, it is the duty of the Commission to pass upon the question of reparation for past damages whenever a claim is made therefore. Macloon v. C. & N. W. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 711, 716.

(d) The act clearly confers authority upon the Commission to award damages in cases brought before it, and as such award is simply a recommendation which can only be enforced by a suit at law affording full opportunity for a jury trial, the act in this respect is, in the opinion of the Commission, constitutional and valid. Cattle Raisers Asso. of Texas v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 10 I. C. C. 83, 88.

(e) A shipper seeking reparation predicated upon the unreasonableness of the established rate must, under the act, primarily invoke redress through the Commission, which body alone is vested with power originally to entertain proceedings for the alteration of an established schedule, because the rates fixed therein are unreasonable. Railroad Commission of Ohio v. H. V. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 398, 402.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(f) In giving the Commission jurisdiction over reparation, it was the manifest intention of Congress to provide shippers with a method of obtaining an award of damages accruing by virtue of the violation of the Act, without resort to the expensive and tedious process of the law. Michigan Hardwood M[illegible] Assn. v. Freight Bureau, 27 I. C. C. 32, 37.

(g) The Commission can not award reparation for damages such as counsel fees, loss of time, cost of prosecution of suits in courts, or the value of the shipments in controversy. Peller v. Penn. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C. 84, 86.

(h) The Commission has power to award damages only when they are suffered in consequence of a violation of the Act to Regulate Commerce. Pittwood v. N. P. Ry., 51 I. C. C. 535.

(i) Whatever may be the limitations upon the exercise of sound discretion or a reasonable flexibility of judgment in prescribing maximum rates for the future, the Commission holds, as has frequently been held, that "the Commission is not justified in awarding damages except on a basis as certain and definite in law and in fact as is essential to the support of a final judgment or decree requiring the payment of a definite sum of money by one party to another." Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 51 I. C. C. 635, 638, 639.

(j) While fixing the maximum rates for the future must be at a definite, precise figure, the reasonableness of the exact figure decided upon is not susceptible of absolute demonstration. It is the concrete expression of the Commission's best judgment, exercised upon the record. The definite standard of reasonableness of the past rate as a basis for reparation is not susceptible of ascertainment in any other way. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 51 I. C. C. 635, 639.

(k) Before the Commission authorized to award reparation for past transaction it is necessary to find and fix what would have been a reasonable rate at the time of the transactions which are the objects of the claim for reparation; and not only to find that the rate was unlawful, but, if it be the amount of the rate involved, that such rate was unreasonable and resulted in actual damage to the complainant; also to ascertain the amount of such damage. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 51 I. C. C. 635, 639.

(l) The Commission has not assumed to shorten the period of the statute of limitations by holding that it will never award reparation for any part of the statutory period prior to the date of filing the complaint, nor attempted to lay down any rule that, on account of alleged laches of a complaint in not protesting against the rates from time to time before the complaint was filed, reparation will not be awarded for ascertained damages merely because protest was not made. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 51 I. C. C. 635, 639, 640.

(m) An action for reparation, under section 8, applies alike to sections 2, 3, and 4. Iten Biscuit Co. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 53 I. C. C. 729, 732.

(n) Under section 206e of the transportation act, 1920, it is the duty of the Commission to entertain complaints praying for reparation on account of the collection by or through the President during federal control of charges in violation of the interstate commerce act. Mt. Hood R. R. Co. v. Director General, 60 I. C. C. 116, 117.

(o) Claims for reparation covering shipments which moved during Federal control can not be considered where such claims were not filed with the commission within one year after the termination of Federal control, as required by the statute. Phoenix Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 284.

(p) The Commission is without jurisdiction to award reparation on intrastate shipments moving on and after March 1, 1920. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C. 637.

(q) The jurisdiction of the Commission over claims for reparation on intrastate shipments is limited to the period of federal control, which terminated Feb. 29, 1920. F. R. Phillips & Sons Co. v. B. & A. R. R., 74 I. C. C. 381, 382.

(r) Section 208 (a) of the Transportation Act, 1920, does not confer jurisdiction upon the Commission to award reparation or to enforce the provisions of the interstate commerce act on intrastate traffic during the guaranty period. Cannelton Sewer Pipe Co., 73 I. C. C. 27. Case Coal Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 391.

(s) Section 206 c of the Transportation act, 1920, makes it the duty of the Commission to entertain complaints for reparation on account of the collection by or through the President during Federal control of charges in violation of the act. Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern Co. v. Director General, 77 I. C. C. 658, 661.

(sa) Jurisdiction of commission to entertain complaints for reparation on account of exaction of unreasonable rates on shipments that moved during period of Federal control is derived solely from section 206(c) of transportation act. Pfitzenmayer Construction Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 287, 288.

(sb) Contention that commission is without jurisdiction to award reparation on shipments which move from port of entry in Canada through Canada to destinations in the United States on joint rates, not sustained. American Trading Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C., 387.

(sc) Contention that section 208 (a) of the transportation act, 1920, directing that rates effective February 29, 1920, should continue in effect until September 1, 1920, implied that existing rates were not unlawful and that commission is therefore without authority to authorize award of reparation on shipments moving during guaranty period, not sustained. Section referred to imposes no limitation upon power of commission to authorize reparation on interstate shipments moving during that period after showing that a particular rate was unreasonable. Standard Oil Co. v. A. E. R. R. Co., 78 I. C. C. 705, 708.

(t) The Commission is without jurisdiction to award reparation on intrastate traffic during the guaranty period, March 1 to September 1, 1920. United Dredging Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 78 I. C. C. 365.

(u) Defendants question jurisdiction of the Commission under section 208a of the act 1920, to authorize an award of reparation on interstate shipments that moved during the guaranty period, Mar. 1 to Sept. 1, 1920. This section imposes no limitation upon this Commission to authorize reparation on particular shipments moving during that period after a showing that a particular rate was unreasonable. Standard Oil Co. v. A. E. R. R. Co., 78 I. C. C. 705, 708.

(v) Shipment from point in United States, destined to another point in United States, moved in part through Canada. Contention by Director General that Commission is without jurisdiction to award reparation in respect of such rate not sustained. Rate assailed was a joint rate, and all carriers parties thereto are jointly and severally liable for any damage resulting from its application. American lines over which shipment moved are subject to jurisdiction of the Commission. Director General was operating them and is thus liable for full amount of any damage sustained. International Nickle Co., 66 I. C. C. 627, 628. Staley Mfg. Co. v. C. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 512.

(w) The Commission is without authority to award reparation on intrastate shipments moving subsequent to the termination of federal control. Crookston Gas Company v. G. N. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 128, 130.

(x) Section 9 of the act provides that any person injured under the act may make complaint to the Commission or bring suit for recovery of damages in a federal court and the rule of damages in one hardly can be different from that proper for the other. Complainant could recover the amount paid in excess of the legal rate in a common law action for money had and received. The Commission can award reparation in like amount because the collection of it constituted a violation of the act. Proctor & Gamble Co. v. Director General, 81 I. C. C. 361, 363.

(xa) The act gives party injured thru carrier's violation of its provisions election to make complaint to commission or bring suit for recovery of damages in a Federal court; and, as said by Supreme Court in L. & N. R. R. Co., v. Ohio Valley Tie Co., 242 U. S., 288, 291, "the rule of damages in one hardly can be different from that proper for the other." Proctor & Gamble Co. v. Director General as Agent, 81 I. C. C., 361, 363.

(y) Reparation and rates may be dealt with in one order, though awarding reparation for the past and fixing rates for the future involve the determination of matters essentially different, one being in its nature essentially private and the other public. One is made by the Commission in its quasi-judicial and the other in its quasi-legislative capacity; but testimony showing the unreasonableness of a past rate may also furnish information on which to fix a reasonable future rate, and both subjects can be, and often are, disposed of by the same order. Baer Bros. Merc. Co. v. D. & R. G. R. R. Co., 34 Sup. Ct. 641, 644; 233 U. C. 479, 58 L. Ed. —.

(z) The provision making the findings and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the question of reparations prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated is not unconstitutional, so that no reparations can be recovered upon the facts established before the Commission, where its order on rehearing, granted as authorized by Act June 29, 1906, §6, modifying a previous order as authorized by Act June 18, 1906, §13, did not allow reparation. Morgan Co. v. Great Northern Ry Co., 285 Fed. 876.

(aa) The Interstate Commerce Commission has power to award reparation on shipments which have moved after the filing of the complaint as well as shipments which move prior to the time the complaint was filed. G. B. Marle Co. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 271 Fed. 989, 994.

(bb) During the interval between a finding and order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made on a petition of shippers, which prayed for reparation, which order was not intended nor regarded as a final disposition of the reparation claims, and the filing of a supplemental petition, the Commission did not lose jurisdiction, and a subsequent order awarding reparation on account of shipments from a time two years prior to the filing of the original petition to the time of the final order, was within its jurisdiction. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. 295 Fed. 53.

§1. Necessity of and primary action of Commission.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) An action cannot be maintained against a carrier in a state court under section 9 and 22 of the Act to recover reparation for unjust discrimination in charging a published rate of 50c higher per ton for coal loaded from wagons than the published rate when the coal is loaded from tipples, where no prior application has been made to the Commission for relief. Robinson v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 222 U. S. 506, 509; 32 Sup. Ct., 114; 56 L. ed. 114.

(b) The Interstate Commerce Commission has power to determine the reasonableness of rates and likewise is authorized to award reparation, and in both respects, where the reparation arises from a readjustment of rates, its conclusions, being administrative, are final and conclusive, unless the Commission has in some particular matter in the controversy exceeded its prescribed functions. Fidelity Lumber Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 193, Fed. 924, 928.

(c) A shipper cannot maintain an action at law in the courts for excessive and unreasonable freight charges exacted on interstate shipments, where the rates charged were those which had been duly fixed by the carrier according to the Act and had not been found to be unreasonable by the Interstate Commerce Commission. American Union Coal Co. v. Penn. R. R. Co., 159 Fed. 278, 280.

(d) The remedy for recovery of excessive charges collected by a railroad company provided by Interstate Commerce Act, section 8, 10 (Comp. St. sections 8572, 8574), by obtaining an order of reparation from the Interstate Commerce Commission and bringing suit for its enforcement, is exclusive, and a shipper cannot maintain a suit to charge the company as trustee ex maleficio of such excess. North American Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 288 Fed. 612.

§2. Necessity of and effect of finding of reasonableness.

(a) The Interstate Commerce Commission will not, upon requiring a reduction of freight rates, grant reparation to shippers who have been charged the old rates, unless it be found that such old rates were unreasonable at the time they were paid. Grain Shippers' Asso. v. Illinois C. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 158.

(b) An order granting reparation to shippers for an unreasonable rate must be based upon evidence and a finding that the rate was unreasonable at the time it was paid. Grain Shippers' Asso. v. Illinois C. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 158.

(c) A complainant is entitled to an order for reparation in an amount equal to that by which the rates exacted and paid exceed reasonable rates, but the burden of showing the unreasonableness and the amount is upon the complainant. Holmes & Co. v. Southern R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 561.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) Carriers are not entitled to resist an award of reparation for exactions made under a rate found to be unreasonable on the ground that the shippers were not themselves damaged, but simply added the excess to the selling price, thereby casting the damage upon the public. Wherever an unlawful and unreasonable rate is exacted the shipper is entitled to reparation without inquiring beyond the fact itself of the unreasonable exaction. Burgess v. Transcontinental Freight Bureau, 3 I. C. C. 668, 679, 680.

(e) And when the Commission reduces a rate, it does not necessarily follow that it will award reparation on the basis of the new rate. There is no conclusive presumption that a rate reasonable today was reasonable a year before or a day before, since reasonable rates vary from time to time, and some point of division must be found. Where, therefore, rates have been established and maintained by the carriers in good faith, especially where they have been long in effect and acquiesced in by shippers without protest, the Commission will not award reparation even though the rate is reduced, unless it clearly appears that the rates paid in the past have been excessive. Penrod Walnut & Veneer Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 326, 328.

(f) When the Commission reduces a rate and prescribes what will be the just and reasonable rate or rates to be thereafter observed in such a case as the maxima to be charged, it does not necessarily follow that for any length of time prior to the date of the opinion reparation will be awarded upon the basis of the rate prescribed to be observed thereafter. Morse Produce Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 15 I. C. C. 334, 338.

(g) When a rate is advanced and the increased rate is condemned by the amount of the advance a much more satisfactory basis for an award of reparation is afforded than in the present case, where so far as changes have occurred they have been at least for the most part reduced in a territory where changes in conditions have taken place which contribute in greater or less degree to a present showing of unreasonableness in existing rates. Anadarko Cotton Oil Co. v. A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 43, 50.

(hh) It would be a manifestly harsh rule that would assume a rate now condemned as unreasonable to have been so for a period of two years, or that of the statute of limitations in the past as a basis for the payment of money by the carriers on past shipments, especially when no complaint had been made against them in that period. The law establishes no such presumption nor is it a necessary sequence that the rate has been unreasonable for any period in the past. Neither does it seem that the bona fide action of the carriers in the necessary exercise of their judgment within reasonable limits should always be at their peril, of liability for reparation for the difference between rates initiated upon their judgment and later changed upon the judgment of the Commission. The awarding of reparation by no means necessarily follows the reduction of a rate whether by the voluntary action of the carriers or by order of the Commission. Whatever may be the nature of the facts, circumstances and conditions appearing in a particular case where reparation is involved, whether on account of excessive rates or unjust discrimination, there must be that degree of certainty and satisfactory conviction in the mind and judgment of the Commission as would be deemed necessary under the well established principles of law as a basis for a judgment in court. Anadarko Cotton Oil Co. v. A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 43, 50, 51.

(i) In a case involving a question of reparation, the Commission must fix the time at which the rate becomes unreasonable, must determine when shippers were entitled to the rate found reasonable, and carriers ought to have established it; each case depends on its own facts, and the complainant has the burden of showing that the rates paid have been unreasonable. In re Wool, Hides, and Pelts, 25 I. C. C. 675, 678.

(j) The Commission is without authority to award reparation in any case unless it can conclude that the rate assailed was in violation of the Act at the time the shipments in question moved. New Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. H. V. Ry. Co., 26 I. C. C. 121, 126.

(k) A finding of unreasonableness would afford no basis for reparation to complainants, as it is disclosed that all the shipments in question were purchased f. o. b. destinations, the delivery prices having been compute dat the Chicago market price plus the respective freight rates from Chicago, regardless of the point of origin, the applicable freight charges in all cases having been prepaid by the vendor shippers. The requisite proof of damage resulting from the undue preference found to exist also is wanting. Reparation denied. Montgomery Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, 60 I. C. C. 203, 209.

§3. Power to award tort damages.

(a) If defendants rates on straw berries had been so excessive and unjust as to have rendered complainants crop valueless to pick and market, it would not entitle him to reparation for loss sustained, because such damages would be too speculative uncertain and remote. Perry v. F. C. & P. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 741, 749.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) In Hillsdale Coal Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 19 I. C. C. 356; Jacoby & Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 19 I. C. C. 392, and Bulah Coal Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 52, the Commission found that the defendant had discriminated against the complainants in the distribution of coal cars. Subsequently the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania in Morrisdale Coal Co. v. Penn R. R. Co., 176 Fed. 748, 183 Fed. 929, HELD, that the Commission could alone entertain a complaint for damages based on such discrimination. In order to prevent a miscarriage of justice and afford an opportunity to secure a final ruling by the courts the Commerce awards reparation to each complainant based on the difference between the average selling price for the coal at the mine for interstate markets and the cost of production during the same period, upon the difference in the number of tons of coal it would have mined and shipped had its proper portions of cars been furnished, and the tonnage it actually did ship. Hillsdale Coal & Coke Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 23 I. C. C. 186.

(c) The Commission has no power to direct the payment of a damage claim, since a failure to pay is not a violation of the act. Larkin Co. v. E. & W. T. Co., 24 I. C. C. 645, 646.

(d) Since it is empowered to award reparation only for violations of the Act. No violation can be predicated upon the fact that a carrier's agent negligently permitted the use of pens for infected cattle causing complainant to ship from another point. Criswell v. W. F. & N. W. Ry. Co., 37 I. C. C. 97, 98.

(e) In an action for damages due to refusal of carrier to construct a siding and switch connection at complainant's mine while granting the same to complainant's vendee, HELD: Damages may not properly be predicated upon the difference between the price at which the mine was sold and the price it would have bought if equipped with a siding, for the reason that the sale of the mine" was not the proximate result of the carrier's unlawful conduct. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 185, 186.

(f) In determining the amount of damages for loss of profits resulting from failure of carrier to construct a siding and switch connection, the Commission is restricted to shipments that would have moved in interstate commerce. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 186.

(g) Damages for speculative future losses are not recoverable, and redress for present losses can not be denied by speculating that such losses may be recouped at some future time. A loss is an established fact for the time being, while possible profit in the future is entirely conjectural. Avella Coal Co. v. P. & W. V. Ry. Co., 77 I. C. C. 731, 741.

II. RIGHT TO RECOVER .

§3½. Extent of recovery.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) A common carrier violating the commands of the act is liable to the person injured thereby; complainant may bring suit in court or bring a complaint before the Commission. All damages that properly can be attributed to an overcharge, whether it be the keeping of the plaintiff out of his money, or the damage to his business following as a remote result of the same cause, must be taken to have been considered in the award of the Commission and compensated with that award is paid. Danzer & Co. v. G. & S. I. R. R. Co. 69 I. C. C. 59, 61.

(b) Evidence that may condemn a rate for interstate shipment does not necessarily justify reparation for exaction of that rate in the past, so that an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission establishing a different rate, but not authorizing reparation, does not establish a shipper's right to reparation. Morgan Co. v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 285 Fed. 876.

(c) Where the Examiner for the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered proof on the issue of damages to a shipper reserved until after the decision as to the right to damages, and thereafter the Commission found there was no right to reparation, though it did find discrimination against the shipper, the ruling on the evidence was not erroneous, even though the conclusion as to reparation was not correct. Donner Steel Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 285 Fed. 955.

(d) An award of reparation would not necessarily follow from a finding that a classification was unreasonable. State Highway Department of Texas v. Director General, 73 I. C. C. 741, 742.

(e) Under Interstate Commerce Act, §8, providing that any carrier violating the act "shall be liable to the person or persons injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation," a shipper who has been charged unreasonable and excessive rates is entitled to recover as reparation the difference between such excessive rates and the rates the Interstate Commerce Commission find would have been just and reasonable, and all carriers participating in such unlawful rates are jointly and severally liable therefor. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co., 295 Fed. 53.

ALL OTHER CITATIONS

National Fibre & Insulating Co. v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 78 I. C. C. 361, 363, 364.

§4. Necessity of protest.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) In view of the necessary relations between the carrier and shipper, the dependence in modern business life of the latter upon the former, the right and duty of the carrier in the first instance to fix its charges, its obligation to adhere to the same until altered in the manner prescribed by law, and its right to enforce such charges by retaining possession of the freight transported, or to demand payment of the freight charges as a prerequisite to the transportation, places the parties upon an unequal footing so as to relieve the shipper from the necessity of protest against the payment of an unlawful rate. Southern Pine Lumber v. Southern Ry. Co., 14 I. C. C. 195, 197.

(b) To maintain a petition before the Commission for the recovery of excessive freight charges it is not necessary that the payment of freight should have been made under protest. National Refining Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 18 I. C. C. 389, 390.

ALL OTHER CITATIONS

R. R. Co. v. International Coal Mining Co. 173 Fed. 1, 7; Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Penn R. R. Co., 181 Fed. 403, 410.

§5. Necessity of First Paying Tariff Rate.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) It is not the policy of the Commission to award reparation where lawful charges have not been paid. Peale, Peacock & Kerr v. Central R. R. Co. of N. J., 18 I. C. C. 25, 33.

(b) The right to recover reparation on account of unlawful charges accrues when the charges are paid. Young v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 305, 306.

§6. Parties entitled to recover.

See Infra §19; Parties; Procedure Before Commission V.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Shippers whose claims for reparation for damages for wrongful charges for transportation of oil are covered by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but who have not been served in the reparation proceedings before the Commission, may, upon failure of the carriers to properly refund excessive charges, proceed on the basis of reparation prescribed on such order to enforce their claims in the courts as provided by law. Independent Ref. Asso. v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 6 I. C. C. 378.

(b) It appearing that the wrongs found to exist in these cases resulted from unequal conditions of carriage and shipment imposed by the defendants antecedent to the time of shipment, that the movement of the property depended upon the shipper's acceptance of conditions thus notified to him in advance, that he had to regulate his price for oil accordingly, and that the cost of transportation was borne by the claiming shippers: HELD, that it is not material whether the claimants, who are all shippers, or whether the consignees, paid the transportation charges. HELD, further, that the violations of law found in these cases do not arise through any breach of contract, but from failure on the part of carriers to perform their public duties. Independent Refiners' Asso. v. Western N. Y. P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 378.

(c) Whatever may be said of the right or status of shippers generally as to reparation for damages resulting from a rate or charge declared by the Commission to be unlawful, the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas is entitled in this case to show damages to its members, and upon such showing the Commission will order reparation; but in view of the unsettled state of the law in this respect, and in order that all phases of the question may be presented to the court, the members of the association seeking damages should file claims in the nature of intervening petitions. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 83.

(d) The complainants are not entitled to reparation, although they have apparently paid for the transportation of bananas from Lynchburg to Danville, which were in fact never transported, where the result to them was the same in money as, and more favorable in convenience than, though the entire carload had been shipped to Lynchburg and the half reshipped. Gardner & Clark v. Southern R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 342.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) The unreasonableness of the rates on the lines of the defendant carriers in the former proceedings referred to, from points of origin to points of destination embraced within the orders of the Commission therein, has already been established. Reparation should be awarded to the parties shown to be entitled thereto for the difference between the rates condemned by said orders and the higher rates paid since the date of their establishment. The right to recover reparation is not confined to shipments made by parties to the former proceedings, but extends to all shipments charged for on the basis indicated, by whomsoever made. No orders for reparation will be entered on account of the alleged exaction of excessive charges on shipments from points of origin to destination not involved in the former proceedings until the question of the reasonableness of the rates shall be determined. The Commission has no jurisdiction to make orders for reparation on account of any alleged excessive rate except when, upon complaint, notice to the defendants, and a full hearing, such rate has been challenged and found to be unreasonable. Nicola, Stone & Myers Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 14 I. C. C. 199, 205.

(f) Interveners may be denied reparation where reparation was not put in issue in original complaint. R. R. Com. of Oregon v. S. P. Co., 24 I. C. C. 273, 279.

(g) Complainant must show that the freight charges on which it seeks reparation were actually paid by it. Upon receipt of proof as to the proper party in whose favor an order of reparation should be entered and also a statement of the shipments agreed to by the defendant, the order of reparation sought will be issued. Bascom Porter Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 24 I. C. C. 297.

(h) A consignee who has paid charges based on an unreasonable rate is not entitled to reparation where such charges have been deducted from the shippers invoice. Deming Lumber Co. v. S. P. Co., 24 I. C. C. 598, 599.

(i) Section 8 of the Act makes a common carrier, subject to the Act, liable to the person injured for whatever damages may accrue by reason of the doing of any act prohibited or declared to be unlawful by the statute. In re Wool, Hides and Pelts, 25 I. C. C. 675, 676.

(j) The person entitled to an award of damages on the ground of the unreasonableness of a rate is the one who has actually paid the rate. National Wool Growers' Assn. v. O. S. L. R. R. Co. 25 I. C. C. 675, 677.

(k) A consignee is not necessarily entitled to reparation. Michigan Hardwood Mfrs. Asso. v. Transcontinental Freight Bureau, 27 I. C. C. 32, 40; Commercial Club of Omaha v. A. & S. R. Ry. Co., 27 I. C. C. 302.

(l) Where freight rate from a certain point has been reduced by the Commission and reparation is to be awarded, and it is shown that a certain allowance has been made under the higher rates by the shipper to the consignee, whether termed a freight allowance or a trade discount, if this same allowance is also made under the reduced rates, it is evident that the damage resulting from the higher rates has been borne by the consignee and any reparation awarded should be awarded to the consignee. Standard Mirror Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 32 I. C. C. 261, 264.

(m) The reparation is due to the person who has been required to pay excessive charge as the price to transportation. It follows that we must, in making orders of reparation in these cases, upon proper proof of the shipments, make such orders in favor of those who paid the charges as freight charges, or on whose account the same were paid, and who were the true owners of the property transported during the period of transportation. Oden & Elliott v. S. A. L. Ry., 37 I. C. C. 345, 347.

(n) While complainants were not named in bills of lading, or freight bills, consignor was, in fact, their agent; and while complainants were not in the ordinary sense either consignor and consignees they were in substance the true consignors and ultimately bore the freight charges and the case, therefore, does not come within the rule which prohibits an award of reparation to a stranger to the transportation record. Henderson v. M. L. & T. R. R. & S. S. Co., 39 I. C. C. 483, 484.

(e) Reparation is due to the person who has been required to pay the excessive charge as the price of transportation. Napanee Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. B. & O. S. R. R. Co., 43 I. C. C. 236, 240.

(p) The statute empowers the Commission to award reparation to the party injured by any violation of the Act committed by carriers. The fact that complainant may have assigned any part of the award is not a matter of which the Commission may take cognizance. Graustein v. B. & M. R. R., 45 I. C. C. 393, 405.

(q) The shipments were sold F. O. B. factory, freight equalized with Pittsburg. In other words, each consignor discounted his invoice to the extent that the freight charges for shipments of glass from his factory exceeded the charges for like shipments from the Pittsburg district. Defendants question complainants right for reparation. The record is clear that complainants paid the freight charges as such. To go into the matter of allowances between the parties would lead us away from the direct results of the acts of the carriers in the exaction of unreasonable rates, into the domain of indirect and remote consequences, and perhaps into the question of equity between vendors and vendees Reparation is due to the person who has been required to pay the excessive charge as the price of transportation Guilford Lumber Mfg. Co. v. S. Ry., 53 I. C. C. 669, 679.

(r) Consignor found entitled to reparation where shipment was sold at a price which included the cost of transportation, and freight charges were paid by consignee and deducted from invoice price in settlement with consignor. Federal Oil & Supply Co. v. Director General, 60 I. C. C. 185, 187.

(s) A carrier contested the right of complainant, an association, to maintain a claim for reparation on ground that it did not pay any of the charges complained of and is not empowered to bring suit in behalf of its members. Held: since prayer of complaint specifically named the members of complainant's organization who paid the charges and asked that they be awarded reparation, the members so named are co-complainants with the association, although not styled such in the caption of the complaint. Pittsburgh Grain & Hay Exchange v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 506, 507, 508.

(t) No reparation can be awarded for the exaction of an unreasonable rate where witness unable to give direct testimony as to who paid and bore the charges. American Wood Pipe Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C., 155, 156.

(u) After complaint was filed, powers of attorney were executed by certain consignors, who were not named as parties in the complaint, in favor of a complainant who was so named. Held, introduction of such powers of attorney in evidence at the hearing over objection of defendants can not be treated as equivalent to amendment of the complaint and since such consignors, who bore the freight charges, have filed no complaint within the statutory period, reparation as to them must be denied Tanners' Council v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C., 415, 419.

(v) Complaint filed by a public traffic manager naming himself as complainant. HELD, since he is not the real party in interest reparation denied. Carney v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C., 560, 561.

(w) Complainant, a commission company, sought reparation as agent for individual shippers named in the complanit. Whereabouts of some complainants unknown, one is deceased and his claim is not listed as an asset of his estate and his administrator declines to take cognizance of it, and the remainder have filed requests for dismissal. HELD, Complainant's agency to make claim for reparation not sufficiently established. Hyre-Price Live Stock Commission Co. v. M., K. & T. Ry. Co., 66 I. C. C., 591.

(x) Reparation denied for the exaction of an unreasonable rate where complainant was not a party to the transportation records. In cases where complainants are parties it must appear that they suffered the damages claimed before the Commission is justified in entering an order of reparation in their favor. International Nickel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C., 627 628, 652.

(y) A proceeding before the Commission to determine the reasonableness of an advance in rates is not in the nature of private litigation between the protestants and the carriers, but a matter of public concern in which the whole body of shippers is interested. The finding in such case is generally in its operation and insures to the benefit of every person who has been obliged to pay the unjust rate. Otherwise those who filed the complaint, or intervened during the hearing would have secured the advantage over the general body of the public, with the result that the order of the Commission would have created a preference in favor of the parties to the record, and would have destroyed the very uniformity which that body had been organized to secure. Therefore, every shipper similarly situated was entitled by appropriate proceedings before the Commission or the courts to obtain the benefit of that general finding and order. A. J. Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co., 35 Sup. Ct. 444, 445.

(z) The fact that complainant included the freight charges in part of the selling price does not preclude it from recovering the damage it suffered by reason of having ultimately paid an unreasonable freight rate. Central Wisconsin Supply Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 409, 411.

(aa) In 59 I. C. C. 570, rates on nitrate of soda, carloads, from Baltimore, Md., to Barksdale, Wis., were found unreasonable to extent they exceeded 45c per 100 pounds, reparation awarded. Complainant now advises that under an arrangement with the Government, they were not entitled to reparation. HELD, freight charges paid on shipments described in the original report were not borne by complainant and reparation is denied. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Director General 68 I. C. C. 579.

(bb) If complainants have paid and borne as transportation charges rates that were unreasonable they are entitled to reparation. Wilbur Lumber Co. v. Director General 73 I. C. C. 152, 159.

(cc) In 66 I. C. C. 529, the Commission found rates on coal in effect during the period from June 25, 1918 to Oct. 9, 1920, from western Kentucky mines served by the L. & N., to Clarksville, Tenn., as unreasonable, case being held open for proof of damage. HELD, complainants have shown they made shipments of coal, paid and bore the freight charges, reparation awarded. City of Clarksville, Tenn., v. Director General 73 I. C. C. 509.

(dd) If complainants have paid and borne as transportation charges unreasonable rates, they are entitled to an award of reparation. They have paid cash out of pocket that should not have been required of them. City of Clarksville, Tenn., v. Director General, 73 I. C. C. 509, 510.

ee) In 55 I. C. C. 42, the Commission found that the joint rates on grain from territory surrounding Peoria, Ill., to eastern trunk line territory was unreasonable to extent it exceeded the combination of locals on Peoria. Further rehearing was held on petition of complainant as to reparation. Complainants have not shown and apparently are unable to show, with a few possible exceptions, whether or not they bore the local charges as such on each inbound shipment to Peoria. HELD, reparation denied, complainant dismissed. Peoria Board of Trade v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 73 I. C. C. 532.

(ff) It is well settled that reparation is due the person who pays the excessive charges as the price of transportation. L. Nicholas Oil Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. 73 I. C. C. 725, 728.

(gg) Defendant questions the present corporate existence of complainant. HELD, reparation awarded to complainant where record shows that it was incorporated under the laws of Indiana; that it was actively engaged in business until it sold its entire physical assets at public sale, and has since been winding up its affairs, but has not yet surrendered its charter. Indiana Reduction Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 134, 136.

(hh) Contention that shippers have not shown that they were damaged by reason of rates assessed during the period when the prices of coal were regulated by the Federal Government through the Fuel Administration. HELD, not sustained. If shippers paid and bore as transportation charges rates that were unreasonable, they are entitled to reparation. Wilbur Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 152, 159.

(ii) Contract between consignor and consignee provided that price of commodity be based on specific freight rate, the buyer to have benefit of any reductions and any advances to be added to the price of the commodity. Freight charges paid by consignee at destination. Consignor in billing consignee deducts amount of freight charges based on the contract rate, and consignee remits the difference. HELD, reparation denied consignee complainants as such contract amounts to no more than an agreement between the parties as to changes which might occur in the rate. Davenport Commercial Club v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 251, 257, 258.

(jj) Upon further hearing, reparation awarded, proof having been submitted that complainants paid and bore charges for the transportation of coal from Kentucky mines to Clarksville, Tenn., at rates found unreasonable in original report, 66 I. C. C., 529. City of Clarksville, Tenn., v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 509.

(kk) Director general endeavored to show that complainants were not damaged for reason that the prices of coal during period in question were subjected to the regulation of the Federal Government through the Fuel Administration, and that complainants sold their coal at prices which included the freight charges paid, and the margin of profit allowed. HELD, complainants paid and bore as transportation charges unreasonable rates and are entitled to reparation. They have "paid cash out of pocket that should not have been required of them." City of Clarksville, Tenn., v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 509, 510.

(ll) Where the commission's findings condemned joint rates, of which complainants bore only a portion, such complainants are entitled only to their proportionate share of any reparations awarded. Peoria Board of Trade v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 532, 534.

(mm) Contention that reparation should be denied because complainant sold its products, f. o. b. point of destination at prices which included the prepaid freight charges. HELD, not sustained following Wheeler & Timlin, 60 I. C. C., 265. Lancaster Steel Products Corp. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 567, 570.

(nn) Shipments were sold f. o. b. Pittsburgh, Pa. Complainant's customer paid the freight charges and, to extent that they were in excess of those which would have resulted at the rate from Pittsburgh, deducted them from invoice price in making settlement. HELD, complainant found party entitled to any reparation that may be awarded. Pittsourgh Steel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 715, 716.

(oo) Objection of carriers to an award of reparation on the ground that the commodity was sold at a price which included freight charges and profits. HELD, reparation is due the person who pays the excessive charge as the price of transportation. Nicholas Oil Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C. 725, 728.

(pp) Contention that members of an association in whose behalf complaint was filed are barred from reparation because complainant took position that it would await decision on merits before offering detailed evidence as to payment and bearing of freight charges by its members. HELD, while ordinarily complainants should present entire cases at time of original hearings, in a case involving numerous shipments by many shippers it is often to the best interest of the commission that parties defer taking testimony on details of damage until main issue has been decided. Nat'l Preservers & Fruit Products Asso. v. A. & S. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 179, 183.

(qq) Complainant, consignee, sold its newspaper and physical assets. Contention that no reparation can be awarded to consignee because it assigned its claims to its successor, and that in any event neither consignee nor its successor would be entitled to reparation found due on shipments to the former whether the so-called assignment be held valid or invalid under section 3477 of United States Revised Statutes, not sustained. No formal assignment was made by consignee to its successor in business, nor can any assignment be inferred from the facts of record. Any reparation on shipments to the consignee is properly due to it. Democrat Printing Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 595, 599.

(rr) Shipments were sold by consignor to consignee under contracts specifying price f. o. b. destination, based on the then existing price of commodity and the freight rate, with the condition that such price should be changed to correspond with any increase or decrease in the factors on which it was based, subject to a certain maximum. HELD, Freight charges as such were paid and borne by consignor, who is entitled to reparation. Roxana Petroleum Corp. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 605, 607.

(ss) Shipments were sold f. o. b. point of origin, contracts of sale being based on rate thought to be applicable. Freight charges were prepaid by consignor and added to invoice rendered purchaser. Consignor was billed for difference between charges collected and those which would have accrued at rates agreed upon in contracts of sale. HELD, consignor paid and bore charges in excess of those provided for in contracts of sale, and is entitled to reparation to that basis only. Marion Extract Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 613, 614.

(tt) Due to error in the record, finding in original report, 73 I. C. C., 27, denied reparation to complainant on the ground that there was no evidence that it paid and bore transportation charges on its shipments. Error corrected and reparation awarded. Cannelton Sewer Pipe Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 647.

(uu) Where a subsidiary company, which paid and bore freight charges as such out of funds furnished by the parent company, is not named as a party complainant before the commission, such parent company, as complainant, can not recover reparation on such transportation. Lackawanna Steel Co. v. Director General as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 465, 468.

(vv) Factory price of commodity shipped was fixed by the Government. Shipments were sold f. o. b. destination, delivered price being computed by complainant by adding to factory price an amount to cover transportation cost. Freight charges were paid by consignee and deducted from complainant's invoice. Contention that complainant did not pay and bear transportation charges, since it added freight cost to factory price as fixed by the Government and actually received net fixed price, not sustained. Wyoming Sugar Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 470, 471, 472.

(ww) Section 206 (c) of the transportation act, 1920, making it the duty of the commission to entertain complaints for reparation on account of the collection by or through the President during Federal control of charges in violation of the interstate commerce act, was intended to cover charges collected for services performed at least in part, by the director general during Federal control. Complaints regarding charges collected by the director general as agent for the carriers, on account of services performed wholly prior to Federal control, should be filed against the carriers themselves. Terre Haute, Indianapolis & E. T. Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 658, 659.

(xx) Complainant was not real party in interest, but overcharges were paid and borne by an allied corporation. Complainant asked leave to amend so as to include such corporation as party complainant. Objection by defendant that cause of action of real party in interest was barred by the statute of limitations, HELD, Not sustained, since amendment filed within statutory period as provided under amendment of February 24, 1922, to section 206 of the transportation act, 1920. Amendment permitted. Terre Haute, Indianapolis & E. T. Co. v. Director General, as Agent. 77 I. C. C. 662.

(yy) Complainant's shipments were commandeered by Government for war purposes, and percentage commission in addition to delivered price which included transportation charges , allowed him. Contention by carrier that complainant is not entitled to reparation in respect of unreasonable charges on such transportation, not sustained. While freight charges in general were likely given consideration in determining just measure of compensation to complainant for the material, it does not appear that charge specifically assessed on shipments was given separate and individual consideration. Reparation awarded to complainant as party who paid and bore freight charges. Thorp v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 1, 2, 3.

(yya) Freight charges originally paid by complainant but ultimately borne by another corporation, both being subsidiaries of a third corporation. Reparation denied, due to failure to submit assignment of claim or power of attorney from corporation which bore charges. Gulf Production Co. v. Di rector General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 39, 42.

(zz) Consignee filed complaint seeking reparation in own behalf. Freight charges as such were paid and borne by consignor, and after statute of limitations had expired complainant filed motion to include consignor as party complainant and petition to permit that party to intervene. Contention that filing of complaint tolled statute and that amendment and petition related back, not sustained. Complainant acted in own behalf and not as agent of consignor and with no privity between them in respect of reparation sought. It was necessary for consignor to file its claim within period fixed by statute, and after expiration thereof commission had no jurisdiction to consider its right to reparation. Phillips case, 236 U. S., 662. Barrett Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 55.

(3a) Reparation awarded to corporation as successor in interest to individuals who paid and bore unreasonable freight charges. Premier Coal Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 85, 86, 87.

(3aa) Reparation awarded complainant corporation, organized to render general commercial and traffic services to its subscribers, without profit, in its representative capacity. Detroit Coal Exchange v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 258, 260.

(3ab) Shipments under rates found unreasonable were made by company to rights, liabilities, and assets of which complainant succeeded. HELD: This transfer of interests not affected by section 3477, Revised Statutes of United States. Fairmont Creamery Co. case, 68 I. C. C., 507. Reparation awarded. Roxana Petroleum Corp. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 292, 294.

(3b) Shipments of steel moved under alleged unreasonable rates, for use in construction of ships for Emergency Fleet Corporation on cost-plus basis. Contention by defendant that Emergency Fleet Corporation was partly damaged and that complaint was not maintainable since no agency to file in its behalf was alleged or proven, not sustained. At time of movement title to shipments rested in complainant and it alone was in contractual relation with defendant; if charges were unreasonable, it suffered damage when it paid such charges. No further proof is necessary, for the law does not inquire into later events. Darnell-Taenzer Case, 245 U. S., 531. Reparation awarded. Cramp & Sons v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 341, 343.

(3c) Contention that complainant is not entitled to reparation, since it agreed with shipper to bear equally excess freight charges over anticipated lower rate, not sustained. Complainant paid freight charges and it is not shown that it has been repaid any part by anyone. Reparation awarded. Brown's Tract Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 111, 112, 113.

(3d) Freight charges paid in first instance by consignee but charged to complainant and finally borne by him. HELD, Complainant party entitled to reparation. Roper v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 125.

(3da) Reparation awarded to complainant, an association of trustees acting under a declaration of trust. Sugarland Industries v. Galveston Wharf Co., 80 I. C. C. 655.

(3e) Reparation awarded to corporation appearing by its receivers. American Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. G. R. R., 80 I. C. C. 759.

(3f) In cases involving reparation the Commission ordinarily deals with the parties to the transportation record. When a stranger to such record asserts before it a claim in opposition to that of the person who paid and bore the charges and was thereby damaged it must be demonstrated to its satisfaction that the person damaged has divested himself of his legal rights in the premises in favor of that stranger. R. B. Miller v. N. & W. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 590.

(3g) Where complainant is the party who was in relation with the railroad, and it is apparent it has paid cash out of pocket that should not have been required of it, reparation awarded. Cramp & Sons v. Director General, 83 I. C. C. 55, 58.

(3ga) Contention that complainant, consignor, and consignee of shipments charged unreasonable rates, is not entitled to reparation since it was employed partly on Government construction on cost-plus basis, not sustained. Title was never in Government, nor was money for purchase or transportation advanced by it, commodity having been used for private work as well. Complainant is party who was in relation with railroad, and has paid cash out of pocket that should not have been required of it. Darnell-Taenzer case, 245 U. S., 531. Reparation awarded to complainant. Cramp & Sons Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 55, 57, 58.

(3gb) Complainant, commission agent for undisclosed principal, consigned shipment to itself and paid freight charges; deducting such charges from proceeds of sale. Reparation sought by complainant in its own name. HELD: Contract to pay and charge lawful freight rates existed between complainant, in its own name, and defendants, to which undisclosed principal was a stranger. Undisclosed principal is a foreign corporation and is especially dependent upon its rights under laws of agency relating to agents for undisclosed principles, under which complainant is entitled to reparation in its representative capacity. See 21 Ruling Case Law, 902, 903; 57 I. C. C., 211. Keith Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 167, 171, 172.

(3h) The right of an agent to sue on a contract which he has entered into in his own name without disclosing his agency, if the principal makes no objection, seems to have met with universal recognition. Accordingly, a person who, having in charge, as agent, the goods of another, makes with a common carrier a contract to ship such goods, in which the agency is not disclosed, may maintain an action in his own name for a breach of such contract. And, likewise, if an agent by mistake pays to a third party money in his possession belonging to his principal, he may maintain in his own name an action for money had and received and recover it back. If the contract is one not under seal, either principal or agent may sue for its enforcement. Keith Co. v. Director General, 83 I. C. C. 167, 172.

(3ha) Reparation awarded complainant corporation which took over all assets and liabilities of party by whom freight charges were paid and borne, in succeeding to business of latter. Assignments of this character are not prohibited by section 3477 of Revised Statutes. Fairmont Creamery Co., 68 I. C. C., 507, citing Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. United States, 256 U. S., 655. United Iron Works v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 282, 284.

(3hb) Complainant was given freight allowance by consignor, covering portion of freight charges, and deduction accordingly made from invoice price. Contention that as to such shipments complainant is not entitled to reparation, not sustained. Complainant paid freight charges as such. To go into matter of allowance between parties would lead away from direct results of act of carriers in exaction of unreasonable rate into domain of indirect and remote consequences and perhaps into questions of equity between vendor and vendee. Prusia Hardware Co., 40 I. C. C., 747. Reparation for excess of charges over those herein found reasonable awarded. Weldon, Williams & Lick v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 371, 373, 374.

(3hc) The party entitled to recover is he who has either by himself or by another party paid and borne the freight charges for the transportation service, irrespective of the title to the property shipped. Missouri Portland Cement Co. v. Director General, 88 I. C. C. 492, 493.

(3i) Where the Interstate Commerce Commission found a rate charged on lumber excessive and ordered it reduced, and also ordered reparation to the extent of the excess, parties who made the overpayment were entitled to recover it, though they were able to pass on the damage sustained in the first instance by collecting the amount from purchasers, as the tendency of the law in regard to damages is not to go beyond the first step, and a defendant is liable if, proximately, plaintiff has suffered a loss, especially as there was no privity between the purchasers and the carriers, entitling them to recover the overpayments. Southern Pacific Co. v. Darnell Taenzer Lumber Co., 38 Sup. Ct. 186, 245 U. S. 531, 62 Lid. 451.

(3j) Where assignee of part of claim against railroad company on which reparation award was subsequently made was not a party to compromise of that and other claims between the assignor and the railroad, it acquired no rights thereunder. Westminster Nat. Bank v. Boston & M. R. R. (Mass. 1923) 139 N. E. 345.

(3k) Claims for reparation filed during statutory period, naming complainant as party who paid and bore freight charges. At hearing, complainant introduced powers of attorney from real parties in interest authorizing complainant to collect reparation to be awarded, principals not being parties to complaint. HELD: Absence of allegations in complaint of representative capacity on part of complainant can not defeat recovery on behalf of real parties in interest. Reparation awarded to complainant for use and benefit of principals. Tanners' Council v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 27, 28, 29.

(31) Reparation awarded to complainant as agent for real party in interest by virtue of power of attorney empowering complainant "to receive and acknowledge any and all sums of money that may be paid" under the complaint. Hercules Power Co. v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 78 I. C. C., 55, 56.

(3m) Complainant's shipments were commandeered by Government for war purposes, and percentage commission in addition to delivered price which included transportation charges, allowed him. Contention by carrier that complainant is not entitled to reparation in respect of unreasonable charges on such transportation, not sustained. While freight charges in general were likely given consideration in determining just measure of compensation to complainant for the material, it does not appear that charge specifically assessed on shipments was given separate and individual consideration. Reparation awarded to complainant as party who paid and bore freight charges. Thorp v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 1, 2, 3.

(3n) Reparation awarded to consignor who sold shipments f. o. b. destination and deducted freight charges in settlements with consignees. Forbes Timber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 36, 38.

(3o) The right of an agent to sue on a contract which he has entered into in his own name without disclosing his agency, if the principal makes no objection, seems to have met with universal recognition. Accordingly, a person who, having in charge, as agent, the goods of another, makes with a common carrier a contract to ship such goods, in which the agency is not disclosed, may maintain action in his own name for a branch of such contract. Missouri Portland Cement Co. v. Director General, 88 I. C. C. 492, 496.

§7. Statute of Limitations.
See Claims I.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Where a party elects to proceed before this Commission for the recovery of damages, his petition filed with the Commission should be considered the beginning of the action in all its subsequent stages; consequently the suit of the members of a cattle raisers' association for the recovery of damages should be treated as having been begun by the filing on their behalf of the original petition by the association itself, although they subsequently intervened. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 83.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Where a complaint seeking reparation for certain claims is filed before the expiration of the limitation period applicable to said claims and upon motion of complainant is dismissed without prejudice, the Commission may in its discretion reinstate said original petition by a nunc pro tunc order as of date of the filing of the complaint in the first place, but it cannot reinstate such a complaint when the same has been amended to include claims not included in the original complaint and which are at the time of the motion for reinstatement barred by the statute of limitations. The Commission cannot sanction a practice permitting the revival of claims barred by the statute by subsequently attaching them to other claims presented within the prescribed period, despite any promises on the part of defendant carriers that they will not take advantage of the statute of limitations. The Commission has not jurisdiction to deal with complaints for reparation in any way unless filed with or presented to it within the period specified by the statute. It is not vested with the powers of a court of equity to relieve from hardships resulting from improvident arrangements or agreements between the parties. Louis Werner Sawmill Co. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 388, 389, 391.

(c) While the Commission holds that it is not necessary that a formal petition be filed in order to stop the running of the statute of limitations, an informal letter or other communication to accomplish this result must contain all the elements of the claim. Fiske & Sons v. B. M. R. R. 19 I. C. C. 299, 300.

(d) As section 206 (f) of the transportation act, 1920 provides that the period of federal control shall not be computed as part of the period of limitation in claims for reparation for causes of action arising prior to federal control, claims covering shipments moving more than two years prior to the filing of complaint are within the Commission's jurisdiction. Thomas Iron Co. v. Director General as agent, 57 I. C. C. 657.

(e) Section 206f of the transportation act, 1920, provides that the period of federal control shall not be computed as a part of the period of limitation in claims for reparation for causes of action arising prior to federal control. Heggem & Davis v. Director General 69 I. C. C. 162, 164.

(f) Section 206 f of the transportation act, 1920, provides that the period of federal control shall not be computed as a part of the periods of limitation in claims of reparation for causes of action arising prior to federal control. F. S. Harmon & Co. v. P. C. C. & St. L. R. R. 69 I. C. C. 348.

(g) Claims for reparation, based on causes of action which, excluding the period of Federal control as provided in section 206 (f) of the transportation act, 1920, arose within two years from date of filing complaint, found not barred. Ball, Seligman & Co. v. N. Y., P. & N. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 223.

(h) Claims for reparation covering shipments which moved during Federal control can not be considered where such claims were not filed with the commission within one year after the termination of Federal control, as required by the statute. Phoenix Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 284.

(i) Section 206 f of the act provides that the period of federal control shall not be computed as a part of the periods of limitations in actions against carriers or in claims for reparation to the commission for causes of action arising prior to federal control. R. H. Foerderer, Inc., v. Pennsylvania R. R., 74 I. C. C., 527, 528.

(j) Following Thomas Iron Co., 57 I. C. C., 657, contention that section 206 (f) of the transportation act, 1920, which provides that the period of Federal control shall be disregarded in computing the period of limitation in claims for reparation for causes of action arising prior thereto, is inapplicable to claims that accrued more than two years prior to the passage of the transportation act, not sustained. Lakewood Engineering Co. v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 465, 466.

(k) Where complaint is filed after the enactment of the transportation act, 1920, involving shipments moving prior thereto, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until two years from the date charges are paid, excluding the Federal control period, as provided in Section 206 (f) of such transportation act. Foerderer v. P. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 527, 528.

(k) Contention that claim for reparation barred by the statute of limitations not sustained. Formal complaint was filed less than six months after notice to complainant that the claim had failed of adjustment informally, in compliance with Rule III (g) of Rules of Practice, and within the statutory period, excluding the period of Federal control as provided in section 206 (f) of the transportation act, 1920. Hamilton Furnace Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 77 I. C. C. 377, 378.

(m) Motion to dismiss complaint on the ground that the statute of limitations had run against the shipments, HELD, Excluding the period of federal control as provided under section 206 (f) of the transportation act, 1920, not barred American Shipbuilding Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 439, 440.

(n) Under section 206 f of the transportation act, 1920, the period of federal control is not computed as a part of the period of limitation in claims for reparation arising prior thereto. American Shipbuilding Co. v. Director General, 77 I. C. C. 439, 440.

(o) Complainant at the hearing asked leave to amend its complaint to include a prayer for reparation on additional shipments. HELD, Claim, at time amendment presented, found barred by the statute of limitations and can not be considered. Lackawanna Steel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 465, 468.

(p) Where the transportation service was rendered prior to Federal control but charges were collected by the director general claims for reparation should be filed against the carriers. Terre Haute, Indianapolis & E. T. Co. v. Director General as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 658, 659.

(q) Section 206 (c) of the transportation act, 1920, making it the duty of the commission to entertain complaints for reparation on account of the collection by or through the President during Federal control of charges in violation of the interstate commerce act, was intended to cover charges collected for services performed at least in part, by the director general during Federal control. Complaints regarding charges collected by the director general as agent for the carriers, on account of services performed wholly prior to Federal control, should be filed against the carriers themselves. Terre Haute, Indianapolis & E. T. Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. 658, 659.

(qa) Contention by director general that claims for reparation on shipments delivered more than two years prior to February 28, 1920, are barred, not sustained. Section 206 (f) of transportation act, 1920, provides that period of Federal control shall not be computed as part of period of limitation in claims for reparation for causes of action arising prior to Federal control. Crown Willamette Paper Co. v. Dirctor General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 273, 277.

(r) The jurisdiction of the Commission to entertain complaints for reparation on account of the exaction of unreasonable rates on shipments that moved during the period of federal control is derived solely from the statutory provision which clearly indicates that it includes only complaints filed within a year after the termination of federal control, February 29, 1920. Pfitzenmayer Construction Co. v. Director General, 78 I. C. C. 287, 288.

(s) The time within which complaints for reparation on account of damage claimed to have been caused by reason of the collection or enforcement during federal control of rates which were unjust or unreasonable could be filed with the Commission was one year from date of expiration of federal control. Gulf Refining Co. v. Director General, 78 I. C. C. 347, 348.

(t) The Commission has no jurisdiction to award reparation against a carrier on interstate shipments delivered or tendered for delivery more than two years prior to the dates on which the complaints were filed with the Commission and no finding is made with respect to rates charged thereon. It is fundamental that the Commission acts only under the jurisdiction conferred upon it by Congress. The power to award damages for violations of the act created rights as well as remedies. Failure to assert the right within the statutory period not only bars the remedy but destroys the right. United States of America v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 143, 150.

(ta) The power to award damages for violations of the act created rights as well as remedies. Failure to assert rights within statutory period not only bars remery but destroys the right. In this respect the statute differs from ordinary statute of limitations which, when invoked, bars only the remedy, United States v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C., 143, 150, 151.

(tc) Complainant seasonably filed by two corporations, in which reparation was prayed in such sum as "complainants are entitled to as an award of damages." At hearing one of parties was withdrawn as complainant. Contention that complaint constitutes claim of withdrawal company only, and that claim of remaining complainant is barred by statute of limitations, not sustained. Complaint held sufficient to toll statute in behalf of either or both of joint complainants. Standard Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 643, 646.

(u) Contention that, period of limitation prescribed in interstate commerce act having expired prior to filing of claim and prior to enactment of transportation act, 1920, which extended this period, the commission is without jurisdiction to consider claim, not sustained. Same contention has been argued by carriers in other cases and rejected. Todd Dry Dock & Construction Corp., 74 I. C. C., 291. American Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. G. R. R., 80 I. C. C. 759.

(v) Complaint was seasonably filed by two corporations, in which reparation was prayed in such sum as "complainants are entitled to as an award of damages." At hearing one of parties was withdrawn as complainant. Contention that complaint constitutes claim on behalf of withdrawing company only, and that claim of remaining complainant is barred by statute of limitations, not sustained. Complaint held sufficient to toll statute in behalf of either or both of joint complainants. Standard Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 643, 646.

(va) Folowing informal complaint, complainant notified by commission of carrier's refusal to adjust claim and attention directed to Rule III of Rules of Practice with respect to limitation of six months for filing of formal complaint. Subsequently further attempt made with assistance of commission's Bureau of Traffic to secure adjustment with carrier, and unsuccessful result communicated to complainant. Formal complaint filed in six month from such communication. HELD: Formal complaint not barred, having been filed within six months allowed by Rule III after final notice by commission. Acme Cement Plaster Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 298, 299.

(vb) Section 206 (f) of transportation act, 1920, provides that period of Federal control shall not be computed as part of period of limitation in claims to commission for reparation for causes of action arising prior to Federal control. Davison & Namack Foundry Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 345.

(vc) Claim for reparation account of damage caused by refusal of director general to accept certain shipments for transportation, not presented until more than one year after termination of Federal control, found barred by limitation. Dow Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 351.

(vd) Contention that claim for reparation account of unreasonable rates assessed on shipments moving prior to Federal control is barred upon shipments delivered more than two years prior to filing of complaints, not sustained. Section 206 (i) of transportation act, 1920, provides that period of Federal control shall not be computed as part of period of limitation in claims for reparation for causes of action arising prior thereto. Inland Empire Paper Co. v. S. I. Ry. Co. 81 I. C. C. 603, 607.

(ve) Complaint for reparation account of shipment moved during Federal control filed informally with commission on January 19, 1921, and on March 22 of that year commission notified complainant that defendants were unwilling to make reparation to basis sought and that claim was not susceptible of informal adjustment. Formal complaint filed January 7, 1922. HELD: Since formal complaint not filed within period provided in Rule III (g) of commission's Rules of Practice, so much thereof as seeks reparation on any ground other than overcharge must be deemed to have been abandoned. Schuette Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 619.

(w) Section 206 f of the transportation act, 1920, provides that the period of federal control shall not be computed as a part of the periods of limitation in claims for reparation for causes of action arising prior to federal control. Inland Empire Paper Co. v. Director General, 81 I. C. C. 603, 607, 608.

(x) Section 16 of the Act providing that all complaints for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the Commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues and that the petition for the enforcement of an order for the payment of money shall be filed in the Circuit Court within one year from the date of the order does not apply to a suit instituted under section 9 of the Act. No limitation is prescribed by the Act for such a suit and whether the time is limited by the statute of limitations of the state in which the case arises, or by section 1047 of the Rev. St. U. S., quaere. Lyne v. D. L. W. R. R. Co., 170 Fed. 847, 849.

(y) The prohibitions of the Interstate Commerce Act against unjust discrimination relate not only to inequality of charges and inequality of facilities but also to the giving of preferences by means of consent judgments, or the waiver of defenses open to the carrier. The railroad company therefore is bound to claim the benefit of the statute that a claim for reparation is not filed in time and could do so by general demurrer. For when it appeared that the complaint had not been filed with the time required by the statute, it was evident, as matter of law, that the plaintiff had no cause of action. The carrier not being liable to the plaintiff for overcharges collected more than four years prior to the bringing of this suit, it was proper to dismiss the action. A. J. Phillips Co. v. G. T. W. R. Co., 35 Sup. Ct. 444, 446, 236 U. S. 662, 59 L. ed.

(z) Where assignee of claim against railroad on which award of reparation was made by Interstate Commerce Commission had no enforceable claim, because action was barred by limitation, under Interstate Commerce Act, § 16 as amended (U. S. Comp. St. § 8584), it was not entitled to amount still in railroad's hands under compromise between it and the assignor as money had and received. Westminster Nat. Bank v.

Boston & M. R. R. (Mass. 1923) 139 N. E. 345.

(aa) Under Commerce Act, §16, as amended (U. S. Comp. St. § 8584), where action by assignee of part of shipper's claim against railroad for reparation on account of damages, brought in assignee's own name, under R. L. c. 173, § 4, was not brought within one year, and was independent of prior action brought by assignor, it was barred. Westminster Nat. Bank v. Boston & M. R. R. (Mass. 1923) 139 N. E. 345.

(bb) Where, pending a suit for administration of the property of a railroad company for the benefit of creditors and stockholders, and before expiration of the time fixed by the court for filing claims, claims of shippers for overcharges were liquidated by an order of reparation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but no claims based thereon were filed in the suit, and thereafter the property was sold by the court, the purchaser being required as part of the purchase price to pay the claims allowed against it, holders of such overcharge claims HELD not entitled by intervention, more than four years after the sale, to assert liens on the property sold. North American Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 288 Fed. 612.

III. CIRCUMSTANCES DETERMINING RIGHT.

§7½. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The Commission will not make an award of damages in a case where the defendant is entitled to have the amount of damages assessed by a jury. Riddle Dean & Co. v. N. Y. L. E. & W. R. R. 1, I. C. C. 787.

(aa) The burden is upon defendant, in an action to recover back money paid for transportation over and above the amount provided for in the transportation contract, to allege and prove unjust discrimination. Bayles v. Kansas Pacific R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 643.

(b) Where claim for reparation is made in a complaint of unreasonable rates the burden of proof is on complainant to show the facts connected with the claim and when these facts have not been sufficiently brought out to enable the Commission to justly determine what reparation is due to the complainant in such cases it will decline to award reparation. Perry v. F. C. & P. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 741, 749.

(ba) A case before the Interstate Commerce Commission will not be reopened in a supplementary proceeding brought simply to secure reparation, for the purpose of ruling on questions not decided in the original case, where the petition for reparation was not filed until long after the original decision had been rendered and the offending carrier had complied therewith. Rice v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 455.

(c) It is not, however, every case where the payment of an excessive rate carries with it reparation. Each case seems to depend upon its own equities. Cattle Raisers Asso. of Texas v. Ft. W. & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 523, 555.

(d) An order granting reparation to shippers for an unreasonable rate must be based upon evidence and a finding that the rate was unreasonable at the time it was paid. Grain Shippers' Asso. of Northwest Iowa v. I. C. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 158, 183.

(e) Rates on barrel material from the west to Hawkinsville, Ga., were higher than those to Macon, Ga., from Feb. 10, 1896 to January 22, 1897. At times prior to the date first mentioned, and uniformly since the date last mentioned, the rates to Hawkinsville and Macon have been the same. Rates on other commodities are, as a rule, higher to Hawkinsville than to Macon. The distance is greater to Hawkinsville, which is located on a branch line, and competition is less active there than at Macon. HELD, since complainant failed to show that the rate ought to have been the same to Hawkinsville from Feb. 10, 1896 to January 22, 1897 as to Macon, complaint dismissed. Holmes & Company v. Southern R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 561.

(f) A complainant is entitled to an order for reparation in an amount equal to that by which the rates exacted and paid exceed reasonable rates, but the burden of showing the unreasonableness and the amount is upon the complainant. Holmes & Company v. Southern Ry Co., 8 I. C. C. 561, 567.

(g) It is true that the remedy by way of damages for unlawful rates is utterly inadequate and inconsistent, but it is apparently the remedy prescribed by the Act to Regulate Commerce, and the only remedy which the shipper has against the exaction of an unreasonable interstate rate. McGrew v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 8 I. C. C. 630.

(hi) The complainants are entitled to reparation to the extent of 13 cents per 100 lbs., amounting to $130 on their shipments, where the defendant's rate was 43 cents to Danville and 20 cents to Lynchburg. The 20 cent rate to Lynchburg violated the Act to Regulate Commerce in that it was 13 cents below the rate which was justified by competition from Baltimore or elsewhere. Gardner & Clark v. Southern R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 342.

(j) The complainants are entitled to reparation to the extent that the charges exacted from them on carload lots of snapped corn from Grove, I. T., to Marshall, Tex., exceeded 35½ cents per 100 lbs., which includes 21 cents per 100 lbs. as a reasonable rate from Grove, I. T., to Paris, Tex., and 14½ cents proportional rate for transportation from Paris to Marshall. H. P. Pitts & Son v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 684.

(k) The proportional rates per 100 lbs. charged by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway on shipments of hay over its road and the road of the Texas & Pacific Railroad Company from Robinson and La Junta, Colo., and Dodge City, Kan., to Marshall, Jefferson, and Kildare, Tex., were excessive and unreasonable to the extent that they exceeded 21 cents for the transportation to Ft. Worth, Tex., and those of the Texas company were excessive and unreasonable to the extent that they exceeded 15 cents for the transportation from Ft. Worth to the destination named. H. B. Pitts & Son v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 691.

(l) Upon two carloads of hay shipped about May 8, 1902, from Pataskala, O., one to Wilmington, N. C., and the other to Greenville, N. C., it appears that the Wilmington shipment was overcharged 1 cent per 100 pounds, and that on the Greenville shipment the rate under published tariffs should have been 30 cents per 100 pounds instead of a higher rate claimed by the defense to have been 30½ cents and by the complainant to have been 36 cents, the proof not indicating definitely what was actually charged. HELD: That the findings show a basis for adjustment and refund which should be made, and that the case be held open for further proof and order if that course should become necessary. The circumstances and conditions governing hay traffic from Columbus and Pataskala, O., appear to have been substantially dissimilar at a time when a lower rate from Columbus than from Pataskala to Greenville and Wilmington was in force, and complainant's demand for reparation based upon the rate then in force from Columbus is not sustained. Dewey Bro. Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. et al, 11 I. C. C. 475.

(la) A merely theoretical or paper rate, not used and unknown to the defendant until casually discovered, will not be accepted as affording a just basis for an order for reparation on shipments made to an intermediate point at a slightly higher rate. Missouri & Kansas Shippers' Ass'n. v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 483.

(lb) Where substantial justice will be satisfied with the establishment of a reasonable rate, an order for reparation is not required. Kindel v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 514.

(m) Complainant awarded reparation for difference between rate applied to shipments of brick and rate put into effect pending controversy. Frederick Brick Works v. North Cent. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 15.

(n) Reparation for difference between 62-cent rate from St. Paul, Minn., to Boston, Mass., via Duluth, and 45-cent rate via Lake Michigan ports, on complainant's shipment, to be paid by Chicago, St. P. M. & O. Ry. Co. v. Mutual Transit Co. as having received the whole of such difference. American Grass Twine Co. v. C. St. P. M. & O. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 141.

(o) Admission as to extent to which rate unreasonable, taken as basis for reparation. Kalamazoo Tank & Silo Co. v. Michigan Central R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 154.

(p) Complainant shipped one carload of silos, knocked down, from Kalamazoo, Mich., to Elkhorn, Wis., via Chicago, over defendants' lines, upon which it was charged a joint through rate of 28 cents per 100 pounds, whereas at the same time defendants' combination rate on Chicago between said points on said commodity was only 17 cents; similar improper adjustment in rates between points not given were alleged. After the case was at issue defendants reduced their joint through rate from Kalamazoo to Elkhorn to 16 cents per 100 pounds, and at the hearing they conceded that the 28-cent rate was excessive to the extent of a difference between that rate and 17 cents, and agreed that improper adjustment in rates between said other points should be corrected: HELD, That complainant should be awarded reparation on the specific shipment on the basis of such difference in rates, and that as to other matters mentioned in the case the complaint be dismissed. Kalamazoo Tank & Silo Co. v. Mich. Central R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 155.

(pa) Not proper to bring forward claim for reparation, after complaint heard and taken under advisement, unless some reasonable ground therefor be shown, or the Commission has so ordered. Dalas Freight Bureau v. G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. 12 I. C. C. 223.

(q) It does not follow, as a matter of course, where the Commission finds that the ends of justice require the reduction of a rate complained of that reparation must be ordered on shipments previously made. Complainant's claim for reparation on shipments made prior to filing of the complaint denied, but he will be allowed reparation on any shipments he may have made since the filing of complaint in so far as the charges thereon exceed the rate of 20 cents per 100 pounds, and this proceeding will be held open to allow complainant opportunity to present such claim and proofs. The Farmers' Warehouse Co. v. Louisville & N. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 457.

(r) Reparation will not be ordered as a matter of course, where the Commission finds that the ends of justice require the reduction of a rate complained of. Farmers' Warehouse Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 457.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(s) Reparation may properly be awarded where a discriminatory freight rate has been exacted, but it does not necessarily follow that because a rate is found to be unduly prejudicial that the complaining parties are the ones who have been damaged through its exaction. Curry & Whyte Co. v. D. I. R. R. R. Co., 30 I. C. C. 1, 14.

(t) When a wide readjustment, involving both increases and reductions, results from an investigation of a general rate structure and it appears that substantial justice would not be advanced by an award of reparation, reparation will be denied. Applying that principle reparation denied. Complaint dismissed. D. L. & W. Coal Company v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co., 46 I. C. C. 506.

(u) An award of reparation is not infrequently withheld in cases where a wide readjustment of rates has been made as the result of the Commission's findings in a general investigation. In such instances the revision is intended to bring the entire future rate structure into closer approximation and harmony with the conditions surrounding the service. Thereafter some of the shippers must pay higher rates while others will enjoy lower rates. In connection with such a readjustment the law affords no remedy to the carrier with respect to shipments in the past under rates that may have been too low. There is no provision of law permitting the set-off of this sum against the amount of reparation sought by the complainant, and this fact, of course, is not determinative of the complainant's claim. Nevertheless, the figures are of interest as indicating the general nature and effect of the readjustment. When such a revision results from the Commission's findings, all the shippers under the schedule are affected either one way or another by the changes made, and as the readjustment is general, it has been thought, under the particular circumstances appearing in various cases, that substantial justice would not be advanced by awards of reparation to those making such demands. This course, in the light of the facts developed in those cases, seems to have been within the spirit and the meaning of those provisions of the Act that relate to reparation; and in the public interest an order requiring a revision of a general rate structure ought not to be embarrassed and complicated by awards of reparation, as a necessary consequence of such a revision, unless from all the circumstances and facts surrounding the service and the traffic as they are disclosed upon the record, the Commission feels that essential justice requires such awards. D. L. & W. Coal Co. v. D. L. & W. R. R. 46 I. C. C. 506, 508, 509.

(v) Ordinarily the Commission does not award reparation except to a basis which is or has been in effect or which it requires to be established, over the route of movement. Alagoma Lumber Co. v. S. P. Co., 51 I. C. C. 529, 530.

(w) An award of damages by the Commission must be as certain and definite in law and fact as is essential to the support of a final judgment or decree requiring the payment of a definite sum of money by one party to another. That basis would be wholly lacking if a controversy was determined upon an issue of law raised, not in the pleadings, but upon brief and argument; and if the fact was merely inferable from testimony received solely for another and a collateral purpose. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 185.

(x) Question, should the Commission apply a lower basis to shipments made prior to June 25, 1918 when rates were increased about 25 per cent than on shipments made on or after that date in finding unreasonable the rates charged by the Director General on traffic which moved during federal control and in awarding reparation therefor. The Commission is convinced that it would not be warranted in announcing any rule of general application as a basis for determining the reasonableness of rates exacted on shipments moving before or after June 25, 1918 or any other date. HELD, no occasion appears for reopening any of the cases which have been pressed on attention of the Commission and this proceeding will be discontinued. In the matter of awarding reparation on a lower basis prior to June 25, 1918 than on and after that date. Reparation as Relating to an Increase in Rates, 68 I. C. C. 5.

(y) Where class rates are charged on unusual movements, if the commodity is not improperly classified and the class is not unreasonable, reparation will not be awarded. Rosin & Turpentine Export Co. v. A. C. L. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 141, 142.

(z) When class rates are charged on isolated shipments, and it is not shown that the commodity is improperly classified or that the class rate is unreasonable, reparation will not be awarded. Multibestos Co. v. S. P. Co., 73 I. C. C., 491, 492.

(aa) An award of reparation would not necessarily follow from a finding that a classification rating was unreasonable. State Highway Department of Texas v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 741, 742.

(aaa) Complainants in support of allegation of unreasonableness merely stated that rates charged were found unreasonable and that reasonable rates were subsequently established as result of finding in previous case. HELD: Since reparation or rates, which were made the measure of reasonable rates for future from point here involved, were not in issue, finding in previous case insufficient upon which to base award of reparation against a carrier, who took no part in defense of that case, on shipments moving prior to establishment of rates there prescribed. Continental Gin Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 369.

(bb) An isolated movement during a comparatively short period from a nonproducing point is not a proper basis for requiring the establishment of rates for the future or for an award of reparation, but the fact of the shipments having been isolated is not the sole determinative factor as shippers are entitled to reasonable rates. Meigs Pulpwood Co. v. Director General, 78 I. C. C. 473, 474.

(cc) Evidence was admitted at hearing as to various commodities not specifically mentioned in complaints, over objection of defendant that the commission's Rules of Practice require commodities to be specifically named in complaints seeking reparation. HELD: Fact that complaints named certain commodities and "various other commodities," stating that detailed information would be furnished by complainants; that reparation is sought on basis of a rate which applied irrespective of contents of cars; and that informal correspondence preceded one of complaints; defendant was sufficiently advised of the issues raised. New Orleans Board of Commissioners v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 664, 666.

(dd) Shipment from point in United States, destined to another point in United States, moved in part through Canada. Contention by director general that commission is without jurisdiction to award reparation in respect of such rate not sustained. Rate assailed was a joint rate, and all carriers parties thereto are jointly and severally liable for any damage resulting from its application. American lines over which shipment moved are subject to jurisdiction of the commission. Director general was operating them and is thus liable for full amount of any damage sustained. International Nickel Co., 66 I. C. C., 627 I. C. C., 627, 628. Staley Mfg. Co. v. C. P. Ry. Co. 80 I. C. C. 512.

(ee) Complainant seeking reparation in respect of intrastate shipments moving during so-called guaranty period, March 1 to September 1, 1920, dismissed due to lack of jurisdiction. The commission is without authority to award reparation on intrastate shipments moving subsequent to termination of Federal control. Crookston Gas Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co. 81 I. C. C. 128, 130.

(ff) Contention that section 6 of the act, in porviding penalty for failure to comply with regulations or orders made by commission under that section, precludes recovery of overcharge arising from illegal rate, not sustained. Section 8 of the act provides for liability to persons injured through carrier's violation of the act, and section 9 gives such persons election to make complaint to commission or prosecute action in Federal courts. Complainant could recover amount paid in excess of legal rate in common-law action for money had and received, and reparation in like amount can be awarded by commission because colection of illegal rate constitutes violation of the act. Proctor & Gamble Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 361, 363.

(gg) The failure of defendants to complete a transportation service which they contracted to perform does not constitute a basis for an award of reparation under the interstate commerce act. Midland Linseed Products Co. v. Director General, 88 I. C. C. 247, 249.

§8. Erroneous publication or quotation.

See Erroneous Rates.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Misrepresentation by a carrier as to the rate charged, but without injury, affords no ground of redress in a suit for damages. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Smith (Ark.) 4 I. C. R. 415.

(b) Reparation made where tariff rate was result of clerical error. Holcomb-Hayes Co. v. Illinois Central R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 128.

(c) Reparation for excess collected on shipments of cross-ties by reason of clerical error in tariffs. Holcomb-Hayes Co. v. Illinois C. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 128.

(d) Defendant admitted that the insertion of a certain rate in its tariffs, which applied to complainant's particular shipments of cross-ties from Hopkinsville, Ky., to points in Illinois, was the result of clerical error. Subsequently this rate was voluntarily reduced by defendant. Upon complaint defendant expressed willingness to pay to complainant the excess collected by reason of such error, if protected by order of this Commission; and thereupon the Commission, having substantiated the facts, ordered such special reparation: HELD, upon the foregoing facts, that the formal complaint be dismissed. Holcomb Co. v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 129.

(e) Complainant attacked as unreasonable rates charged on cross ties from Hopkinsville, Ky., to Herrin, Ill. and Pawnee Junction, Ill. Rate charged 14c, the rate previous and subsequent to shipment being 12c. Defendant admitted the rate charged was published through clerical error and was willing to refund down to the basis of 12c. HELD, rate attacked unreasonable to extent it exceeded 12c, reparation awarded. Holcomb Hayes Company v. I. C. R. R., 12 I. C. C. 129.

(f) While shippers largely rely upon the rates quoted by freight agents and billing clerks, the law charges them with knowledge of the lawful rates. And they will not be heard, before this Commission to claim the benefit of a lower than the lawful rate on the ground that some railroad clerk has made a mistake in quoting a lower rate to a particular shipment. To permit shippers to impute negligence to carriers in quoting rates and on that ground to enjoy the rate quoted instead of paying the lawfully published rate would open a way for the payments of rebates and might, in practical results, work a repeal of the law. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 418, 423.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(g) In several cases the Commission has awarded reparation on account of errors in tariff publications and have held solely responsible the carrier by which the error was made. To hold that a shipper must look beyond the tariffs of the carrier that is offering him a service in order to ascertain whether specific statements in those tariffs with respect to the charges of its connections are correct, would be to put the shipper under a harsh and onerous obligation which we have never held to rest upon him. On the contrary, it is the carrier's duty in publishing its tariffs to see that they are correct, and this is no less its obligation when it undertakes specifically to show the charges of its connections which it proposes to absorb under its own rates. Chelsea Refining Co. v. M. P. Ry., 38 I. C. C. 28, 29.

(h) The fact that a shipper may have been misled by the carrier's agent into believing that it was necessary for him to order a larger car than was required affords no ground for reparation. Wilcox Merc. Co. v. Wabash Ry., 44 I. C. C. 552, 553.

(i) The law is well settled that the misquotation by the agent or employe of the carrier of a rate, or tariff provision which affects the application of a rate or charge of itself is not a sufficient basis for an award of reparation. Sellen v. L. V. R. R., 55 I. C. C. 117, 118.

(j) It is well settled that the misquotation of a rate by the agent or employe of a carrier is not a sufficient basis for an award of reparation. Rosin & Turpentine Export Co., v. A. C. L. R. R. Co. 73 I. C. C. 141, 142.

(k) Misquotation of a rate by the agent or employee of a carrier is not a sufficient basis for an award of reparation. Rosin & Turpentine Export Co. v. A. C. L. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 141, 142.

(l) The misquotation of a rate by the agent or employee of a carrier is not a sufficient basis for an award of reparation. Rosin & Turpentine Export Co. v. A. C. L. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 141, 142.

(m) As complainants were charged with knowledge of the rate applicable to their shipment they can not rely, upon the misquotation of that rate in support of their claim for damages. Armacost & Company v. M. M. T. Co., 88 I. C. C. 185, 186.

(a) In determining the question of reparation, in a suit to declare a terminal charge excessive and unlawful, where the question of reparation was held open pending determination of another branch of the case, during which time a reduction in the through rate was made from certain territory, which reduction amounted to more than the terminal charge the following procedure was directed by the Commission: Damages to be allowed on shipments from all territory down to the date of the reduction in the through rates, and from territory to which that reduction did not apply, down to the date of the hearing; but it was directed that those damages accruing before and those accruing after the original order of the Commission holding the terminal charge unlawful and unjust be shown separately, with leave to defendants to show any change in the conditions since the date of the order of the Commission, which would render the entire through rate, including the terminal charge, a reasonable one. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 83.

(b) The decision of the Supreme Court sustaining the view of the Commission as to the unlawfulness and excessiveness of a terminal charge, but dismissing the proceeding on account of a subsequent reduction in the through rate, which amounted to more than the terminal charge, constitutes no bar to submission of proof before the Commission upon the queston of reparaton, covering the period elapsing prior to the reduction in the through rate referred to, which question had been properly held open by the Commission pending determination of the other branch of the case. Cattle Raiser's Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 83.

(c) While the Commission found as a fact that the charges of defendant were in some instances unreasonable, it made no attempt to formulate an order, as it had no power to prescribe the rate that should be put into effect; but it held that complainant might apply to it for reparation in case it should thereafter be compelled to pay rates in excess of those indicated. Barrow v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 333.

(d) Decision in Blackwell Milling and Elevator Co. v. M., K. and T. Rwy. Co., 12 I. C. C. Rep. 23, cited and applied. Complainant awarded reparation. Ponca City Milling Co. v. M. K., & T. R. Co., 12. I. C. C. 26.

(e) Reparation in accordance with previous order, on shipments made subsequent to the filing of complaint, upon presentation of claim and proof thereof as therein provided. Farmers' Warehouse Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 520.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(f) Where the Commission has prescribed reasonable rates and the carriers fail to substitute them for the old rates until the lapse of a considerable period, the shippers are entitled to reparation from the date of the decision irrespective of whether the carriers exercise proper diligence, since the Act entitles shippers to a just and reasonable transportation; and if the carriers impose upon them rates in excess of this they damage the shippers, and reparation should be allowed. In re Rates on Live Stock, Packing House Products and Fresh Meats from Southwestern Points, 28 I. C. C. 332, 335.

(g) The compulsory reduction of rates does not necessarily entitle shippers under the preexisting rates to reparation. Reparation has been denied on shipments moving prior to the effective date of orders reducing rates, where the rates reduced have long been in effect and when the orders requiring reductions involved readjustments of rates throughout an extensive territory. Southwestern Millers League v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 46 I. C. C. 299, 300.

(h) In original report, 61 I. C. C. 671, rates on range cattle from Rock Springs, Wyo., to Storey, Calif., found unreasonable to extent they exceed the aggregate of intermediate rates to and beyond Ogden, Utah. Upon further hearing, necessary evidence having been supplied, reparation awarded. Russell Bros. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 125.

(i) Upon further hearing reparation awarded, proof having been submitted that complainants paid and bore charges for the transportation of coal from Kentucky mines to Clarksville, Tenn., at rates found unreasonable in original report, 66 I. C. C., 529. City of Clarksville, Tenn., v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 509.

(j) Upon further hearing, reparation denied on shipments moving under unreasonable rates found in former report, 55 I. C. C., 42. Shippers do not have expense bills for part of the transportation and do not know and are unable to prove final destinations of the shipments in issue. Peoria Board of Trade v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 532.

(k) Upon further hearing, reparation awarded on shipments of transit grain from Buffalo, N. Y., made subsequent to original hearing, under rates found prejudicial in original report, 55 I. C. C., 587. Globe Elevator Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C. 591.

(l) Due to error in the record, finding in original report 73 I. C. C., 27, denied reparation to complainant on the ground that there was no evidence that it paid and bore transportation charges on its shipments. Error corrected, and reparation awarded. Cannelton Sewer Pipe Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 647.

(m) A shipper of lumber who was not a party to proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission in which the lumber rate paid by him was declared unreasonable, was entitled as all other shippers similarly situated, by appropriate proceedings before the Commission or the courts to obtain the benefit of that general finding and order. A. J. Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co., 35 Sup. Ct. 444, 445; 236 U. S. 662; 59 L. ed.

(n) Complainants in support of allegation of unreasonableness merely stated that rates charged were found unreasonable and that reasonable rates were subsequently established as a result of finding in previous case. HELD: Since reparation of rates, which were made the measure of reasonable rates for the future from point here involved, were not in issue, finding in previous case insufficient upon which to base award of reparation against a carrier, who took no part in defense of that case, on shipments moving prior to establishment of rates there prescribed. Continental Gin Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 369.

(o) Interstate rates on printing and wrapping paper from manufacturing points in Wisconsin to destinations in Wisconsin, Illinois, and Iowa found unreasoable to extent they exceeded rates prescribed in Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co., 66 I. C. C., 571. Reparation awarded. Wisconsin Traffic Asso. v. A. C. & H. B. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 217.

§9. Failure to Post Tariff.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Failure to post supplement to tariff which contained no change as to rates affords no basis for an award of reparation. Faribault Furniture Co. v. C. G. W. R. R. Co., 25 I. C. C. 40.

(b) Damages can not be recovered on account of failure of defendant to have proper tariff posted at its stations. Franke Grain Co. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 27 I. C. C. 625.

(c) Reparation awarded for damages sustained by reason of failure of carriers to post tariff advancing a rate. Wolf Milling Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. 439.

§10. Laches.

CASES \1887-1908

(a) Complainant attacked rates on oil in barrels from Titusville, Pa., to Buffalo, N. Y., as compared with the rates on oil in tank cars as unreasonable and unjustly discriminatory. In the original decision dated April 15, 1889, complaint dismissed. Complainants having filed a petition for reparation long after decision by the Commission and compliance therewith by the defendant; HELD, the case will not be reopened in a supplementary proceeding, which is only brought to secure reparation, for the purpose of ruling upon questions not decided in the original case. That as to the reparation demanded for injuries which resulted from practices found unlawful in said decision, it would be unwise and unjust to amend a final order entered several years ago and promptly obeyed by the defendant, so as to subject such carrier to further requirements in favor of complainants in respect of violations corrected under said order. Rice Robinson & Witherop v. W. N. Y. & P. R. Co., 68 I. C. C. 455.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Where complaints seeking reparation are filed within the period of limitation they cannot be defeated on the ground of laches because not filed at an earlier date. Kindelon v. S. P. Co., 17 I. C. C. 251, 253.

§10½. Necessity of Showing Damage.

See Allowances VI; Discrimination §15, §17; Long and Short Hauls §13.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Commission holds there is no merit in the contention that reparation should not be granted because a rate held unreasonable has been in force a sufficient length of time to cause trade conditions to become adjusted thereto, and for that reason complainant could not have been damaged. Capital Electric Co. v. B. & O. C. T. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 472, 474.

(b) Reparation may properly be awarded where a discriminatory freight rate has been exacted, but it does not necessarily follow that because a rate is found to be unjustly discriminatory and unduly prejudicial that the complaining parties are the ones who have been damaged through its exaction. Curry & Whyte Co. v. D. & I. R. R. Co., 30 I. C. C. 1, 14.

(c) The mere fact that the seller may have added to the price the amount of the prospective freight charges based on the existing rate does not show that the buyer was damaged to the extent the rate was unreasonable, as the seller was under no obligation to refund any part of the price paid if the rate should be reduced before the commodity moved, and the buyer could not be required to pay more if the freight should be increased. Phoenix Printing Co. v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., 31 I. C. C. 289, 293.

(d) Before award of reparation can be made on account of undue discrimination or preference on the part of carriers subject to the Act, the complainant must prove that he was actually damaged by reason of such discrimination and, furthermore, must prove the amount of damages. Mere proof of particular shipments made and of freight paid does not make out a prima facie case. Complainant must establish the fact and amount of damage. Spiegle v. S. Ry. Co., 32 I. C. C. 687, 689.

(e) It has been held there is nothing in the Act justifying a presumption of damage. In S. P. Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer, 245 U. S. 531, the reparation was awarded for the payment of an unreasonable rate and question before the court was whether the fact that the plaintiffs were able to pass on the damage they sustained in the first instances by paying the unreasonable charge, and to collect that amount from the purchasers, prevents their recovering the overpayment from the carriers. The court said that cases like Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. International Coal Mining Co., 230 U. S. 184, where a party that has paid only the reasonable rate sues upon a discrimination because some other has paid less, are not like the present. There the damage depends upon remoter considerations. Obviously it would be inconsistent and contrary to the intent and spirit of the Act, to hold that to recover under section 2 and 3 there must be proof of damage and under section 4 the departure therefrom is of itself proof of damage. Iten Biscuit Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry., 53 I. C. C. 729, 732.

(f) The claim for reparation is not based upon any loss of business, but rather upon the alleged fact that because of the difference in the freight rate complainant was forced to shrink his profits by the amount thereof. Complainants positive testimony is that during the reparation period he did not charge any higher price than his competitors, and that he could not have charged a higher price without serious loss of prestige and future business, and there is no evidence to the contrary. While there was no competition for present business, there was competition for future trade. This future business and good will of his customers was a thing of value to complainant and must be recognized as a justification for meeting the prices of his competitors. Cornell v. L. V. R. R., 57 I. C. C. 157, 163.

(g) Complainants have not shown that they were damaged as a result of the departures from the long and short haul provision of the fourth section of the act, and are entitled to no reparation in that behalf. Birmingham Packing Co. v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 44, 48.

(h) The fact that complainant might have obtained greater profits if lower rates had applied does not prove damage when the rate paid is not shown to have been unreasonable. Vickers Petroleum Co. v. Director General, 73 I. C. C. 578, 580.

(i) Contention that shippers have not shown that they were damaged by reason of rates assessed during the period when the prices of coal were regulated by the Federal Government through the Fuel Administration. HELD, not sustained. If shippers paid and bore as transportation charges rates that were unreasonable they are entitled to reparation. Wilbur Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 152, 159.

(j) Director General endeavored to show that complainants were not damaged for reason that the price of coal during period in question were subjected to the regulation of the Federal Government through the Fuel Administration, and that complainants sold their coal at prices which included the freight charges paid, and the margin of profit allowed. HELD, complainants paid and bore as transportation charges unreasonable rates and are entitled to reparation. They have "paid cash out of pocket that should not have been required of them." City of Clarksville, Tenn. v. Director General as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 509, 510.

(k) Contention that reparation should be denied because complainant sold its products f. o. b. point of destination at prices which included the prepaid freight charges. HELD, not sustained following Wheeler & Timlin, 60 I. C. C., 265. Lancaster Steel Products Corp. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 567, 570.

(l) Fact that shipper might have obtained greater profits if the lower rates to other points had applied does not prove damage when the rate paid is not shown to have been unreasonable. Vickers Petroleum Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 578, 580.

(m) Where class rates are charged on unusual movements, if it is not shown that the commodity is improperly classified or that the class rate is unreasonable, reparation will not be awarded. Bilrowe-Alloys Co. v. N. P. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 625, 626.

(n) Carriers resist an award of reparation on the ground that even though rates should be found unreasonable, complainants have not proved damage as the price of coal has been increased with the increase in rates. HELD, following Darnell-Taenzer Case, 245 U. S., 531, contention is without merit. Gross v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 649, 653.

(o) Objection of carriers to an award of reparation on the ground that the commodity was sold at a price which included freight charges and profits, HELD, reparation is due the person who pays the excessive charge as the price of transportation. Nicholas Oil Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 725, 728.

(p) Damages for speculative future losses are not recoverable, and redress for present losses can not be denied by speculating that such losses may be recouped at some future time. A loss is an established fact for the time being, while possible profit in the future is entirely conjectural. Avella Coal Co. v. P. & N. U. Ry. Co., 77 I. C. C. 741.

(q) If the charges are unreasonable, complainant suffered damage when it paid such charges. No further proof is necessary, for the law does not inquire into later events. Cramp & Sons v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 341, 343.

(r) That complainant would receive an additional profit in the amount of the difference between the rate charged and the rate enjoyed by its competitors is not sufficient to support an award of reparation even if defendant were guilty of unduly preferring complainants competitors. J. Henry Koenig Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 81 I. C. C. 683, 684.

(s) The Supreme Court has decided in Southern Pacific Company, et al. v. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Company, et al, 245 U. S. 531, 38 Sup. Ct. 186, 62 L. Ed. (Jan. 21, 1918), that, where a shipper has paid a rate afterwards declared to be excessive by the Interstate Commerce Commission, he may recover as damages the difference between the excessive rate and the rate declared to be just and reasonable by the Commission, without proof of actual injury. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Spiller, 249 Fed. 677.

(t) When the Commission has found that there was damage to a specified extent, prima facie the damage is shown. Mills v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 35 Sup. Ct. 888, 892; 238 U. S. 473, 59 L. ed.

(u) The payment of freight charges, subsequently found by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be unreasonable and excessive, is presumptive evidence of damage to the shipper to the extent of the difference between the rate charged and a reasonable rate, and such presumption can be overcome only by definite proof, not resting upon uncertainty or conjecture, negativing the fact or the amount of damage; and hence the prima facie effect of the Commission's findings that shippers of lumber from Memphis to California were damaged by an excessive rate to the extent of the excess above a reasonable rate was not overcome by its further findings that the price of the lumber was little influenced by Coast prices, that the shippers charged substantially the same price whether sales were in the East, for export, or for shipment to California, and that thus the advance in the freight rate had been added to the price paid by the consumer. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 221 Fed., 890.

(v) A rule requiring the shipper to mathematically demonstrate that it was actually pecuniary damaged to the amount of the unreasonable excess in rates so paid would effectually emasculate the reparation provision of the Interstate Commerce Act. The Commission's statement that the excessive freight rate had been added to the price paid by the consumer did not, as a matter of law, and in view of the other considerations referred to by the Commission, overcome the prima facie effect of the findings that plaintiffs were damaged to the extent of such excessive freight rate actually paid by them. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 221 Fed. 890, 894.

(w) Contention that complainant is not entitled to reparation because proof of damage rests upon testimony of chief clerk in complainant's traffic department that complainant paid and bore charges, not sustained. Witness' testimony is in no way discredited, and no further proof of damage is necessary. Proctor & Gamble Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C., 363.

(x) In testifying as to payment of freight charges complainants' witness acknowledged that commodity had been resold at prices including a profit, presumably as high as it would have been if freight charges had been lower. Defendants urged that complainants were therefore not damaged. HELD: Substantially same contention advanced by director general in numerous other cases and overruled. Darnell-Taenzer case, 245 U. S., 531. Southern Arizona Traffic Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 609, 612.

(y) Failure on part of shipper to request, prior to shipment, a rate to which he is entitled under rule 77 of Tariff Circular 18-A, through ignorance of the rule or otherwise, is not a reason for saying that he is not entitled to reparation, or that burden is on him to show that higher rate paid was unreasonable per se, or that he has suffered damage from undue prejudice. In such cases, shipper has "paid cash out of pocket that should not have been required of him and there is no question as to amount of proximate loss." Darnell-Taenzer case, 245 U. S., 531, 533. Pittsburgh Crucible Steel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 659, 662.

(z) Evidence established with reasonable certainty that prices which complainant was able to obtain were fixed by its competitors, and that it was compelled to forego certain profits solely because freight rates from prejudiced point exceeded freight rates from preferred points by more than a specified differential. It follows, therefore, that undue prejudice found to exist was proximate cause of injury sustained, and that compainant's damage is measured by such excess in freight rate. Lester & Toner v. L. I. R. R. Co., 83 I. C. C. 251, 253.

(aa) Complainant did not pay freight freight bills not submitted in evidence. Complainant's billing clerk testified that freight charges were paid by consignor and charged back to complainant, but his knowledge based on affidavit of former official of complainant company, itself inadmissible as evidence, and from general knowledge of how complainant's business was usually conducted. HELD: Evidence of damage not sufficiently certain and definite to justify issuance of order of reparation in complainant's favor. Hazard Jellico Coal Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 383, 384.

(bb) Where there is lack of proof as to payment and bearing of freight charges reparation will be denied. Standard Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 705, 706.

§10½a. Paper Rate.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Paper Rates not just basis for reparation. Missouri & Kansas Shippers Asso. v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co. 12 I. C. C. 483.

§11. Rate via Competing Line.

See Evidence §47; Routing and Misrouting §5.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) There are two routes over which coal may be shipped from the Thacker District, in West Virginia, to Alexandria, Ind.; one by the N. & W. and C. C. C. & St. L., the shorter line, and one by the N. & W., H. V., and L. E. & W. Complainants in 1903 had shipped to them at Alexandria, Ind., eight carloads of coal from the Thacker District, W. Va., over the latter route, and by that line the published rate was $1.90 per ton, while over the other route the rate was $1.65 per ton. November 26, 1903, the rate by the route used was reduced to $1.65, and later the other line lowered its rate to $1.55. Complainants, acting on behalf of the consignor, demanded reparation. The evidence relates solely to the rate itself, and the fact that a lower rate was in force over a competing short line. HELD, that the rate charged is not shown to have been unreasonable, and that, in view of their published tariff, the carriers in the through line over which the coal was carried could not lawfully apply the lower rate in effect over the competing line. J. J. Marley & Son v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 616.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) In a claim for reparation it is not sufficient to prove the unreasonableness of a rate merely to show that at the time of shipment a lower rate was in effect via another competing route. Delray Salt Co. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 18 I. C. C. 247.

(c) The Commission declines to award reparation on the basis of an out-of-line rate. Chaffin Coal Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 24 I. C. C. 321, 322.

(d) The existence of lower rates over routes other than a particular route of movement, and a subsequent reduction of the rate over the particular route, are not alone sufficient to establish the unreasonableness of the previous rate. Fullerton Powell Hardwood Lumber Co. v. G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co., 41 I. C. C. 625, 626.

(e) Had a shipper left routing open or observed tariff restriction so that several routes over which a lower rate applied could have been used he would be entitled to reparation if his shipment moved over a higher rated route, but when he routed shipments via a higher rated route through an error of his agent, the fact of itself does not entitle him to reparation. Every shipper is charged with notice of the terms of interstate tariffs governing his shipments; and the mere showing of the existence of lower rates over other routes and comparisons based upon distance alone, are insufficient to establish the unreasonableness of the rate charged. South Chester Tube Co. v. M., K. & T. Ry. Co., 64 I. C. C. 78.

(f) Whether the shipments were routed by shipper voluntarily or on instructions of the carriers agent is immaterial if the rates charged were unreasonable. Kansas Rock Salt Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. 69 I. C. C. 745, 751.

§12. Readjustment of Rates.

See Evidence §66; Relative Rates.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) When carriers have reduced rates of their own volition or in compliance with orders it does not necessarily follow that reparation should be awarded on shipments which moved under preexisting rates; and Commission has frequently declined to award reparation when rates reduced have been in effect for long periods and reduction applied throughout a large territory and affected shippers not parties to the proceedings Boardman Co. v. S. P. Co., 37 I. C. C. 81, 86, 87.

(b) It would obviously be unfair, when a general rate adjustment is made, to hold that the uniform basis finally chosen for the purpose of eliminating existing inequalities and inconsistencies should also be used by shippers as a basis for obtaining refunds of charges paid before the readjustment took place. Official Classification Rates on Paper, 38 I. C. C. 120, 149.

(c) In a wide readjustment of rates involving both increases and reductions, reparation in many cases has been denied. Giving due consideration to the relationship between the complainant and the defendant, reparation is denied on anthracite coal from the anthracite region in Pennsylvania to tidewater and other points. Delaware Lackawanna & Western Coal Co. v. D. L. & W. R. R., 46 I. C. C. 506, 508, 510.

(d) In a comprehensive and systematic readjustment of rates prescribed by the Commission in a large section of territory, claims for reparation will not ordinarily be allowed, and to award reparation in the instant case would be a departure from this principle. Dewey Portland Cement Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 56 I. C. C. 444, 448.

(e) The Commission has repeatedly held that the awarding of reparation does not necessarily follow the reduction of a rate, whether the reduction is by voluntary action of the carrier or by order of the Commission. In the absence of proof of damage to the shipper, the fact that carriers have charged rates which contravene the long and short haul rule of the fourth section of the act is not of itself a sufficient basis for an award of reparation. Indian Refining Co. v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 246, 247.

(f) Where readjustments have been initiated by carriers the Commission has found that exercise of their judgment in good faith and within reasonable limits should not be at peril of liability for reparation, that the awarding of reparation by no means necessarily follows the reduction of a rate by their voluntary action. Sapulpa Refining Co. v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 493, 494.

(g) A large number of complaints were filed involving a large number of points scattered throughout an extensive territory, and in order that the commission's findings might result in uniformity, it was deemed desirable to consider them as a whole. Complainants contended that had each complaint been decided on its own merits, with conclusions similar to those reached, reparation would have followed as a matter of course. HELD: Proceeding more in the nature of a general investigation than the determination of individual or consolidated complaints. Holmes & Hallowell Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 69 I. C. C. 11, 17.

(h) Carriers should not be at peril of liability for reparation merely because reduction in rates was authorized in course of readjustment. Atlantic Refining Co., 58 I. C. C., 46; Pine Plume Lumber Co., 59 I. C. C., 371. Dixie Portland Cement Co. v. Director General, 83 I. C. C. 417, 419.

(i) The Commission has consistently denied reparation in cases where general readjustments have been made in extensive territories, involving increases and reductions. Iola Cement Mill Traffic Asso. v. A. W. Ry., 87 I. C. C. 451, 468.

§13. Res Adjudicata.

See Evidence V.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) In cases before this Commission involving rates neither the plea of res adjudicata nor stare decisis as used at common law has any standing as affecting shipments moving subsequent to the decision of the Commission relied on. Waco Freight Bureau v. H. & T. C. R. R. Co., 19 I. C. C. 22, 24.

(b) Rates reasonable at the present time may within the period of two years become very unreasonable by reason of changes in circumstances and conditions, economic transportation, or the like. It should be just as apparent that a rate which was unreasonable two years or more ago may become reasonable by reason of such changes in conditions. A plea of estopped by reason of former adjudication is not good in so far as an investigation of present rates is concerned, although in a former proceeding a decree of a court was a general finding for the defendants on all the issues of fact. National Hay Ass'n. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 19 I. C. C. 34, 37.

§14. Special Rate.

See Special Rates.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Commission cannot permit a refund on a particular shipment for the purpose of enabling carriers to make good a rate not in effect when the shipment moved, but which they had agreed to protect, it being necessary to show that the rate charged was unreasonable and to award reparation on the basis of a reasonable rate. Crowell & Spencer Lumber Co. v. T. & P. Ry. Co., 17 I. C. C. 333, 334.

ALL OTHER CITATIONS

Holcomb-Hayes Co. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 13 I. C. C. 16, 19.

§15. Unpublished Charges.

See Evidence §60; Unpublished Rates.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The rule of an unpublished interstate rate is illegal, and so it has been held. Refund must be made of unpublished charges and those in excess of published charges. Northern Lumber Mfrs. Co. v. T. & P. Ry. Co., 19 I. C. C. 54, 55.

(b) Complainant routed shipment via the line of a water carrier not filing tariffs with the Commission. Routing instructions disregarded and shipment forwarded all rail. HELD, following Conference Rulings 93 and 354, reparation denied, as there is no official measure of the accuracy of the overcharge alleged. American Cement Plaster Co. v. Ft. W. & D. C. Ry. Co., 58 I. C. C. 435.

ALL OTHER CITATIONS

National Lumber Co. v. S. P. L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 434.

§16. Voluntary or Subsequent Reductions.

See Evidence §64; Voluntary Rates; Reasonableness of Rates §32½.

(a) Complainant shipped thirteen carloads of beer between January 20, 1901, and March 4, 1902, as through shipments over defendant's lines, from Milwaukee, Wis., to Woodward, Okla., upon eight carloads of which he was charged a rate of 73 cents per one hundred pounds, and upon five carloads 75 cents; whereas during the time of such shipments defendants' rates on beer from Milwaukee to Oklahoma City, Okla., more distant than Woodward, were only 53 cents per one hundred pounds. It appears that the rate to Woodward was 53 cents in 1892 and up to March 1, 1899, while the rate to Oklahoma City was 76 cents in 1892, which was reduced in 1893 to 53 cents, and so continued to 1899; and it also appears that on April 9, 1902, defendants reduced such rates to Woodward to 53 cents, where they have ever since remained. HELD, That the rate charged upon complainant's shipments were unjust and unreasonable to the extent of $715.05, and that complainant is entitled to reparation in that amount. Cutter v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 689.

(aa) Complainant attacked as unreasonable class rate charged on cottonseed, carloads, from Marietta, Okla., to Cleburne, Tex., and from Berwyn, Okla., to Cleburne, Tex. Rate charged class rate of 27c and 29c respectively, the defendant subsequently publishing a commodity rate of 16c and 18c respectively, satisfactory to complainant, and expressed a willingness to award reparation. HELD, rate attacked unreasonable to extent it exceeded rates subsequently established, reparation awarded. E. W. Pressley v. G. C. & S. F. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 518.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) It is to the interest of the shipping public in nowise to embarrass carriers in decreasing rates when the latter thinks such decrease equitable and therefore the Commission will not adopt a policy by which, upon the voluntary reduction of a rate, a shipper who has previously paid the higher rate may recover as damages whatever difference there may be between the old and the new, where application has not been made either to the railroad or to the Commission for a reduction of the rate prior to the time at which the railroad itself makes such reduction and where it does not clearly appear that the rate complained of was unreasonable. Foster Lumber Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 15 I. C. C. 56, 57.

(c) Where rates have been established by carriers in good faith and acquiesced in by shippers without protest, this Commission will not award reparation, even though the rate is reduced, unless it clearly appears that the rates paid in the past have been excessive. Penrod Walnut & Veneer Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 326, 328.

(d) The voluntary reduction of a rate by a carrier is not of itself such a proof of the unreasonableness of the former rate as to form a proper basis for an award of reparation. Sunderland Bros Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 18 I. C. C. 512, 513.

(e) The voluntary reduction of a rate by a carrier does not, in itself, without proof that the former rate was unreasonable, furnish a sufficient basis for reparation. Pierce v. P. L. E. R. R. Co., 23 I. C. C. 89, 91.

(f) A mere showing that rates were subsequently reduced is insufficient to warrant a finding of unreasonableness. Walsh Fire Clay Products Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 410, 412.

(g) The subsequent reduction of a rate over the route of movement, or the contemporaneous maintenance of lower rates over other routes, does not warrant an award of reparation. Chicago Lake Shore & South Bend Ry. v. I. C. R. R., 74 I. C. C., 609, 610.

(h) The Commission has consistently refused to award reparation merely because reductions in rates followed in the course of readjustments of the increases originally made under authority of G. O. 28. Carnation Milk Products Co. v. Director General, 78 I. C. C. 44, 45.

(i) The Commission has with few exceptions awarded reparation to the basis of the lower rate in effect from the more distant point when such rate was published subject to rule 77, though no oral or written request has been made upon the carrier for such rate prior to the movement of the shipments from the intermediate point. Montrose Oil Refining Co. v. St. L. S. F. Ry., 78 I. C. C. 572, 573.

(j) The Commission has condemned the awarding of reparation whenever a rate is voluntarily reduced by carriers. Lubrite Refining Co. v. D. G. C. Ry., 80 I. C. C. 515, 518.

(k) The commission has consistently refused to award reparation merely because reductions in rates followed in the course of readjustments of increases originally made under authority of General Order No. 28 of director general. Carnation Milk Products Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 44, 45.

§17. Willingness of carrier to pay.

See Evidence §3.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where, beyond the agreement between the parties, no showing is made that charges exacted were unreasonable, since a carrier may voluntarily make lower rates than it could be compelled to make, the Commission will not award reparation on the basis of a rate lower than that which it would prescribe as reasonable. Pacific Elevator Co. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 17 I. C C. 373, 374.

(b) To sanction as a just basis for reparation a private understanding prior to making shipment, the rate remaining unchanged until the shipments were made, would be to establish a precedent for the grossest discrimination and favoritism. Armour Car Lines v. S. P. Co., 17 I. C. C. 461, 462.

(c) Reparation cannot be awarded merely on the admission of the defendant that the complainant is the party entitled to such reparation. It must be affirmatively shown that the complainant is the proper party entitled to reparation. Baker Mfg. Co. v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 605, 607.

IV. LIABILITY FOR REPARATION.

See Express Companies XII.

§17a. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Where a carrier corrects the inequality of rates complained of and thus makes all the reparation asked in the complaint, or that the Commission could afford, no order is required, and none will be issued. N. Orleans Cotton Exchange v. Louisville N. O. & T. R. Co. 3 I. C. R. 523.

(b) Whether the shipper or the consignee paid wrongful transportation charges is immaterial in a proceeding by the shippers to recover the same, where the wrong resulted from unequal conditions of carriage and shipment imposed by the carriers, and the movement of the property depended on the shippers' acceptance of such conditions, of which they were notified in advance, and the cost of transportation was borne by them. Independent Ref. Assn. v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 6 4. C. C. 378.

(c) Complainants having filed a petition for reparation long after decision by the Commission and compliance therewith by the defendant carrier: HELD, 1, That the case will not be reopened in a supplementary proceeding, which is only brought to secure reparation, for the purpose of ruling upon questions not decided in the original case. 2, That as to the reparation demanded for injuries which resulted from practices found unlawful in said decision, it would be unwise and unjust to amend a final order entered several years ago and promptly obeyed by the defendant carrier, so as to subject such carrier to further requirements in favor of complainants in respect of violations corrected under said order. Rice, Robinson & Witherop v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 6 I. C. C. 455.

(d) It is true that the remedy by way of damages for unlawful rates is utterly inadequate and inconsistent, but it is apparently the remedy prescribed by the Act, and the only remedy which the shipper has against the exaction of an unreasonable interstate rate. McGrew v. M. P. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 630, 642.

(e) Reparation may be denied because of insufficient proof. Farrar v. Southern R. Co. et al. 11 I. C. C. 640.

(f) It does not follow as a matter of course that where the Commission finds that the ends of justice require the reduction of a rate complained of that reparation must be ordered on shipments previously made. Farmers Warehouse Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 12 I. C. C. 457, 459.

(g) Reparation awarded for error in weight of coal. Leonard v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 538.

§17½. Interest and costs.

See Interest.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Commission has uniformly allowed interest on claims for reparation, although in determining the period for which interest should be reckoned it has not always inquired with minuteness as to the date when the shipment was delivered and the freight money became payable. There is no apparent reason why, if defendants have actually collected money of the complainant to which they are not entitled, they should not pay interest for the use as well as refund the principal itself. International Agricultural Corporation v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 29 I. C. C., 391, 395.

(b) Neither costs nor interest paid by complainant, incidental to unsuccessful litigation in the courts, can be included in an award of reparation; but where the allowance of interest by a court was the equivalent of payment of additional charges when due and payable and fixes the date from which interest on excess charges is allowable before the Commission. McCloud River R. R. Co. v. O. S. L. R. R. Co., 59 I. C. C. 539, 540.

(c) Where the record does not show the date upon which the charges were paid the award of reparation will be without interest. Morris & Company v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 242, 244.

(d) Awards of reparation will be without interest where the record fails to show date upon which freight charges are paid. Morris & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 242, 244.

(e) Reparation awarded without interest because record failed to show date upon which charges were paid. Morris & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 242, 244.

(f) Stipulation entered of record whereby director general, as agent, admitted that rates charged were unreasonable, and complainants waived claim for interest. HELD: In view of stipulation award of reparation made without interest. Empire Refineries (Inc.) v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 223, 224.

(g) In an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission awarding reparation, and in a judgment, enforcing the award, it is permissible for the Commission and the court, in their discretion, the suit being one to recover damages for a tort to allow interest on the excess charges paid from the date of their payment, as damages, and at a rate fixed by the Commission and the court. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. 295 Fed. 53.

See Routing and Misrouting §9.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The act expressly requires that transportation charges shall be reasonable and empowers the Commission to enforce its provisions. Wherever the power of enforcing reasonable rates exists there must also exist the power to ascertain what is reasonable. The Commission is not restricted to finding that an existing rate is unreasonable and forbidding its continuance, but has the further authority to ascertain, order and enforce a rate that is reasonable. The power to determine and declare what is a maximum reasonable rate also results from those provisions of the act which require the Commission to determine what reparation, if any, should be made by carriers to parties injured by their violations of law, and in cases of unreasonable rates the measure of reparation due to such a party is the difference between the rate actually charged and the reasonable rate which should have been charged. Perry v. F. C. & P. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 740, 745.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) The measure of damages is the difference between a discriminatory rate charged and a rate found reasonable. Sondheimer Co. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 606, 611.

(c) The proper measure of damages suffered by one on account of the exaction of unreasonable freight charges is the difference between the unreasonable charges and reasonable charges. N. Y. N. H. & H. Ry. v. Ballou & Wright, 242 Fed. 862, 863.

(d) Where the Commission finds rates to be illegal because unreasonably high or discriminatory the full amount of the damages sustained whatever their nature, is recoverable. Keogh v. Chicago N. W. Ry. Co., 43 Sup., Ct. 47, 49.

(e) The act provides that in case a carrier violates a provision of the act it shall be liable to the person injured thereby for the full amount of the damages sustained in consequence of such violation. Campaigne Auxiliare v. D. L. & W. R. Co., 87 I. C. C. 443, 449.

§19. Parties to Make Refund.

See Routing and Misrouting §19.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Railway companies which enter into an association to control traffic to a common market, and maintain rates higher than are reasonable, unjustly prejudicial, and preferential, if not jointly liable, are at least severally liable. Freight Bureau v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 195.

(b) The specific provision in the law for individual liability of carriers for the full amount of damages sustained through enforced payment of excessive transportation charges or other practices condemned in the statute, makes it unnecessary that all the carriers over any particular route shall be before the Commission to enable it to direct reparation for wrongs which have been inflicted upon shippers under any such charge or practice. Independent Refiners' Asso. v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 378.

(c) Not all the carriers over any particular route need be before the Interstate Commerce Commission to enable it to direct reparation for wrongs inflicted on shippers by an enforced payment of excessive transportation charges, under the Act to Regulate Commerce, §8, making carriers individually liable for the full amount of damages sustained thereby. Independent Ref. Asso. v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 378.

(d) Complainant awarded reparation for the difference between the 62-cent and the 45-cent rates on its shipment, to be paid by Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Company and Mutual Transit Company, as having received the whole of such difference. As to other defendants, complaint dismissed. Amer. Grass Twine Co. v. C. St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 12 I. C. C. 141.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) Carriers who received no part of the charges and who did not participate in the movement of the commodity are not liable to refund the whole or any part of the rate for the movement of a shipment in which they did not participate. The liability is restricted to those carriers who participated in the transportation of the lumber via their respective routes over which the several shipments moved and who shared in the transportation charges therefor, and such carriers are jointly and severally liable to the persons found to be entitled to the refund. Nicola, Stone & Myers Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 14 I. C. C. 199, 209.

(f) Roads participating in collection of unreasonable rates should refund on basis of agreed divisions of lower reasonable rates. National Mfg. Co. v. C. G. W. Ry. Co., 18 I. C. C. 370, 371.

(g) Where part of a joint through rate is found unreasonable and the carriers for the part of transportation for which the rate is found unreasonable are parties defendant, reparation may be awarded against such carriers, although the delivering carrier whose local rate formed part of the through joint rate, which local rate is not attaacked, is not a party defendant. Willamette Pulp & Paper Co. v. B. & A. R. R. Co., 21 I. C. C. 178, 180.

(h) Where a carrier published a joint tariff offering delivery on the track of one of its connections, who, as a matter of fact, has not concurred, and which refused to deliver without the payment of switching charges, which forced the consignee to dray the shipment, such drayage charges constituted the measure of damages for which reparation should be awarded against the carrier publishing the unauthorized tariff. Edison Portland Gement Co. v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co., 22 I. C. C. 382.

(i) An award of reparation is due only from a carrier to a shipper, and not to one carrier, as a carrier, from another. Mfrs. Ry. Co. v. St. L. I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 28 I. C. C., 93, 108.

(j) It is well settled that where an unreasonable rate has been collected the liability of the parties is joint and several and the Commission may award reparation against one of the roads which participated in the traffic, even though other roads which performed a part of the service were not made parties defendant. Sloss Sheffield Steel and Iron Co. v. L. & N. 60 I. C. C. 595, 598.

(k) The charging of an unreasonable rate is a tort and parties to such a rate are jointly and severally liable for any resulting damage. Bloedel-Donovan Lumber Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 95, 96.

(l) All carriers party to a joint rate are jointly and severally liable for any damages resulting from its application. Rub-No-More Co v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 23, 25.

(m) The rate attacked being a joint rate all carriers parties to such a rate are jointly and severally liable for any damages resulting from its application. Arnhold Bros. v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 685, 687.

(n) Where an unreasonable rate is collected the liability of the participating carriers is joint and several, and reparation may be awarded against one of them, even though other lines which performed a part of the transportation service are not made parties defendant. Marcus & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 244, 248.

(o) Section 206 (c) of the transportation act, 1920, making it the duty of the commission to entertain complaints for reparation on account of the collection by or through the President during Federal control of charges in violation of the interstate commerce act, was intended to cover charges collected for services performed, at least in part, by the director general during Federal control. Complaints regarding charges collected by the director general, as agent for the carriers, on acount of services performed wholly prior to Federal control, should be filed against the carriers themselves. Terre Haute, Indianapolis & E. T. Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 658, 659.

(p) Where the transportation service was rendered prior to Federal control but charges were collected by the director general, claims for reparation should be filed against the carriers. Terre Haute Indianapolis & E. T. Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 658, 659.

(q) It is well settled that where an unreasonable joint rate has been collected the liability of the parties to such action is joint and several, and the Commission may award reparation against one of the roads which participated in the traffic, even though other roads which performed a part of the service are not made parties defendant. Western Hardwood Lumber Co. v. M. St. P. & S. Ste. M. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. 463.

(r) Objection by director general to consideration of claims for reparation in respect of shipments moved during Federal control, on ground that originating carrier is not named as party defendant, not sustained. In these cases agent designated by President is only necessary party defendant. Appendix 1, paragraph (6), to Rules of Practice. Kellogg & Sons v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 485, 486.

(s) Shipment from point in United States, destined to another point in United States, moved in part through Canada. Contention by director general that commission is without jurisdiction to award reparation in respect of such rate, not sustained. Rate assailed was a joint rate, and all carriers parties thereto are jointly and severally liable for any damage resulting from its application. American lines over which shipment moved are subject to jurisdiction of the commission. Director general was operating them and is thus liable for full amount of any damage sustained. International Nickel Co., 66 I. C. C., 627, 628. Staley Mfg. Co. v. C. P. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 512.

(t) Opposition to complaint seeking reparation on shipments moved during Federal control, on ground that proper carriers had not been named as parties defendant, not sustained. Agent designated by President is only necessary party defendant in a case which seeks only reparation. Taylor Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 663, 665.

(u) Awards of reparation are not dependent upon the solvency or insolvency of the carriers concerned. If a through rate, joint or combination, is found unreasonable and reparation is awarded the order entered runs against the carriers colectively, that participated in the transportation. Pinson Brokerage Co. v. C. & G. Ry., 89 I. C. C. 125, 126.

§20. Release of Liability.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Defendants are authorized to carry out an agreement made with complainants for the satisfaction of claims on shipments of lumber based on the decisions in Tift v. Southern Ry. Co., 10 I. C. C. 548 and 707; Central Yellow Pine Ass'n. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 505, the cause of said complaints being the same as in Joice & Co. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 239. Jeks Lumber Co. v. S. Ry. Co., 17 I. C. C. 58.

(b) Complainant, by an agreement ratified on May 14, 1909, released the defendants from any liability on all claims of whatsoever kind and nature for reparation on the advances in rates of freight on yellow pine lumber growing out of the 2c advance south of the river, litigated in the Tift Yellow Pine case. On July 10, 1919, it filed complaint asking reparation on the shipments here in question, which claim had not at the time of executing the release been filed with the Commission or in a court of justice. HELD, complainant is not entitled to any reparation. Deeves Lumber Co. v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 19 I. C. C. 482, 486.

§20½. Undercharges or Overcharges.
See Overcharges; Undercharges.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The defendant can claim no benefit from its own wrong, and hence it is not entitled to reparation where it permits a shipper to do acts in disregard of its regulations, which result in charges below those applicable under defendant's published tariff. Gardner & Clark v. Southern R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 342.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Shippers frequently demand reparation on past shipments made under rates which were too high, but the law contains no provisions permitting the set-off of charges on shipments moving under rates that may have been too low. D. L. & W. Coal Co. v. D. L. & W. R. R. 46 I. C. C. 506, 508, 509.

(c) Undercharges and overcharges taken into account in awarding reparation. Jackson Oil & Refining Co. v. S. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. A-763.

V. PROCEDURE.

§20¾. In general.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The granting of a further hearing on question of damages found not justified where complainant failed to avail itself of opportunities to lay before the Commission all pertinent data on the subject, especially where necessity therefor was called to complainant's attention at separate hearings already had. Lake Charles Rice Milling Co. v. A. & N. Ry. Co., 63 I. C. C. 18, 40.

(b) Reparation denied for want of proof where testimony that complainant paid and fore the freight charges was based on hearsay. Kruth Malting Co. v. Director General, 63 I. C. C. 446, 447.

(c) Reparation can not be awarded where no one having knowledge of the terms of sale covering shipments appeared at the hearing. However, if complainants obtained the assent of defendants to their supplementing the record by proof in the form of affidavit that charges were ultimately paid and borne by them, they should comply with Rule V of the Rules of Practice. Stetson, Cutler & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 24, 26.

(d) In complying with Rule V of the commission's Rules of Practice, complainant authorized to submit proof in the form of an affidavit that shipments were made and freight charges were paid and borne by it, with understanding that if defendants object to proof in the form of an affidavit they may request further hearing with respect to reparation. Following cases in 73 I. C. C.: Cannelton Sewer Pipe Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 27, 32; Armour & Co. v. B., S. L. & W. Ry. Co., 415, 418; St. Louis Independent Packing Co. v. C. & A. R. R. Co., 459, 465; Phoenix Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, as Agent, 514, 516; Waco Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, as Agent, 708, 712.

(e) In awarding reparation it is important to know the ultimate destinations of shipments and whether carriers collected charges at rates condemned. Peoria Board of Trade v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 532, 534.

(f) Complainant indicated that if a showing of the ultimate destinations of shipments was essential before reparation could be awarded, they would ask the commission to require carriers to furnish that information. HELD, such information would be insufficient without further data as to rates ultimately applied and amount of charges collected, and the commission does not regard it as reasonable or appropriate that carriers should be called upon to furnish information necessary to the establishment of claims for reparation. Peoria Board of Trade v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 532, 535.

(g) Amendment to complaint, introducing new basis to which reparation is sought, allowed, over objection by defendant that claim for greater amount of money than was claimed by original complaint enlarges issues raised by original complaint. In 15 I. C. C., 595, at 598, it was said, "The commission is an administrative body created to effect substantial justice in matters under its control and is not bound or limited by strict rules of pleading," and "in our view actual damage sustained is matter for determination by commission from facts before it." Taylor Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 663, 665.

§21. Formal Proceedings.

See Cars and Car Supply VI; Claims.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Where reparation is asked to the extent of alleged excessive charges, the allegation being sustained, reasonable time will be allowed for making proof of amounts paid, when the evidence produced shows excessive payments without disclosing the amount of excess. Michigan Box Co. v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., et al. 6 I. C. C. 335.

(b) Complainant's claim for reparation having been settled by defendants, the case is, in view of the limited testimony presented and other considerations stated, dismissed without prejudice to the institution of a new proceeding. Sayles v. The New York, N. H. & H. Ry. Co. et al. 9 I. C. C. 492.

(c) Although the allegations concerning reparation, contained in the original petition asking the Commission to order the defendants to desist from imposing an unreasonable and unjust terminal charge, are plainly sufficient to constitute the basis for an award of damages, the defendants are entitled, before the hearing, to a specification showing in detail the amount for which recovery is sought. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 83.

(d) The procedure in this case with respect to reparation is defined as follows: Upon proof thereof damages will be allowed in favor of members of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas on shipments from all territory down to the reduction in through rates of 1896, and from territory to which that reduction did not apply down to the date of hearing to be had in relation thereto, but those damages accruing before and those since the original order of the Commission herein should be shown separately, and as conditions may have changed since the date of such order, defendants will be allowed to show such subsequent facts as may now render the entire through rate, including the terminal charge, a reasonable one. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 83.

(e) The allegations concerning reparation in the original petition to the Commission are plainly sufficient to constitute the basis for an award of damages by the Commission, but before hearing the defendants are entitled to a specification showing in detail the amount for which recovery is sought. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 83.

(f) While the Commission found as a fact that the charges of defendant were in some instances unreasonable, it made no attempt to formulate an order, as it had no power to prescribe the rate that should be put into effect; but it held that complainant might apply to it for reparation in case it should thereafter be compelled to pay rates in excess of those indicated. Barrow v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 333.

(g) Where the record was not sufficiently definite to enable the Commission to make an order for reparation, it held the case open to enable the complainant to present further testimony upon that branch of the case. Denison Light & Power Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 337.

(ga) The Commission is not disposed to try complaints by piecemeal nor is it proper, unless some reasonable ground for it be shown or the Commission has so ordered, to bring forward a claim for reparation after a complaint has been heard and taken under advisement. Dallas Freight Bureau v. G. C. & S. F. Ry. 12 I. C. C. 223, 228.

(gb) No claim for reparation was made in the complaint in this case and no testimony was taken to such issue, but after the case had been heard and taken under advisement reparation was asked informally: HELD, That under such facts the Commission declines to entertain the claim for reparation in connection with the rates complained of. The Commission is not disposed to try complaints by piecemeal; nor is it proper, unless some reasonable ground for it be shown or the Commission has so ordered, to bring forward a claim for reparation after a complaint has been heard and taken under advisement. Dallas Freight Bureau v. Gulf Col. & S. F. Ry. Co. 12 I. C. C. 223.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(h) Proceedings for reparation before the Commission for indemnitory damages are purely statutory and correspond to actions at law sounding in tort. If an injury is sustained on account of a violation of law the proceeding is in its nature ex delicto, and therefore, carries with it none of the features or incidents of an action ex contractu. No protest is necessary where an injury is inflicted by the commission of a tort. The violation of the law produces the injury and completes the offense, and the person injured does not have to perform any conditions to entitle him to recover for the damage sustained. Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. S. Ry. Co., 14 I. C. C. 195.

(i) While a long course of dealing between the shipper and the carrier involving daily or frequent shipments of automobiles from a definite station might so familiarize the carrier's agents at that point with the requirements of the shipper in the way of equipment as to justify a holding that an order for a car for three automobiles was sufficient to charge the carrier with notice that a 36-ft. car was wanted, such a relationship between shipper and carrier must be clearly made out before reparation can be awarded on that basis for the exaction by the carrier of the minimum for a larger car than the one alleged to be ordered. Pope Mfg. Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 400, 403.

(j) Reparation will not ordinarily be awarded in formal cases unless intent to demand reparation is specifically disclosed before submission of the case. Ullman v. American Express Co., 19 I. C. C. 354, 355.

(k) Damages denied where reparation was not one of the issues raised; and objection of defendants to enlargement of the issue for the benefit of interveners who sought reparation, sustained. R. R. Comm. of Oregon v. S. P. Co., 24 I. C. C. 273, 279.

(l) While the fundamental question of the reasonableness of a rate is being determined, parties ought not to be put to the trouble and expense of filing detailed exhibits for reparation, nor ought the Commission to be burdened with the task of receiving and caring for such exhibits unless some substantial purpose is thereby subserved. The complainant should file such statement as informs both the Commission and the defendants of his intention to claim reparation, and the defendants should be sufficiently advised so that the evidence which they will finally desire to use upon the trial of the details may not be dissipated. Michigan Hardwood Mfrs. Ass'n v. Freight Bureau, 27 I. C. C. 32, 36.

(m) A complaint contained no explicit statement that the complainants had ever made any shipments under the rate attacked. It set forth the business of the complainants, and alleged they were shippers of hardwood lumber between the points in question; that under the former rate an extensive business had been built up, which had been injured by the imposition of the rate complained of. The prayer asked the carriers be compelled to refund to complainants all overcharges on shipments of lumber, etc., between the points in question. HELD, the complaint sufficiently alleged that complainants had made shipments under the rate attacked in order to entitle them to reparation, since the defendants were sufficiently advised to enable them to gain through application to the Commission a more detailed statement of the claims for reparation. Michigan Hardwood Mfrs. Ass'n v. Freight Bureau, 27 I. C. C. 32, 37.

(n) It was not necessary to file detailed statements of specific shipments on which reparation was claimed in view of the fact that the original complaint stated the names of complainants asking reparation, the defendants against which the claims were made, the date subsequent to which shipments moved, and a general description of the territory of origin and destination points. Commercial Club of Omaha v. A. & S. R. Ry. Co., 41 I. C. C. 480, 482.

(o) Reparation will be denied, when not asked in the complaint or by amendment thereto; and an increase in the rates pending disposition of the complaint and over complainant's protest, is not sufficient to raise an issue as to reparation. Thropp v. B. & L. E. R. R., 49 I. C. C. 43, 53.

(p) Where many shipments are involved it is the practice of the Commission to determine the reasonableness of the rates and the parties entitled to reparation and thereafter to determine the amount of the reparation under rule V of the Rules of Practice. Numerous shipments are involved here and complainants are not debarred from a recovery of reparation because they did not submit with the complaint or put in evidence upon hearing a list of their shipments. National Petroleum Asso. v. M. K. & T. 58 I. C. C. 415, 418.

(q) Complainants have no right to expect an award of damages upon an issue which they have not attempted to raise in the manner prescribed by the Commission's liberal rules of procedure; and as to which defendant has not been apprized in the usual course. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 185.

§22. Informal Proceedings.

See Claims II.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) No reparation will be awarded on informal proceedings which would not be awarded under the same set of facts in a contested case, and in face of the defendant's opposition, instead of its admission. The Commission cannot accept as conclusive any stipulation of parties as to the reasonableness of a rate or a transportation regulation. The Commission's conclusions on such matters must be reached with a due consideration for the conclusions which it has already announced on the same subject, and for the knowledge which it has gathered with relation thereto in other cases and investigations. The willingness of a shipper to receive and of a carrier to pay reparation upon certain traffic, or under certain rates, can be approved by the Commission only under a clear and decisive showing of facts which would lead the Commission to award that reparation, in opposition to that carrier's wishes, and under which it would also award reparation to all others who might have shipped during the same period under the same rate and under substantially similar circumstances and conditions. Swift & Co. v. C. & A. R. R. Co., 16 I. C. C. 426, 428.

(b) Neither the statute nor the rules of the Commission prescribe what act or acts shall constitute filing of claim for reparation with the Commission. Marion Coal Co. v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co., 27 I. C. C. 441, 442.

(c) Where carriers are willing to make reparation on shipments of pig iron involved to points not in central freight association territory, applications for permission to do so should be submitted on the special docket. In certain other cases applications for permission to make reparation will be considered on the special docket. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C. 738, 739, 741.

(d) Proof for reparation should consist of a verified statement by complainant, showing date and weight of the shipments, date of payment and the reparation claimed. Robertson Bros. v. M. P. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. 126.

(a) The amendment of March 2, 1889, expressly provides that it shall have no application to pending proceedings, and as this proceeding was pending at that time, no reparation can be awarded, and the remedy of the petitioner is in the courts. Rawson v. Newport News & Mississippi Valley Co., 2 I. C. R. 627.

(b) A party who seeks damages, alleged to have been sustained in consequence of the violation by a common carrier of the Interstate Commerce Law, as the Act provides for redress by procedure either before the commission, or by suit before the federal court, cannot bring suit before the state court, which is without jurisdiction to enforce the right, but is relegated exclusively to the commission or the federal court; otherwise the party would have a third alternative or mode of redress, not contemplated by the Act by which he is restricted to one of two remedies. Copp v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. 3 I. C. R. 625.

(c) A suit to recover damages for acts which constitute a violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, the construction of which is in dispute between the parties, presents a Federal question for which it may be removed to a Federal court. Lowry v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 435.

(d) Reparation orders made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in favor of shippers of petroleum unjustly discriminated against involve matters requiring trial by jury and are not enforceable in equity upon petition of the Commission. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Western N. Y. & Philadelphia R. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. App. LXII.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) Complainant asks that, in the event of an adverse ruling upon the claim for reparation, it be permitted to withdraw without prejudice to its right to pursue its appropriate remedy in court. Under the provisions of the act complainant had the right to elect whether it would prosecute its claim for the recovery of damages before the Commission or in the courts. Having elected to pursue the former course, its right to prosecute the claim anew in the courts is controlled by the statute, the provisions of which in this respect the Commission is not empowered to modify. Geo. A. Hormel & Co. v. C. G. W., 56 I. C. C. 419, 425.

(f) Under the Act complainant had the right to elect whether it would prosecute its claim for damages before the Commission or in the courts, and having elected to pursue the former course, its right to prosecute the claim anew in the courts is controlled by the statute, the provisions of which the Commission is not empowered to modify. Hormel & Co. v. C. G. W. R. R., 56 I. C. C. 419, 425.

(g) A suit for reparation under section 16 after the Commission has made an award, may be brought in either a state or a federal court. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Clark Bros. Coal Min. Co., 35 Sup. Ct. 896, 901. 238 U. S. 456, 59 L. ed.

(h) That claimants were prosecuting their claims before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and later before the courts, to obtain judgments against a railroad company for reparations, pending a suit to administer the property of the company for creditors, does not excuse their failure to file their claims in such suit, as required by an order of the court, which had jurisdiction, at least after an order of reparation by the Commission had liquidated the claims, to consider and allow the same against the property in its hands. North American Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 288 Fed. 612.

§24. Intervening Petitions.

See Interveners.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where the Commission has found rates unreasonable, and has issued an order permitting all persons interested in the question of reparation to file briefs on the subject, and party claiming reparation, may do so by the bringing of an independent and formal complaint, but the better practice is to file such claims in the original proceeding, which, when filed, will be treated as supplemental intervening petitions and will be proceeded with in such manner as to do justice between the parties. In re Rates on Live Stock, Packing House Products and Fresh Meats from Southwestern Points, 28 I. C. C. 332, 335.

(b) But while every person who had paid the rate could take advantage of the finding that the advance was unreasonable, he is obliged to assert his claim within the time fixed by law. When the overcharge was collected a cause of action at once arose, and the shipper at once had the right to file a complaint, or to intervene in proceedings instituted by others. If he failed to take either of those steps, and there was a finding of unreasonableness in the proceedings begun by others, he could, if in time, present his claim, and await the result of the litigation over the validity of any order made at the instance of those parties. If it was ultimately sustained by the court as valid, he would then be in position to obtain reparation from the Commission—or a judgment from a court of competent jurisdiction, on a claim that had been seasonably presented. But neither proceedings begun by other shippers, nor findings of unreasonableness and orders issued thereon by the Commission, would save the rights of those who disregarded the requirements of the Hepburn Amendment, that "all complaints for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the Commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, and a petition for the enforcement of an order for the payment of money shall be filed in the circuit court within one year from the date of the order, and not after, provided that claims accrued prior to the passage of this act may be presented within one year." 34 Stat. at L. 590, chap. 3591, Comp. Stat. 1913, §8584. In the present case the overcharges were made and paid prior to August, 1904. The present suit was brought May 9, 1909, less than two years after the validity of the Commission's order was sustained by the Supreme Court, but more than one year after the passage of the Hepburn Amendment, and more than four years after the plaintiff's cause of action arose, therefore, the plaintiff's claim not having been filed within two years, he cannot recover. §25. Statements for Reparation.

See Evidence.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) In order to secure reparation under an order of the commission, the complainant will be expected to prepare a statement showing as to each shipment upon which reparation is claimed, the date of movement, point of origin, point of destination, route, weight, car number and initials, rate applied, and the amount of reparation claimed. Disher Hoop & Lumber Co. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 488, 491.

(b) The mere submission of expense bills by counsel, at and after the hearing, is not sufficient proof of shipments to warrant the awarding of reparation. Commercial Club of Omaha v. A. & S. R. Ry. Co., 27 I. C. C. 302, 310.

(c) But generally affidavits can not be accepted as evidence for the purpose of identifying parties by whom freight charges were actually borne if objected to. Griffing v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 32 I. C. C. 283, 286.

(d) To obtain reparation the consignors named in the complaint will be expected to prepare statements showing, as to each shipment upon which reparation is claimed, the date of the movement, point of origin, point of destination, route, weight, car number and initials, rate charged, and amount of reparation claimed upon the basis of our findings herein. They should also show by whom the freight was paid, and, if not paid in the first instance by the consignor, should be accompanied by stipulation or other appropriate evidence of such facts as will enable the Commission to determine whether the consignor is entitled to reparation. These statements should be submitted with the freight bills to the defendant for verification. Upon receipt of such additional data the matter of reparation will have further consideration. Omaha Grain Exchange v. C. & A. R. R., 32 I. C. C. 597, 601.

(e) Shipments made subsequent to hearing authorized to be included in reparation statement under Rule V of Commission's rules of practice if accompanied by proof in the form of an affidavit that shipments were made and charges were paid and borne by complainants, with understanding that if defendants object, they may request a further hearing with respect thereto. American Fork & Hoe Co. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 60 I. C. C. 85, 90.

(f) Rule V, Rules of Practice, is intended to provide a convenient method by which the parties may agree upon the exact amount of reparation, without the necessity of further hearings, after the Commission has determined that reparation is due and the basis therefor. If the parties fail to agree, or any other contingency arises by virtue of which further proceedings are required to insure substantial justice, the Power of the Commission is not impaired by the rule; and when the spirit and purpose of the rule have been defeated neither party may insist upon a literal compliance therewith. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. L. & N. 60 I. C. C. 595, 596.

(g) In complying with Rule V of the commission's Rules of Practice, complainants authorized to submit proof in the form of an affidavit that shipments were made and freight charges were paid and borne by them, with understanding that if defendants object to proof in the form of an affidavit they may request further hearing with respect to reparation. Following cases in 73 I. C. C.; Cannelton Sewer Pipe Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 27, 32; Armour & Co. v. B., S. L. & W. Ry. Co., 415, 418; St. Louis Independent Packing Co. v. C. & A. R. R. (h) Shipments made subsequent to hearing authorized to be included in reparation statement under Rule V of the commission's Rule of Practice if accompanied by proof in the form of an affidavit that shipments were made and charges were paid and borne by complainants, with understanding that if carriers objected to proof in affidavit form complainants may request further hearing with respect to reparation. Following cases in 74 I. C. C. Kissel Motor Car Co. v. G. T. Ry. Co., 45, 47; Phoenix Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, as Agent, 31, 33; Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 263, 270.

(i) In complying with Rule V of the commission's Rules of Practice, complainant authorized to submit proof in the form of affidavits that they paid and bore the freight charges, subject to the conditions that if carriers object to proof in affidavit form, complainants may request a further hearing on the question of reparation. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. B. & A. R. R. Co., 77 I. C. C. 431; Lake Charles Rice Milling Co. v. L. W. R. R. Co., 77 I. C. C. 631, 632; Mason v. M., K. & T. Ry. Co., 77 I. C. C. 633, 634, 635.

(j) In complying with Rule V of commission's Rules of Practice, complainants authorized to submit proof in form of affidavits that freight charges were paid and borne by them, with understanding that if defendants object to proof in affidavit form complainants may request further hearing on question of reparation. Pacific Coast Shippers' Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 10, 11.

(k) Authority granted to include in reparation statement to be filed in accordance with Rule V of Rules of Practice details of shipments made subsequent to hearing, accompanied by appropriate proof in form of affidavits that such shipments were made and freight charges thereon paid and borne by complainant; complainant to have right to request further hearing if defendants object to proof in such form. REPORTS

(a) In passing section 20 of the Act giving the Commission authority to prescribe an accounting system and to require reports of carriers covering both interstate and intrastate business, Congress did not exceed its power under the commerce clause of the Constitution. I. C. C. v. Goodrich Co., 224 U. S. 194, 214; 32 Sup. Ct. 436, 56 L. ed. 729.

(b) An order of the Commission under the Act as amended requiring the secretary or similar officer of carriers engaged in interstate commerce to make monthly reports of violations of the restrictions as to hours of service of employes is not in violation of the 4th and 5th amendments of the Constitution relating to unreasonable search and seizure and self-crimination. B. & O. R. R. v. I. C. C., 221 U. S. 612, 622, 31 Sup. Ct. 621, 55 L. ed. 878.

(c) Section 20 of the Act merely authorizes the Commission to require reports from common carriers and owners engaged in interstate commerce and in the absence of such an order by the Commission, mandamus will not lie to compel carriers to make such reports. U. S. v. Union S. & T. Co., 192 Fed. 330, 343.

(d) Under section 20 of the Act authorizing the Commission to require reports from owners of railroads, a lessor of a railroad is an owner within the meaning of the provision. U. S. v. Union S. & T. Co., 192 Fed. 330, 340.

(e) Under section 20 of the Act as amended by the Act of June 18, 1910, the Commission has power to require the carriers engaged in interstate commerce to make monthly reports of instances of service in excess of the time allowed, provided a separate form of oath is accepted in lieu of such reports in cases where no employe has been employed in excess of the time named in the Act. B. & O. R. R. v. I. C. C., 221 U. S. 612, 620, 31 Sup. Ct. 621, 55 L. ed. 878.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Rates on coal which are applicable only to shipments of certain consignors or consignees, condemned. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426.

(b) A tariff providing for reduced rates on coal used for steam purposes or that the carrier will refund parts of the regular tariff charges on presentation of evidence that the coal was so used is improper and unlawful, because the carrier has no right to attempt to dictate the uses to which commodities transported by it shall be put in order to enjoy a transportation rate. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 427.

(c) Where the stock in one railway company is owned by another railway company, but both maintain separate organizations and report separately to Commission, they may not carry freight free for each other. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 427.

(d) A lease by a carrier of trackage rights over a connecting line to a quarry for hauling ballast for use on its own line cannot be sanctioned, as such a course would result in discrimination. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 428.

(ef) A carrier may not lawfully transport free or at reduced rates materials for building, or repairs on a refrigeration plant, built under contract with the carrier, but which also engages in commercial ice business. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 428.

(g) The Commission would not sanction any arrangement for a lease by a carrier of trackage right over a connecting line to quarry for the purpose of hauling from that quarry with its own crew and equipment ballast for use on its line, such arrangement being regarded as device to evade lawful rates. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 428.

(h) Persons and commodities transported for use in serving others than passengers and employes may not lawfully be carried except under regular tariff rates. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 428.

(i) It is unjustly discriminatory against dealers on its line for an interstate carrier to operate a commissary car. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 428.

(j) Discrimination would necessarily result from a lease by an interstate carrier of the trackage rights over connecting line to a quarry for the purpose of hauling with its own crew ballast for use on its line. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 428.

(k) A carrier has the unquestioned right to haul its own property on its own rails. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 431.

(l) The local rate to a junction point should be the same for all shippers to that point, and the through charge on shipments going beyond that junction should be alike for all shippers to the same destination. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 434.

(m) Restricting rates to a certain consignee or when commodity is put to a particular use constitutes unjust discrimination. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 437.

(n) Tariffs which contain rates applicable only to the shipment of certain consignees, or when a commodity is put to a particular use and the rates which are so restricted to the use of certain shippers and not open to all shippers alike are in violation of section 2 of the Act, and unjust discrimination in violation of section 3 of the Act, and therefore unlawful. RIVER CROSSINGS

See Bridges and Tolls; Evidence §52½.

(a) The location of Cincinnati upon the north bank of the Ohio River, and the fact that railroads leading south must cross that river by expensive bridges for which an arbitrary or toll is charged, or allowed in the division of rates, justify some higher differential from Cincinnati over rates from Louisville, on the south bank of the river, to destination points in so-called "Montgomery and Southwestern Territory." Freight Bureau of Cincinnati v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 7 I. C. C., 180.

(b) Omaha and Council Bluffs, on opposite sides of the Missouri River, are connected by an expensive bridge owned and operated by the U. P. Ry., and also used under lease by other carriers. Rates at Omaha and Council Bluffs are substantially the same to and from all points, except points in Iowa west of the west bank of the Mississippi River, and rates to and from those points are usually the bridge toll higher from Omaha than from Council Bluffs. Rates from the south are made the same to both cities by the competition of railways operated on both sides of the Missouri River. Rates from the west are the same to these cities and other common points as far east as Chicago, and are part of an extensive system of charges applied by the transcontinental lines. Rates from the east are as low to Omaha as to Council Bluffs; and this equality was brought about some fifteen years since by increasing rates to Council Bluffs to the amount of the bridge toll as then fixed. For reasons stated in the report this parity of rates from eastern points is a considerable advantage to Omaha. In view of the conditions affecting transportation to and from points in Iowa, and of the whole rate situation of the two places,—HELD, That the charge of unjust discrimination against Omaha is not sustained, and that the complaint should be dismissed without prejudice. Commercial Club of Omaha v. Chicago & N. B. Co. 1 I. C. C. 386.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) If defendants intended to restrict to any particular route the application of the rates from the river crossings, they should have done so by clear and unequivocal language. Baker Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 74 I. C. C., 489, 490.

(d) River-combination method of making rates to Southeast is general and of long standing. Hannah Distributing Co., 49 I. C. C., 720; Hudson Mule Co., 63 I. C. C., 6, 9; Douglas & Co., 31 I. C. C., 587, 604; Crossett Lumber Co., 43 I. C. C. 500. Texas Grain Dealers Asso. v. A. & S. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 96, 99.

§1. Jurisdiction of Commission.
See Jurisdiction of Commission.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Act confers upon the Commission jurisdiction over a complaint for the recovery of the damage resulting from misrouting a shipment, where such damage arises from a rate or charge in excess of the lawful rate or charge that would have applied via the route over which the shipment probably should have moved, or movement over which was specifically directed by the shipper. Reparation awarded on a carload of staves which moved from Monette, Ark., to Jackson, Mich., via Thebes, Ill., and Altamont, Ill., instead of St. Louis, as directed by complainant. Noble v. J. L. C. & E. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 520, 522.

(b) Generally speaking, routing as indicated by the guidebook should be followed. Newman Lumber Co. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 97, 100.

(c) Upon complaint praying that defendant be ordered to turn over its company coal to complainant for intermediate transportation, alleging defendant's line between such points to be unreasonably circuitous, contention that commission has authority to grant prayer by exercise of jurisdiction conferred upon it in paragraph (3), section 15 of the act, HELD: Conceding for moment that commission could under this provision establish a through route between points in question, there is nothing in this section under which the commission could require defendant to move its company traffic via such route even if so established. New Mexico Central Ry. Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 718, 720.

(d) Contention that paragraph (2), (5), and (6) of section 15a of the act, taken together, empower commission to require a railroad to turn over its company material to another road, for transportation via shorter route between points on line of former, when it is shown that by so doing it will result in an actual saving to former company, not sustained. While commission has power and duty, as occasion may require, to investigate and determine whether or not a carrier is operated efficiently and economically, to be taken into consideration in fixing level of rates, the commission is unable to find any provision of the act which authorizes it by order to require a carrier to conduct its affairs along lines which may seem more efficient and economical than those now followed. New Mexico Central Ry. Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co. 81 I. C. C. 718, 722.

(e) Contention that a carrier is not a "shipper" as that term is used in paragraph (10) of section 15 of the act, and that company material therefore must be considered unrouted traffic, not sustained. On contrary, the commission has repeatedly referred to carriers as shippers when engaged in transporting material belonging to them. In re Transportation of Company Material, 22 I. C. C. 439, 440. As a shipper, therefore, it necessarily follows that such carrier has right to route its traffic as it sees fit so far as this provision of the act is concerned. New Mexico Central Ry. Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C., 718.

(f) Complaint attacking failure of Pacific Ocean carriers to comply with routing instructions shown in through prepaid bills of lading in connection with shipments from Australia and New Zealand to Boston, Mass., in that shipments were forwarded all-water instead of water-and-rail as routed, dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Complainant's members must seek recourse against Pacific Ocean steamship companies under their contracts of carriage elsewhere than before this commission. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 445.

(g) The commission has no jurisdiction of misrouting of shipment to point in United States from points in adjacent or nonadjacent foreign country prior to its receipt by American rail carrier at border point. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 445, 449.

(h) The authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to make a preliminary determination of administrative questions is not limited to those cases where the question involved is whether a particular rate is reasonable, or a particular practice is discriminatory, but applies to any practice of a carrier which gives rise to the application of a rate, such as the practice of routing intrastate shipments over the carrier's interstate line. Northern Pac. Ry. v. Solum, 38 Sup. Ct. 550.

(i) The misrouting was a violation of the act, and complainant having elected to prosecute its claim before the Commission, the latter body may award reparation for whatever damages resulted as a consequence of such unlawful act. Danzer & Co. v. G. & S. I. R. R. 69 I. C. C. 59, 61.

II. CARRIER'S DUTY TO TRANSPORT.

§1½. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Where a shipper of freight gives directions to the agent of the initial carrier at the point of shipment as to the particular route by which the freight shall be shipped to destination, it is the duty of the agent to make such notations on the waybill as will reasonably and properly carry the freight by such particular route to destination. Pankey v. R. & D. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 33, 36.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) The "like circumstances and conditions" referred to in section 2 of the Act are those which arise within the field of haulage, and do not include competition. The shippers who desire to avail themselves of a water-and-rail route must be given equal treatment with those who ship all rail. Any discrimination which exists must not exceed that which is warranted by the differences in the circumstances and conditions of the haul over the rail lines. Chattanooga Packet Co. v. I. C. R. R., 33 I. C. C. 384, 392.

(c) Carriers are bound by their published tariffs, which must be construed in accordance with the rules contained therein, and they can not lawfully deny to a shipper the right to have shipments moved at the established rate over an open and available route named in the tariff. Wistar, Underhill & Nixon v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 43 I. C. C. 254, 256.

(d) A tariff provision which makes the application of rates over particular routes dependent upon divisions, without stating the routes with respect to which divisional arrangements are in effect, is indefinite and unlawful, and imposes uncertain and unreasonable conditions upon the shipper. McGowin Lumber & Export Co. v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 238, 240.

(e) Where a rate is unrestricted in its application it applies on shipments which move through a point via which it was not intended to apply even though such route is unusual and unduly circuitous. St. Tammany Ice & Mfg. Co. (Ltd.) v. Director General, as Agent, 64 I. C. C. 491, 492.

(f) The contention that since all carriers were under federal control the same rates should have applied over all routes between the same points not sustained where circumstances and conditions via the different routes are dissimilar; and fact that lower rates applied between the same points over other available routes does not, standing by itself, prove the unreasonableness of the higher rates via route of movement. Midland Linseed Products Co. v. Director General, as Agent 64 I. C. C. 753.

(g) Rates between specified points, when unrestricted in the carrier's tariffs to any particular route of movement, apply over all routes of carrier. Pioneer Lumber Co. v. Director General as agent, 74 I. C. C. 289.

(h) Where tariff of participating carrier provided lower rates between specified points over route other than route of movement, and unrestricted in their application to any particular route, such lower rates are applicable over all routes of carrier. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Baker-Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 489.

(i) On shipments moving during Federal control, some of the bills of lading contained instructions as to both rate and route, and others as to rate only. Rate named was not applicable over any route of the originating carrier, but applied in connection with a competing line to which shipper might have tendered shipments. HELD: Following Mulkey Salt Co., 66 I. C. C., 441, shipments misrouted where both of the carriers at point of origin were federally controlled, since they were "being operated under a unified and coordinated national control and not in competition." Reparation awarded. American Hominy Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 604.

(j) Explanation by originating carrier's agent to shipper of circuity of shipper's routing may restrain shipper thereafter from complaining, but it does not excuse carrier for indulging in uneconomic transportation. Southeastern Express Co. v. Amer. Ry. Exp. Co., 78 I. C. C. 126, 141.

(k) Complainant tendered prepayment of charges for transportation of shipments, at published tariff rates subject to route provided in tariff. Carrier refused to accept prepayment, contending that route did not apply in connection with such rate. Shipments forwarded and charges paid at higher combination rate, under protest. HELD: Since rate sought was subject to no limitation or exception as to routes other than those shown in tariff, it was applicable via such routes. Refusal to accept shipments at lower rate found unlawful, and shipments found misrouted. Reparation awarded. Elk Tanning Co. v. E. R. R. Co., 78 I. C. C. 452.

(l) The Commission has held that the carriers are empowered to restrict the routing and that shippers are required to look only to the tariff for rates applicable. Buckeye Lumber Co. v. N. P. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. 2230.

§2. Accustomed or Natural Route.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) If a foreign car is available, which under rules as to car service must be sent via particular line or route, over which a higher rate obtains, the agent must explain that fact to the shipper and allow him to elect whether he will use that car at the higher rate or wait for another car. If the shipper elects to use the car at the higher rate, the agent should so note on the bill of lading. When this rule is not complied with the carrier is liable for misrouting. Lord & Bushnell Co. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 22 I. C. C. 463.

(b) It cannot be denied that the cost of transportation is a potent factor in determining the route which traffic will take. If confronted by increased rates via routes over which it has been accustomed to move, it will naturally seek other outlets. Baltimore Chamber of Commerce v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 22 I. C. C. 596, 598.

(c) Whatever weight may attach to what carriers may in their own best interest regard as "natural routes" cannot overbalance the right of shippers to ship at reasonable and just rates over the lines of such carriers. Refuge Cotton Oil Co. v. St. L. I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 27 I. C. C. 117, 119.

(d) A carrier has no right to bottle up line for benefit of millers located thereon. Rates on Corn Milled at Oneonta, 27 I. C. C. 367, 369.

(e) Traffic should not be forced into roundabout and unnatural routes. Rates on Cottonseed and its Products, 28 I. C. C. 219, 221.

(f) There could be no reason for moving traffic over the longer instead of the shorter route if transportation conditions aside from distance were the same over both routes. Tennessee Copper Co. v. S. Ry. Co., 41 I. C. C. 336, 339.

(g) Shipper routed over lines of certain carriers but no junction point or rate specified. Shipments could have moved through Buffalo, N. Y., but were forwarded over designated lines through Todelo, Ohio. Allegation that shipments misrouted in that initial carrier should have forwarded via Buffalo, to and from which point local rates were in effect which aggregated less than through rate via Toledo, not sustained. Applicable joint rate via Buffalo was in excess of joint rate via Toledo, and shipments moved, therefore, over lowest-rated route consistent with routing instructions. Lycoming Motors Corp. v. E. J. & S. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 757.

(h) In the absence of routing instructions carrier cannot be required to route for convenience of unloading. Middleburg Stone Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. A-491.

§3. Conflict in Billing Between Rate and Route.

See Bills of Lading §9; §9 (3); Export Rates and Facilities II; Through Routes and Joint Rates III.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where the shipper's bill of lading contains instructions both as to route and rate, and the rate is not applicable over any route of the receiving carrier, but is applicable over the route of a rival carrier to which the shipment might have been delivered, the receiving carrier may forward the shipment over its own line at the lowest rate lawfully applicable, it not being obliged to turn the traffic over to its competitor. McLean Lumber Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 22 I. C. C. 349.

(b) Where the provisions of a bill of lading are impossible of execution it is the duty of the carrier's agent to call upon the consignor for further instructions before forwarding the shipment. Peerless Wire Fence Co. v. Wabash R. R., 38 I. C. C. 721, 724.

(c) Routing instructions are not complete where there is no connection between the initial carrier and the lines of the first carrier via which the shipment is specifically routed in the bill of lading, and the stipulated rate does not apply over any route. Reynolds Bros. Lumber Co. v. T. F. Ry., 42 I. C. C. 421.

(d) Where the shipper's routing is incomplete it is the duty of the initial carrier to seek further instructions, and if they could not be secured to route the shipment over the cheapest reasonable available route consistent with the routing instructions specified by the shipper. Reynolds Bros. Lumber Co. v. T. F. R. R. Co., 42 I. C. C. 421, 422.

(e) Where routing instructions name a specific rate that does not apply via the route designated, it is the duty of the carrier to secure further instructions. Conference Ruling 286 (f). Earle Fruit Co. v. O. S. L. R. R., 46 I. C. C. 510, 511.

(f) The Commission's Conference Ruling No. 474-C reads, in part: The obligation lawfully rests upon the carrier's agent to refrain from executing a bill of lading which contains provisions that can not lawfully be complied with or provisions which are contradictory, and therefore impossible of execution. When, therefore, the rate and the route are both given by the shipper in the shipping instructions and the rate given does not apply via the route designated, it is the duty of the carrier's agent to ascertain from the shipper whether the rate or the route given in the shipping instructions shall be followed. The carrier will be held responsible for any damages which may result from the failure of its agents to follow this course. F. H. Doyle v. L. & N. W. R. R., 52 I. C. C. 327.

(g) On shipments moving during Federal control, some of the bills of lading contained instructions as to both rate and route, and others as to rate only. Rate named was not applicable over any route of the originating carrier, but applied in connection with a competing line to which shipper might have tendered shipments. HELD: Following Mulkey Salt Co., 66 I. C. C., 441, shipments misrouted where both of the carriers at point of origin were federally controlled, since they were "being operated under unified and coordinated national control and not in competition." Reparation awarded. American Hominy Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 204.

(h) When both rate and route are inserted by the shipper in the bill of lading and they do not coincide it is the duty of the initial carrier's agent to ascertain from the shipper before forwarding the shipment whether he desires that the instructions as to the rate or the route shall govern, and the carrier is responsible for any damages which may result from the failure of its agent to follow this course. Conference Ruling 474 (c). American Hominy Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 205.

(i) Shipper specified rate and route in bills of lading, and shipments moved via such route. Rate designated did not apply via route of movement, but was applicable over other routes. HELD, When both rate and route are inserted by shipper in bill of lading and they do not coincide, it is the duty of initial carier's agent, before forwarding shipments, to inquire of shipper which he desires to govern. Moreover, it is the duty of the agent to refrain from executing bills of lading containing contradictory provisions. Conf. Ruling 474 (c). Shipments found misrouted and reparation awarded. Republic of France v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., of Texas 77 I. C, C. 383.

(j) Complainant specified routing and rate in bills of lading covering shipments prior to federal control. Designated rate did not apply in connection with originating carrier, and shipments moved over specified route and were assessed rate applicable thereto. Contention that originating carrier should have turned over shipments to another carrier at point of origin, to enable complainant to obtain lower rate, and that they were therefore misrouted, not sustained. Under circumstances, originating carrier was under no obligation to deliver to competitor at point of origin. McLean Lumber Co., 22 I. C. C., 349. Citizens Gas Co. v. C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 323.

§3½. Conflict Between Billing and Shipping Ticket.

See Bills of Lading §9 (3).

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where a shipping ticket and bill of lading are both executed by a consignor it is commonly the custom for the shipping ticket to be made out accordingly with the tendering of the shipment to the carrier, and in order to promptly get the shipment under way the carrier relies upon the instructions of the shipper, as shown in the ticket in executing its waybill. This custom operates to the advantage of the shipper in securing prompt transportation, and benefits the carrier and the public in preventing the terminal, congestion and undue detention of equipment. Evens & Howard Fire Brick Co. v. Wab. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 152, 153.

(b) Where the terminal carrier finds that the waybill is ambiguous as to place of delivery it should notify the initial carrier and await instructions. Robinson Clay Product Co. v. A. C. & Y. Ry. Co., 40 I. C. C. 177, 179.

(c) On two carloads of lumber billed from Potlatch, Idaho, to Victoria, Ill., C. P. & St. L. Ry. delivery, that station abandoned but still carried in tariff. Victoria, Knox county, Ill., intended. Shipments forwarded to intended destination, one via circuitous route. HELD, initial carrier accepted shipments under bills of lading impossible of execution and failure to send both over a direct route found to result in damages. Reparation awarded. Potlatch Lumber Co. v. W. I. & M. Ry., 50 I. C. C. 277.

§4. Direct and Cheapest Available Route

CASES 1887-1908

(a) If one shipping from Troupe, Tex., to Fort Lawn, S. C., had given the freight agent no directions whatever as to the particular route by which the freight was to be sent forward to its destination at Fort Lawn, South Carolina, but had simply left it to the freight agent to select the route for him, as is frequently done by shippers in such cases, then, in that event, in selecting such route for the shipper, it would have been the duty of the freight agent to have forwarded the freight by the best and cheapest route for the shipper, so far as the freight agent knew, or was informed, and to have made such notations on the way-bill as would reasonably have carried it by that route, for in doing that service he would have been acting as the agent of the shipper as well as of the company. Pankey v. Richmond & Danville R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 33.

(b) If the shipper leaves it to the agent to select the route for him then it is the duty of the agent to forward the freight by the best and cheapest route for the shipper, so far as the agent knew, or was informed, and to make such notations on the waybill as would reasonably carry it by that route, for in doing that service he is acting as the agent of the shipper as well as the company. Pankey v. R. & D. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 33, 36.

(cd) Where there were two routes the place of shipment to the place of destination, one much longer and much more expensive to operate than the other, the longer and more expensive being operated by one, while the more direct and less expensive route was over continuous lines operated by more than one common carrier: HELD, That the rate must be reasonable for the transportation by the shorter and less expensive route. Newland v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 474.

(e) It is the right of shippers to have their goods carried, and the duty of common carriers to receive and forward freights by the least expensive routes at reasonable through rates. Newland, Hauschild and Reeder v. N. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 474, 480.

(f) It is the right of shippers to have their goods carried, and the duty of common carriers to receive and forward freight, by the least expensive routes at reasonable through rates. Newland v. Northern P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 131.

(g) It is the duty of the agent of the billing carrier at the point where the goods are received, to route them by the less expensive route, in accordance with the directions of the shipper, and for his failure to do so, such initial carrier was liable to pay, by way of damages, the difference in rate between the two routes, and an award of damages against such initial carrier was made. Rea v. M. & O. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 43, 54.

(h) Where a carrier, contrary to positive instructions from the shipper, routes a car by an indirect and expensive route, or, without any instructions, sends the car by the longer route so as to burden the shipper with needless expense, such action is prima facie unjust unreasonable, and constitutes a fair basis for an order of reparation. Dewey Bros. Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 481.

(i) Complainant alleged misrouting on a carload of hay from Summitt, O., to Lenoir, N. C. It was claimed that shipping instructions were given to route the car via Strasburg Junction and Southern Ry. although defendant denied these instructions were issued. Rate via this route was lower than via Cincinnati, through which the shipment moved. HELD, as no routing instructions were shown on the bill of lading, rate applicable via route shipment moved was assessed, complaint dismissed. Dewey Bros. Co. v. B. & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 481.

(j) Where a carrier, contrary to positive instructions from the shipper routes a car by an indirect and expensive route, or, without any instructions, sends the car by a longer route so as to burden the shipper with needless expense, such action is prima facie unjust and unreasonable, and constitutes a fair basis for an order of reparation. Dewey Bros. Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 481.

(k) In the absence of any instructions by the shipper, it would appear to be the duty of the receiving carrier not only to charge the lowest combination of rates between given points but to give to the shipper the advantage of the shorter route and lower rate. Dewey Bros. Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 481, 483.

(l) It is the duty of a carrier, in the absence of routing instructions to the contrary, to forward shipments, having due regard to the interests of the shipper, ordinarily by that reasonable and practicable route over which the lowest charge for the transportation applies; and damage resulting to a shipper from a disregard of this obligation by the carrier can only be repaired by reparation to the extent of the difference between the higher rate applied over the line by which the traffic improperly moved and the lower rate which would have been applied had the freight been properly forwarded. Hennepin Paper Co. v. Northern Pac., 12 I. C. C. 535.

(m) Shipper entitled to reparation for damage resulting from disregard by carrier of obligation to forward shipment, in absence of routing instructions, by route over which lowest charge applies. Hennepin Paper Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 12 I. C. C. 535.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(n) When a car is delivered without routing instructions, it is the duty of the initial carrier to send it over the cheapest available route. Chattanooga Imp. & Mfg. Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 40 I. C. C. 146, 149.

(o) Routing instructions of shipper were incomplete and it was defendant's duty to move the shipment over the cheapest reasonably available route. William L. Carney v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 199, 200.

(p) When the movement is all rail, with certain exceptions, the initial carrier assumes the responsibility of the movement over the cheapest available route unless the consignor gives directions to the contrary. Schules Pure Grape Juice Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 485, 486.

(q) In the absence of routing instructions by the shipper, it is the duty of the initial carrier to forward a freight shipment over the cheapest reasonable route. Actual mieleage to determine routes on milk and cream by express between points west of the Mississippi River, 69 I. C. C. 90, 94.

(r) The Commission has frequently construed section 15 to impose upon common carriers the duty, in the absence of contrary routing by the shipper, to forward shipments over the cheapest available route, and failing to do so, carriers have been found liable to the damaged shipper in the amount of the difference between the rate charged and the rate over the cheapest available route. North Packing & Provision Co. v. Director General, 73 I. C. C. 749, 752

(s) Shortest distance applies via a branch line, a portion of which is of narrow-gauge construction. Contention that the physical situation is immaterial and that shipper is lawfully entitled to use the shortest distance in the application of distance rates in view of the tariff being unrestricted. HELD, such unrestricted distance rates would clearly be applicable via the branch line, but the charging of such rates on shipments moving via the longer route is not a violation of section 6 , but rather involves ureasonableness under section 1. Since the branch line does not constitute a reasonable route, the moving of shipments via the longer route does not constitute misrouting. Calivada Fertilizer Co. v. S. P. Co., 73 I. C. C. 496, 501, 502.

(t) Conf. Rule 474c, is not applicable where the lower rate is available only when the line to which the shipments have been delivered must turn them over to a competitor at point of origin; but with respect to the shipments that moved during federal control it is applicable where both of the carriers at point of origin were federally controlled, since the carriers were being operated under a unified and co-ordinated national control and not in competition. American Hominy Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C. 204, 205.

(u) On shipments moving during federal control, some of the bills of lading contained instructions as to both rate and route, and others as to rate only. Rate named was not applicable over any route of the the originating carrier, but applied in connection with a competing line to which shipper might have tendered shipments. HELD, following Mulkey Salt Co., 66 I. C. C. 441, shipments misrouted where both of the carriers at point of origin were federally controlled, since they were "being operated under a unified and co-ordinated national control and not in competition." Reparation awarded. American Hominy Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 204.

(v) In the absence of specific routing by a shipper it is the duty of the agent of the carrier to route shipments via the cheapest reasonable route known to him. Conference Ruling 214 (c). American Hominy Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 205.

(w) Shipments of lumber and shingles from points in Washington to Minnesota Transfer, Minn., reconsigned to Duluth, Minn., and beyond, found overcharged. Lower joint through rate plus reconsignment charge and unrestricted in its application to any particular route was contemporaneously in effect. Reparation awarded. Pioneer Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 288.

(x) Shipments routed by shipper over lines of certain carriers, but no junction point or rate specified. Shipments could have moved through Buffalo, N. Y., but were forwarded over designated lines through Toledo, Ohio. Allegation that shipments misrouted in that initial carrier should have forwarded via Buffalo, to and from which point local rates were in effect which aggregated less than through rate via Toledo, not sustained. Applicable joint rate via Buffalo was in excess of joint rate via Toledo, and shipments moved, therefore, over lowest route consistent with routing instructions. Lycoming Motors Corp. v. E. J. & S. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 757.

(y) Obligation rests upon initial carrier to forward shipments over cheapest reasonable route consistent with routing instructions. Lycoming Motors Corp. v. E. J. & S. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 757, 758.

(z) Contention that lower combination rate, available over route of movement was not applicable on complainant's shipment, since there was no agreed basis of divisions out of such lower combination between carriers parties to tariffs not sustained. Routing under lower rate was not restricted in tariffs and such rate was applicable over lines of all carriers parties thereto. Complainant was entitled to lowest combination over route specified, and it is no excuse that carriers had not agreed on divisions. shipment found overcharged and reparation awarded. Standard Rice Co. v. G. H. & S. A. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 305, 306.

(aa) Routing instructions specified lines which could not be utilized in order given, and carrier forwarded over routes which were higher-rated than other available routes. HELD, shipments misrouted. Dixie Portland Cement Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 417.

(bb) In the absence of specific routing instructions it was the duty of defendant under the circumstances to forward the shipment over the cheapest reasonable route, notwithstanding the fact that such route was intrastate. Mifflin Hood Brick Co. v. Director General, 88 I. C. C. 205, 206.

§4¼. Existence of Embargo.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Shipments found misrouted where embargoes were a disability of the carriers, which did not confer upon them the right of diverting shipments to higher rated routes contrary to shippers' instructions, especially where there were no provisions in tariffs at time shipments moved prohibiting reconsignment to embargoed points, and nothing which would have precluded shipper from specifically routing via lower rated routes had it billed shipments to final destinations in the first instance. McGowin Lumber & Export Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 64 I. C. C. 694, 697.

(b) Where because of congestion or other justifiable cause and consequent embargo, a route is not available, the carrier does not violate its duty if it refused to accept the shipment until after the shipper agrees to a route that is available. North Packing & Provision Co. v. Director General, 73 I. C. C. 749, 752.

(c) An initial carrier is liable for misrouting in accepting a shipment routed over an embargoed route without first calling the shippers attention to the embargo. Empire Lumber Co. v. Director General, 88 I. C. C. 424, 425.

§4½. Interstate, Intrastate or Route.

See Evidence §13 (6).

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Shipments moved during Federal control via intrastate routes specified by shipper. Contemporaneously, lower rates applied over interstate route. Contention that under General Order No. 1 of the director general routing designated should have been disregarded. HELD: While the general order did not deprive a shipper of protection of the rate applicable over route designated by him when shipment was moved over another route for speed and efficiency, it did not provide for the application of a lower rate over another route when shipment moved as routed. Empire Refineries (Inc.) v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 691.

(b) Fact that a lower rate was applicable on intrastate shipments over lines not under Federal control, for corresponding distances, does not establish unreasonableness of rates over lines under Federal control. Empire Refineries (Inc.) v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 691, 692.

(c) Where the question whether a carrier's practice of routing intrastate shipments over its interstate line, instead of its intrastate line, for which a lower rate had been prescribed, was reasonable, was an administrative one of perhaps considerable complexity, the state court should not, in advance of the Interstate Commerce Commission's determination of the question, assume jurisdiction of actions to recover the amount by which the freight for shipments carried over the interstate line exceeded the intrastate rate. Northern Pac. Ry. v. Solum, 38 Sup. Ct. 550.

§5. Lower Rate via Competing Line or Route.

See Evidence §47; Rates via Competing line.

(a) A carrier operating parallel lines, and accepting lower rates on one line, should make corresponding charges on other line. Board of Trade Union v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 1 I. C. R. 608.

(b) Where there were two routes from the place of shipment to the place of destination, one much longer and much more expensive to operate than the other, the longer and more expensive being operated by one, while the more direct and less expensive route was over continuous lines operated by more than one carrier, the rate must be reasonable for the transportation by the shorter and less expensive route. Newland, Hauschild & Reeder v. N. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 474, 480.

(c) Complainant attacked rates on wheat of 32½c from Ritzville, Wash., to Portland, Ore., as unjust and unreasonable. Distance 311 miles. The car of wheat tendered was routed by shipper via Wallula Junction and defendants routed it via Pasco Junction, distance 478 miles over a circuitous route having many heavy grades and curves. The route via Wallula was via two lines while the route via Pasco Junction was via the initial carrier only. HELD, rates attacked unreasonable to extent they exceeded 20c. Newland, Hauschild & Reeder v. N. P. R. Co. 4 I. C. C. 474.

(d) A carrier which sends freight over its own line, which is much longer and more expensive to operate than another route over continuous lines operated in part by other common carriers with which it exchanges traffic, can charge only a rate which is reasonable for the transportation by the shorter and less expensive route. Newland v. Northern P. R. Co. (Com.), 4 I. C. R. 474.

(e) A carrier which sends freight over its own line, which is much longer and more expensive to operate than another route over continuous lines operated in part by other common carriers with which it exchanges traffic, can charge only a rate which is reasonable for transportation by the shorter and less expensive route. Newland v. Northern P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 131.

(f) The complainant is entitled to reparation for damages resulting from its inability to ship 640 tons of cotton seed to Hope, which it had contracted for and desired to have transported over defendant's line to Texarkana and then by way of another line to Hope, and which shipment defendant had refused to accept under its local rate to Texarkana, but attempted to compel the complainant to pay the through rate to Hope, which was higher than the local rates based upon Texarkana, Ark. Hope Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 696.

(g) If a carrier, contrary to shipper's instructions, forwards cars by a more expensive instead of a cheaper route, or, without any instructions, sends the cars by the more expensive route, such action is prima facie without justification and constitutes a fair basis for reparation; but if the shipper gives definite instructions to move the cars by the more expensive route, the carrier is relieved of the obligation to forward by the cheaper route. Pankey v. R. & D. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. Rep. 658, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 33, cited and approved. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., et al., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(h) A carrier is liable for forwarding cars by a more expensive route contrary to or in absence of instructions. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. 418, 469.

(i) Carrier forwarding cars by more expensive route contrary to shipper's instructions, or in absence of instructions, must make reparation. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(j) Complainant attacked rate charged of $2.17 charged on print paper, carloads, from Little Falls, Minn., to Boise, Ida., via Butte, Mont. At the time of shipment there were three through routes with published through rates from Little Falls to Boise; N. P., and O. S. L. via Butte, 1,546 miles, rate $2.17; N. P., O. R. & N.. and O. S. L., via Portland, 2,450 miles, rate $1.30; and N. P., C. St. P. M. & O., U. P., and O. S. L., distance 1,812 miles, rate $1.36. No routing was shown on the bill of lading, and carriers sent the shipment via Butte. HELD, N. P., misrouted the shipments, reparation awarded on basis of $1.30. Hennepin Paper Co. v. N. P. Ry. 12 I. C. C. 535.

(k) It is the duty of a carrier, in the absence of routing instructions to the contrary, to forward shipments, having due regard to the interests of the shipper, ordinarily by that reasonable and practical route over which the lowest charge for the transportation applies; and damage resulting to a shipper from a disregard of this obligation by the carrier can only be repaired by reparation to the extent of the difference between the higher rate applied over the line by which the traffic improperly moved and the lower rate which would have been applied had the freight been properly forwarded. Hennepin Paper Co. v. N. P. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 535, 537.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(l) A shipment forwarded over an available and reasonable route that complies with the shippers' routing instructions and by which the lowest lawful rate between the points there involved is applicable is not misrouted, and no presumption of unreasonableness attaches to a joint through rate applicable over a particular route because it exceeds the aggregate of intermediate rates over another route. Metrop. Paving Brick Co. v. W. & L. E. R. R., 38 I. C. C. 345, 346.

(m) No duty rested with carrier to ascertain whether a competing line could have transported the shipment at a lower rate and, if so, to turn the shipment over to its competitor. Sunderland Bros. Co. v. M. P. Ry., 49 I. C. C. 135, 136.

(n) Had shipper left routing open or observed tariff restrictions, several routes over which lower rate applied could have been used, but since shipments were routed via higher rated route through error of agent, that fact of itself does not entitle him to reparation. Every shipper is charged with notice of the terms of interstate tariffs governing his shipments, and mere showing of the existence of lower rates over other routes and comparisons based upon distance alone, are insufficient to establish the unreasonableness of the rate charged. South Chester Tube Co. v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., 64 I. C. C. 78.

(o) Carriers were operated under a unified and co-ordinated national control, and not in competition. In view of this fact, the Commission has held in cases where different rates were in effect over two routes between the same points that if the routes are practically the same in length and subject to the same transportation conditions, it was unreasonable for the Director General to maintain a higher rate over one route than contemporaneously applied over the other. American Agricultural Chemical Co. v. Director General, 66 I. C. C. 650, 651.

(p) Where tariff of participating carrier provided lower rates between specified points over route other than route of movement, and unrestricted in their application to any particular route, such lower rates are applicable over all routes of carrier. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Baker-Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 489.

(q) Where no routing directions are given by a shipper, it is the duty of the carrier, when two routes are equally available, to forward over the one having the lower rate, and where it has not done so it is liable to the shipper under the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the difference between the higher and the lower rate, and by general order of the Commission the parties are permitted to make settlement on that basis. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Lykes Bros. 294 Fed. 968.

§5½. Particular Junction or Terminal.

See Junction Point Rates.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where terminal delivery only is shown in bill of lading it is the duty of the carriers to forward shipments to destination named by the cheapest reasonable route affording desired delivery. Trexler Lumber Co. v. S. Ry. Co., 42 I. C. C. 719, 720.

(b) If a shipment is not specifically routed the shipper is entitled to the lowest combination of rates or charges from point of origin to destination, but having routed the car or cars through particular junctions he can not complain because a lower rate might have been obtained via some other junction. Holt, et al, as Receivers of Aetna Explosives Co. v. Alabama Great Southern R. R. Co., et al., 52 I. C. C. 235, 238.

(c) Where routing was specified by shipper, but no rate or junction point the legally applicable rate charged found unreasonable to extent it exceeded lower rate subsequently established via route of movement, but in connection with a different junction. Reparation awarded. Roberts Cotton Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 139.

(d) Shipper specified N. Y. C. delivery and inserted rate in body of bill of lading but not in space provided therefor. Shipments were forwarded in conformity with such routing instructions. Contemporaneously there was in effect a lower rate via another route with N. Y. C. delivery. HELD: Shipments not misrouted as insertion of rate in bill of lading was equivalent to instructing originating carrier to forward by route over which that rate applied, such routing not being inconsistent with instructions for delivery by the N. Y. C. Cayuga Operating Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 676.

(e) Shipper specified delivering carriers in bills of lading, but no rate. Contemporaneously lower rates applied in conjunction with such carriers over other than routes of movement. HELD: Since no rate was specified in bills of lading originating carriers should have forwarded via routes taking lower rates consistent with instructions as to delivery. Shipments found misrouted and reparation awarded. Cayuga Operating Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 677.

(f) Shippers must bear in mind that there is a limit beyond which an agent of a carrier could not reasonably be expected to know as to terminal delivery or local rates at distant points and on lines of distant roads to or within which he has no specific joint through rates. Consignors and consignee should cooperate with agent of carriers in avoiding misrouting and errors in routing and must expect to bear some responsibility in connection therewith. Mifflin, Hood Brick Co. v. Director General, 88 I. C. C. 205, 206..

§5¾. Reconsigned Shipments.

See Reconsignments §6½a.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Complainant attacked as unreasonable and illegal due to misrouting charges collected on a car of yellow pine lumber from Slaughters, Ala., to Cairo, Ill., reconsigned to Cincinnati, O., originally consigned to complainant at Cairo, and moved to that point on August 13, 1917, via the C. of Ga., and I. C. On Sept. 5, after the shipment arrived at Cairo complainant by letter directed the I. C., to reconsign the car to Cincinnati, but specified no routing. Shipment moved from Cairo over the I. C., to Indianapolis, Ind., thence to Cincinnati via the Big Four. Upon its arrival at Cincinnati the consignee ordered the car placed for unloading at St. Bernard, O., a point within the Cincinnati switching limits, charges collected at rate of 31.6c, made up of 20c to Cairo and 11.6c beyond. When the shipment moved a tariff to which the C. of Ga., I. C., and B. & O. S. W. were parties, published a joint rate of 20c on yellow pine lumber from Slaughters to Cincinnati, this rate not being restricted to any particular route or routes. Tariff of the I. C., authorized reconsignment to destinations beyond the reconsigning points, at the through rates and without additional charge. HELD, had the shipment been forwarded by the I. C. via Odin and the B. & O. S. W., a rate of 20c would have been charged, shipment misrouted by I. C., reparation with interest awarded. Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 496.

§6. Right of Carrier to Route or Restrict Route.

(a) While it is the duty of a state carrier which engages in interstate commerce to forward traffic offered from a connecting line, there is no authority, under the present Act, to compel the carrier to forward the traffic over a route not operated or selected by itself. Mattingly v. Pennsylvania Co. (Com.), 2. I. C. R. 806.

(b) Under the practice of defendants as initial carriers in joint continuous routes of reserving to themselves exclusive control of the routing and denying to shippers any choice or control in a selection as between different established routes, a route or tariff may be available to one shipper but not to another, and open one minute to a shipper but closed the next; this to be determined by the carriers agents according as they may desire to distribute the shippers business among one another from time to time or for any reason whatsoever. This practice of defending whereby shippers are denied the use of their transportation facilities by established routes is in violation of the statute, and, in its application by the defendants to the traffic, subjects the owners and shippers thereof to undue unjust and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage and gives to the carriers undue and unreasonable preference and advantage. Consolidated Forwarding Co. v. Southern Pacific Co. 9 I. C. C. 183, 206.

(c) If the carrier had contrary to the positive instructions of the shipper taken the responsibility of routing the car by indirect, expensive lines instead of the obvious, direct and cheaper route, or had without any instructions so routed the car as to burden the shipper with the needless expense of the longer route, it would be prima facie unjust and unreasonable and would, without explanation, constitute fair basis for an order requiring the carrier to reimburse the shipper for the overcharge thus wrongfully imposed. Dewey Bros. Co. v. B. & O. R. R. 11 I. C. C. 481, 483.

(d) Carriers may not disregard instructions of shippers as to intermediate routing, except when the tariff of the initial line reserves the right to dictate intermediate routing. Foster Lumber Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 17 I. C. C. 292, 294.

(e) No obligation rests upon the carrier to hunt up unnatural connections of practically unknown gateways, in order to determine the lowest possible combination for a given shipment, but the Commission cannot, with due regard for the rights of the shipping public, relieve the carriers of the duty of reasonable investigation of recognized practicable routes in connection with a designated delivering line. Goodman Mfg. Co. v. Penn. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 423, 426.

(f) In absence of instructions, it is misrouting to ship via state route taking lower rate. Damages awarded. Lathrop Lumber Co. v. A. G. S. R. R. Co., 27 I. C. C. 250.

(g) The initial carrier is under no obligation to deliver shipments to its competitor at point of origin, unless so directed by the shipper. Terhune Lumber Co. v. S. Ry. in Miss., 42 I. C. C. 317, 318.

(h) The right of a carrier to rout traffic over its own line, provided the public interest does not suffer thereby is well established. Whether or not the exercise of this right in a given case is consistent with the public interest must be determined by the circumstances. The practicability of the preferred route as determined by its directness and other operating conditions, is an important consideration. Petroleum from Oklahoma Points, 48 I. C. C. 737, 738.

(i) In an analgous case it appeared that due to abnormal ice conditions in Norfolk harbor, the customary route and via which shipments were specifically routed, carrier delivered via routes taking higher rates. HELD: Such shipment as were diverted without shipper's authorization, found misrouted. Reparation awarded. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 64 I. C. C. 170.

(j) If carrier intends to restrict the application of rates to any particular route, it should do so by clear and unequivocal language. Baker-Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 490.

(k) Explanation by originating carrier's agent to shipper of circuity of shipper's routing may restrain shipper thereafter from complaining, but it does not excuse carrier from indulging in uneconomic transportation. Southeastern Express Co. v. American Ry. Express Co., 78 I. C. C. 126, 141.

(l) It is not for carriers to dictate routes to be used by shippers upon theory that ultimate cost of product to consumer would be less by using routes which carriers select; nor is it for commission to attempt to control ocean routing of freight for purpose of augmenting revenues of particular carriers to depletion of revenues of other carriers. Storage-in-transit Rules at Minnesota Transfer. Southeastern Express Co. v. Amer. Ry. Exp. Co. 78 I. C. C. 126, 141, 142, 265, 269.

(m) It is not for carriers to dictate the routes to be used by shippers upon the theory that the ultimate cost of the product to the consumer would be less by using routes which the carriers select; nor is it for the Commission to attempt to control the ocean routing of freight for the purpose of augmenting the revenues of particular carriers to the depletion of revenues of other carriers. Storage in transit rules at Minnesota Transfer, 78 I. C. C. 265, 269.

(n) Proposal of Northern Pacific and Butte, Anaconda & Pacific railroads to eliminate the Midland Continental as an intermediate carrier in traffic between eastern transcontinental group F and certain points in Montana found justified on eastbound but not on westbound traffic. While routes via proposed junctions would in some instances be longer than those embracing the Midland, these junctions are long-established gateways between the Northern Pacific and connections, and employment of an intermediate carrier would necessitate further division of revenue, and on eastbound traffic result in short-hauling the Northern Pacific. Routing via Midland Continental R. R., 78 I. C. C. 328.

(o) Contention that a carrier is not a "shipper" as that term is used in paragraph (10) of section 15 of the act, and that company material therefore must be considered unrouted traffic, not sustained. On contrary, the commission has repeatedly referred to carriers as shippers when engaged in transporting material belonging to them. In the Matter of Transportation of Company Material, 22 I. C. C. 439, 440. As a shipper, therefore, it necessarily follows that such carrier has right to route its traffic as it sees fit so far as this provision of the act is concerned. New Mexico Central Ry. Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 721, 722.

§6½. Rail-and-Water Route.

See Rail and Water Rates.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) If a shipper desire his shipment to move via water and rail route that is cheaper than the all rail route, he must in delivering it to an initial carrier specify such routing, otherwise it is understood that the shipment is to move via an all rail route. Schuhles Pure Grape Juice Co. v. Director General 68 I. C. C. 485, 486.

(b) If complainant desired to have its shipment move over a cheaper rail and water route, it should have specified such routing to the initial carrier. W. A. Zelnicker Supply Co. v. Sugar Land Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 189, 190.

(c) Routing instructions designated two roads "and connecting lines" but did not specify rate. Tariff under which charges assessed named certain steamship lines as participating carrier. Contention by complainant that such steamship lines are "connecting lines" under routing instructions given and that reparation be awarded to basis of rate that would have resulted from rail-and-water movement, not sustained. If complainant desired to have shipment move over cheaper rail-and-water route, it should have specified such routing to initial carrier. Schule's Pure Grape Juice Co., 68 I. C. C., 485. Shipment not misrouted. Zelnicker Supply Co. v. S. L. Ry. Co. 81 I. C. C. 189.

(d) After arrival of shipments at originally billed destination, complainant requested reconsignment, specifying partial routing as to some shipments and no routing as to others. Movement via rail-and-water route not requested, but shipper contends that shipments should have moved via such route over which lower rate applied. HELD: Where two routes, one all-rail and other rail-and-water, are available, it is understood that shipments are to move all-rail unless shipper specifies rail-and-water. Shipments found not misrouted. Globe Grain & Milling Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 483.

§7. Shipper's Instructions.

See Bills of Lading §10; Through Routes and Joint Rates VI.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Through routes and through rates; rights of consignors to route their shipments. An individual shipper, or consignor, cannot legally require a railroad company, to send a shipment by a particular route, beyond the company's line, at the same, or equivalent through rates, which such company may have established with other connecting lines; and what the individual shipper of Interstate commerce may not lawfully demand, common carriers engaged in transporting such commerce may not lawfully require of connecting lines. Kentucky Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2. I. C. R. 351.

(b) Where a shipper of freight gives directions to the freight agent of the initial carrier at the point of shipment as to the particular route by which the freight shall be shipped to destination, it is the duty of the freight agent to make such notations on the way bill as will reasonably and properly carry the freight by such particular route to destination. Pankey v. Richmond & Danville R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 3.

(c) A shipper at Troupe, Texas, directs the freight agent of a carrier to bill his freight from that point to Fort Lawn, South Carolina, via Vicksburg, Jackson, Meridian, Birmingham, Atlanta, Augusta and Columbia. The freight agent simply inserts in the way bill that the destination of the freight is Fort Lawn, South Carolina, "via Vicksburg," in consequence of which the freight at Vicksburg is billed to Atlanta and consigned to the Richmond and Danville Railroad Company, by which it is carried to Fort Lawn without being carried by way of Augusta and Columbia, and as a result of this the shipper is compelled to pay eighty-six cents more for the carriage than if it had been billed via Augusta, as directed by the shipper, the rates by all-rail lines from Vicksburg to Augusta being the same, and not the same from Vicksburg to Fort Lawn via Atlanta: HELD, That in this the freight agent failed to do his duty; he should have made a notation on the way-bill via Vicksburg and Augusta; and upon request the initial carrier should refund to the shipper the amount of this overcharge occasioned by the oversight of its freight agent. Pankey v. Richmond & Danville R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 3.

(d) Refusal of a railroad company to receive and route a shipment in accordance with the request of the shipper that it be forwarded via a connecting line with which the company has at the time through billing arrangements and through rates, to the damage of the shipper, is a discrimination against him in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act. Rea v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 43.

(da) Complainant offered the defendant a carload of potatoes at Verona, Miss., and asked that the shipment be forwarded to Cleveland, O., via a connecting line with which defendant had at the time through billing arrangements and through rates, but defendant's agent refused to receive and route the shipment in accordance with such direction, and complainant was thereby damaged to the extent of one hundred dollars. HELD, that complainant was entitled to have his merchandise carried over the route which he directed, and that the failure of defendant to receive and forward the shipment accordingly was a discrimination against complainant in violation of the Act to Regulate Commerce. Reparation ordered. Rea v. Mobile & Ohio R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 43.

(e) Complainant shipped a carload of hay from Summit, O., to Lenoir, N. C. Complainant claims that shipping instructions were given to route the car via "Strasburg Junction and Southern Railway." The defendant initial carrier denies this and asserts that instructions were given to route via "Cincinnati and Southern Railway," the route actually used. The rate was less via Strasburg than via Cincinnati. The complainant was unable to prove definitely the giving of instructions to route via Strasburg, but complainant and defendant both agree that shipping instructions were given. HELD: That if the carrier had, contrary to positive instructions from the shipper, routed the car by an indirect and expensive line instead of the direct and cheaper route, or had without any instructions sent the car by the longer route, so as to burden the shipper with needless expense, such action would be prima facie unjust and unreasonable, and without justification would constitute fair basis for an order of reparation. That the giving of instructions relieves the carrier from any obligation to forward by the cheaper route, and in this case, where the testimony does not indicate what instructions were actually given, an order in favor of the complaining shipper can not be issued. Dewey Bro. Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. et al, 11 I. C. C. 481.

(f) The carrier is not obliged to forward by a cheaper route where he follows the instruction given by the shipper, and an order in favor of the complainig shipper cannot be issued where the testimony does not indicate what instructions were actually given. Dewey Bros. Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 481.

(g) It is clear that even if the duty of a railroad agent in the absence of instructions is to ship by the route giving the lowest combination he is relieved of that responsibility of direction in the face of specific instructions by a shipper when the agent consents to the routing suggested. Dewey Bros. Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 481, 484.

(h) If a carrier, contrary to shipper's instructions, forwards cars by a more expensive instead of a cheaper route, or, without any instructions, sends the cars by the more expensive route, such action is prima facie without justification and constitutes a fair basis for reparation; but if the shipper gives definite instructions to move the cars by the more expensive route, the carrier is relieved of the obligation to forward by the cheaper route. Pankey v. R. & D. R. Co. 3 I. C. C. Rep. 33, cited and approved. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(i) Where routing instructions are followed no misrouting can arise. Empire Wall Paper Co. v. B. & M. R. R., 20 I. C. C. 1; Independent Supply Co. v. C. & P. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 66; Parfrey v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 20 I. C. C. 104, 105; West Oregon Lumber Co. v. A. & C. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 151, 152.

(j) A shipper may offer his freight without routing instructions, in which event it is the duty of the carrier to route it via the cheapest available practicable route, but he is also entitled when for any reason he specifies a particular route to have his shipments move in accordance with his instructions, at the established rate over that route, and it is the duty of the initial carrier to take the necessary steps to carry out his routing instructions. Any carrier misrouting a shipment in violation of specific instructions to the injury of the shipper, violates the Act, and is responsible for the damage thereby caused to the shipper. Beckman Lumber Co. v. L. & N. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 280, 281.

(k) A delivering carrier was named in the routing instructions. Damages awarded where carrier failed to route the goods to a junction with such road over which a lower rate was applicable. Ryland & Brooks Lumber Co. v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 520.

(l) Where the shipper desires to prescribe the route over which his property shall be transported, all of his instructions in that respect should be placed upon the shipping order given to the carrier as well as upon the bill of lading signed by the carrier and retained by the shipper, and in instances where the bills of lading and shipping orders are prepared by the shipper and the shipper notes upon the bill of lading certain instructions which he fails to note on the shipping order the carrier cannot be held liable for misrouting if it complies with the instructions shown on the shipping order. American Agricultural Chemical Co. v. Bangor & Aroostook R. R. Co., 28 I. C. C. 398, 401.

(m) Section 15, as amended, insures to shippers right to route their shipments. Morse Lumber Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 33 I C. C., 571, 572.

(n) Shippers are chargeable with knowledge of the legal tariff rates, and the definite specification by shippers of the more expensive of two or more available routes relieves carriers of the duty of forwarding the shipments over the cheapest route. Baker-Wakefield Cypress Co. v. T. & P. Ry., 37 I. C. C. 546.

(p) Where routing was specified by the shipper but no rate or junction point the legally applicable rate charged found unreasonable to extent it exceeded lower rate applicable via other routes and subsequently established via route of movement but in connection with a different junction. Reparation awarded. Roberts Cotton Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 139.

(q) Because of an embargo shipper authorized change in destination and ultimately reconsigned shipment to originally billed point. Shipper might have stood upon his right to have joint rate specified in original billing protected, but since he consented to the substitution of a different contract in the face of a warning that change in destination could not be made the effective means of diversion after arrival at new destination, he thereby assumed liability for the combination rates charged and legally applicable over route of movement. George Pottery Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 372.

(r) Where a shipper specifies routing by a carrier, which, in connection with the originating line, forms a through route from point of origin to destination, the initial carrier can not be charged with having misrouted the shipment if it bills it over that route instead of selecting a cheaper route in which those carriers participated, but with a third carrier intervening. Northwestern Traffic Service Bureau v. M. P. R. R. R. Co. 73 I. C. C. 471, 472.

(s) Shipments were specifically routed via lines forming a direct route between origin and destinations, over which they would have ordinarily moved. Due to switchmen's strike initial carrier without consulting shipper forwarded via much longer but lower rate route with a third carrier intervening. HELD, shipments misrouted but since it moved via a less expensive route shipper was benefited thereby instead of being damaged. Northwestern Traffic & Service Bureau (Inc.) v. M. P. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C. 471.

(t) Following Stebbins case, 42 I. C. C. 150, and other cases cited, shipments found not misrouted where they moved in accordance with routing instructions, although a lower rate, consistent with such instructions, applied via another route. Northwestern Traffic & Service Bureau (Inc.) v. C., T. H. & S. E. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 475.

(u) Shippers are entitled, under the act, to use any through route available under the tariffs. If the tariffs are so worded that routes other than a direct route are possible such routes should be available alike to all shippers whether availed of under a reconsignment order or upon original billing. Baker Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 74 I. C. C., 489, 491.

(v) The insertion of a rate in the bill of lading by the shipper was equivalent to instructing the defendant to forward the shipments by the route over which that rate applied. Cayuga Operating Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C. 676, 677.

(w) To avoid embargo via the usual route, shipments were specifically routed by shipper over route taking a higher combination rate. HELD: Facts that there were lower rates in effect over routes other than route of movement, that a lower joint rate was subsequently established over the route traversed, and that between other points there were joint rates made on substantially the same basis as that in connection with the less costly route, do not prove unreasonableness. International Paper Co. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 385.

(x) It becomes necessary, in 24 I. C. C., 380, and 28 I. C. C., 131, to forbid an express company from serving unduly its own interest by circuitous routing, and there is no more reason for a shipper to be allowed to route circuitously than there is for an express company. Southeastern Express Co. v. Amer. Ry. Exp. Co., 78 I. C. C. 126, 142.

(y) Where routing instructions are ignored by carrier and shipments move via lower-rated routes, complainants are entitled to rates applicable over route of movement, and same is true with respect to shipments covered by bills of lading containing higher rates without routing instructions and which are moved via routes either all-rail, water-lake-and-rail, or water-ocean-and-rail, over which rates lower than those inserted in bills of lading apply. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 131, 133.

(z) Routing instructions designated two roads "and connecting lines" but did not specify rate. Tariff under which charges assessed named certain steamship lines as participating carriers. Contention by complainant that such steamship lines are "connecting lines" under routing instructions given and that reparation be awarded to basis of rate that would have resulted from rail-and-water movement, not sustained. If complainant desired to have shipment move over cheaper rail-and-water route, it should have specified such routing to initial carrier. Schule's Pure Grape Juice Co., 68 I. C. C., 485. Shipment not misrouted. Zelnicker Supply Co. v. S. L. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 189.

(aa) Contention that lower combination rate, available over route of movement, was not applicable to complainant's shipment, since there was no agreed basis of divisions out of such lower combination between carriers parties to tariffs, not sustained. Routing under lower rate was not restricted in tariffs and such rate was applicable over lines of all carriers parties thereto. Complainant was entitled to lowest combination over route specified, and it is no excuse that carriers had not agreed on divisions. Shipment found overcharged and reparation awarded. Standard Rice Co. v. G., H. & S. A. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C. 305, 306.

(bb) To promote speed and efficiency, circular of director general suggested certain routing, with protection of lower rate over other routes under Federal control. Complainant routed in compliance with circular but shipment moved via route not specified therein and charges applicable to route of movement, but in excess of those via other available routes, assessed. HELD: Even if shipment be found misrouted, rate assessed was applicable since circular was not filed under section 6 of the act and thus had no effect as tariff publication. However, earnings under rate charged not only exceed those under rate via longer routes, but are excessive for a route designated for use "for speed and efficiency." Rate assessed found unreasonable and reparation awarded. Pioneer Paper Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 377.

(cc) A shipper is bound by his routing instructions, and, in absence of proof that rate applicable over route of movement was unreasonable, he has not been subjected to an unreasonable charge merely because there was lower rate over other available routes. Railroad Commissioners of Montana, 26 I. C. C. 482; South Chester Tube Co., 64 I. C. C., 78; Mexican Gulf Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 411, 412, 413.

(dd) The carriers specified by the consignor in the bills of lading formed a complete route from point of origin to destination. The carriers can not be charged with misrouting in forwarding the shipments over that route although a lower rate was applicable over another route in which those carriers participated with a third carrier. Consolidated Coal Co. v. M. P. R. R., 88 I. C. C. 523, 524.

(ee) Where a carrier diverts a shipment from the route specified by the shipper to another route taking a higher rate it is liable to make reparation and cannot escape liability on the ground that the bill of lading contains a provision giving it the right of diversion, where such right is not contained in the published tariffs. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 191 Fed. 705, 709.

(a) Reparation on shipment of silos, on basis of difference between joint through rate and combination rate on Chicago between same points. Kalamazoo Tank & Silo Co. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 154.

(b) Where a shipper gives no routing directions and the carrier forwards traffic over one route when another route carrying a lower rate is equally available, the Commission holds it liable to the shipper for the difference between the higher rate and the rate applying over the less expensive route. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 469, 470.

(ba) Measure of damages, for disregard by carrier obligation to forward shipment by route over which, in the absence of routing instructions, is the lowest charge for the transportation applies. Hennepin Paper Co. v. Northern P. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 535.

(c) To require reparation in misrouting cars is only to require the carrier to make just compensation for injury resulting from failure to perform its duty; but to require or permit any other carrier than the one responsible for the misrouting to participate in the making of such reparation would be to permit or require departure from established rates, which is expressly for-bidden by law. Hennepin Lumber Co. v. N. P. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 535, 557.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) The measure of damages for misrouting a shipment billed to a consignee carrier is not the full division of the rate, because it would have cost that carrier something to perform the haul. In Re Transportation of Company Material, 22 I. C. C. 439, 441.

(e) Where an unauthorized diversion in transit makes a higher rate, damages will be awarded. Weyl-Zuckerman & Co. v. C. M. Ry. Co., 27 I. C. C. 493, 495.

(f) Damages for misrouting, are measured by the extent to which the charges collected exceeded those which would have accrued via the route directed by shipper or which the carrier should have used in the absence of any instructions. Northwestern Traffic Service Bureau v. M. P. R. R. Co. 73 I. C. C. 471, 472.

(a) To require reparation for misrouting is only to require the carrier to make just compensation for injury from failure to perform its duty; but to require or permit any other carrier than the one responsible for the misrouting to participate in the making of such reparation would be to permit or require departure from established rates, which is expressly forbidden by law. Hennepin Paper Co. v. Northern Pac. 12 I. C. C. 535.

(b) To require or permit any other carrier than the one responsible for misrouting to participate in making reparation would be to permit or require departure from established rates, which is expressly forbidden by law. Hennepin Paper Co. v. N. P. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 535.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) Carriers at fault in misrouting are liable for damages represented by higher charges than would have been lawfully assessable had the misrouting not occurred, and their liability is not limited to such damage as can be reasonably anticipated, since a shipper cannot be deprived through a carrier's negligence of any lawful privilege offered by another carrier, especially after due diligence on his part to secure such advantage. Kile & Morgan Co. v. Deepwater Ry. Co., 15 I. C. C. 235, 238.

(d) The demand of carriers that Administrative Rulings 60, 70 and 83, requiring published tariffs to be adhered to and imposing the liability for reparation solely on the carrier diverting a shipment intentionally or unintentionally to a route involving a higher rate, be so modified as to permit such diversion in cases of emergency or necessity is denied. Woodward & Dickerson v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 170, 173.

(e) Where a shipment is found to have been misrouted no reparation can be awarded until it is shown which carrier was responsible for the misrouting. Meeds Lumber Co. v. A. V. Ry., 38 I. C. C. 679, 681.

(f) Where the shipper gave proper directions for the shipment of the goods, but the shipment miscarried as a result of the initial carrier's negligence, the agent of the terminal carrier, and the shipper is not liable to the latter for the freight charges from the erroneous to the true destination, and can recover from the terminal carrier in detinue for the wrongful detention of the goods. IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) It has been the Commission's practice to consider a claim for reparation on account of misrouting as akin to one for overcharges and, provided defendants have been accorded full hearing upon it, to determine the question upon its merits under a general allegation of unreasonableness even though no specific allegation of misrouting was made in the complaint. IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where the initial carrier has knowledge of the rates applying over two different routes, it is solely liable for misrouting despite inquiries made by it as to rates over the lines of connecting carriers. Cameron & Co. v. T. & P. Ry. Co., 18 I. C. C. 560, 561.

(b) The Commission has frequently held that a shipper is bound by his routing instructions and that merely because there was a route over which he might have sent his shipment at a lower rate he has not been subjected to unreasonable charges, and this principle controls in all cases where no showing is made that the rate applicable over the route of movement was unreasonable. Ball Lumber Co. v. T. & P. Ry. Co., 25 I. C. C. 437, 438.

(c) The fact that shipper gave routing instructions over a route taking a higher rate does not relieve carrier of liability if that rate is unreasonable. Shoupe & Co. v. T. & B. V. Ry. Co., 26 I. C. C. 570, 571.

(d) It has been the practice to consider a claim for reparation on account of misrouting as akin to one for overcharges and, provided defendants have been accorded full hearing upon it, to determine the question on its merits under a general allegation of unreasonableness even though no specific allegation of misrouting was made in the complaint. IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Previous decisions must be modified to the extent that, in misrouting cases, a lower state rate, not on file with the Commission, may be accepted as a basis for reparation where officially verified by the local authorities. Lathrop Lumber Co. v. A. G. S. R. R. Co., 27 I. C. C. 250, 251.

(b) Complainant routed shipment via line of a water carrier not filing tariffs with the Commission. Routing instructions disregarded and shipment forwarded all rail. HELD, following Conference Rulings 93 and 354, reparation denied as there is no official measure of the accuracy of the overcharges alleged. American Cement Plaster Co. v. Ft. W. & D. C. Ry. Co., 58 I. C. C. 435.

(c) To promote speed and efficiency, circular of director general suggested certain routing, with protection of lower rate over routes under Federal control. Complainant routed in compliance with circular but shipment moved via route not specified therein and charges applicable to route of movement, but in excess of those via other available routes, assessed. HELD: Even if shipment be found misrouted, rate assessed was applicable since circular was not filed under section 6 of the act and thus had no effect as tariff publication. However, earnings under rate charged not only exceed those under rate via longer routes, but are excessive for a route designated for use, "for speed and efficiency." Rate assessed found unreasonable and reparation awarded. Pioneer Paper Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 377.

(a) After a freight tank car has just returned from one long journey, it is the duty of the carrier, before permitting it to start out loaded on another distant run, in which the lives and safety of brakeman, trainmen, and the property of the shipper will be involved, to have such car carefully inspected by a competent inspector, in order to ascertain whether it is in a safe condition for such service. Michigan Congress Water Co. v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., (Com.) 2 I. C. R. 428.

(b) Petitions of J. G. McCullough and E. B. Thomas, Receivers of the New York, Lake Erie & Western Railroad Company, and other carriers for extension of time within which to comply with sections four and five of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to Promote Safety of Employes and Travelers upon Railroads by Compelling Common Corriers Engaged in Interstate Commerce to Equip Cars with Automatic Couplers and Continuous Brakes and their Locomotives with Driving-wheel Brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893. Re Safety of Employes and Travelers 6 I. C. C. 332.

(c) The time for placing grab irons and drawbars of a standard height, on freight cars, as required by the Act of Congress of March 2, 1893, was extended from July 1, 1895, to specified later dates. Re Safety of Employes and Travelers, 6 I. C. C. 332.

(d) Couplers are required by act of Congress. Re Safety of Employes and Travelers, 6 I. C. C. 332.

(e) The petitioning carriers, and all other common carriers engaged in interstate commerce by railroad, granted a further extension of seven months from January 1, 1900, within which to comply with provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the safety-appliance act of March 2, 1893. Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1893 v. 8 I. C. C. 662.

(f) Petitioning carriers granted extension of two years from January 1, 1898, within which to comply with sections 1 and 2 of the railway safety-appliance act of March 2, 1893; and those owning cars and locomotives not equipped with couplers and train brakes as provided in sections 1 and 2 of said act required to make semiannual report of cars and locomotives so equipped during the six months preceeding. Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1893 v. 8 I. C. C. 643.

(g) The discretionary power lodged with the Commission to extend the period of time within which carriers are required to comply with the safety appliance act, was designed to prevent special hardship upon the public and the carriers, and should only be exercised under such circumstances and for such length of time as was contemplated by the framers of the statutes, and are plainly inferable from its terms. In Re Applications of Certain Railroad Companies for and Extension of Time, etc. 9 I. C. C. 522.

(h) Extension of time granted to petitioning carriers to comply with certain provisions of the Act of March 2, 1903 amending the Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1893 as amended April 1, 1896. Re Application of Certain Railroad Companies v. 9 I. C. C. 522.

(i) The manifest purpose of the amended safety appliance law is that all freight cars shall be equipped with air-brakes, and that all brakes shall be used and operated; and such condition is necessary to the safety of both the railway employes and traveling public, besides facilitating traffic movement, and resulting in the handling of traffic with greater economy. Increasing the minimum percentage of air-braked cars in trains from 50 to 75 per cent would result in the earlier operation of trains fully equipped with air brakes, and accelerate the removal from service of old and comparatively unsafe cars now unequipped with that appliance; but under the present public demand the use of every available car is required to move the unusual volume of traffic now offered, and ordering such increased percentage into immediate effect would hamper railway operations and impose severe hardships upon shippers and the general public. After due notice and full hearing, HELD, that the minimum percentage of air-braked freight cars in trains on railroads used in interstate commerce shall stand increased to 75 per cent on and after August 1, 1906. Re Proposed Increase in the Minimum Percentage of Cars in Trains Required to be Operated with Power or Train Brakes, 11 I. C. C. 429.

(j) The car involved in this case was hauled from one of defendant's yards to another, the movement being preparatory to going upon the main line toward destination in another state. HELD, that this car was used in interstate commerce within the meaning of the act of March, 2, 1893, as amended. United States v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (U. S. Dist. Ct. S. D. O.) 11 I. C. C. 696.

(k) In an action brought jointly against two or more railroad companies to recover the statuatory penalty specified in the safety appliance acts, judgment may be rendered against any one of the defendants when the proof shows that such defendant has violated that statute. Chaffee v. United States, 18 Wall. 518, 538, 21 L. ed. 908, 911. U. S. v. C. P. & St. L. R. Co. et al., 11 I. C. C. 698.

(l) The safety appliance acts apply to cars while being used in a switching movement. United States v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (U. S. Dist. Ct. S. D. O.) 11 I. C. C. 696.

(m) When a railroad company hauls over its line a car having a defect covered by the safety appliance acts it is liable for the penalty provided by said statutes. United States v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co., (U. S. Dist. Ct. S. D. Ill.) 11 I. C. C. 698.

(n) In an action brought jointly against two or more railroad companies to recover the statutory penalty specified in the safety appliance acts, judgment may be rendered against any one of the defendants when the proof shows that such defendant has violated the stat-has violated the statutes. United States v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. (U. S. Dist. Ct. S. D. Ill.) 11 I. C. C. 698.

(o) In an action brought jointly against two or more railroad companies to recover the statutory penalty specified in the safety appliance acts, judgment may be rendered against any one of the defendants when the proof shows that such defendant has violated the statute. United States v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. (U. S. Dist. Ct. S. D. Ill.) 11 I. C. C. 698.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(p) The Commission, is without power to except railroads in Porto Rico from the provisions of the safety appliance acts. Safety Appliances on Railroads in Porto Rico, 37 I. C. C. 470, 476.

(q) Apparently the sole purpose of the safety appliance act was to authorize the Commission to fix a reasonable time within which the carriers should make their cars comply therewith. The period fixed by the Commission having expired, it became unlawful under the provisions of the act to use any car not conforming with the standards as prescribed by the Commission. Under a strict construction of the law a doubt arises as to whether there was any intention on the part of Congress to authorize the Commission to suspend the operation of the statute with respect to standardization of equipment after its terms once became effective. Ex Parte 33, Safety Appliances, 58 I. C. C. 655, 656.

(r) This is a proceeding under section 26 of the act which authorizes the Commission, after investigation, to prescribe the installation of automatic train stop or train control devices or other safety devices, upon the whole or any part of the railroad of any carrier by railroad subject to the act. On Jan. 10, 1922, the Commission entered an order under which certain specified carriers, respondents, were given an opportunity to show cause, if any, why an order should not be entered requiring the installation of automatic train stop or train control devices upon designated portions of their lines. The conclusions reached as a result of the practically continuous investigations conducted from 1906 to 1920 were identical in substance, namely, that automatic train control of devices is desirable as a means of increasing safety; and that the development of automatic train control devices had reached a stage warranting the installation and use of such devices on a more extended scale. The essential safety function of any automatic train stop device is to stop a train where a dangerous condition exists ahead of the train, when the engine man, for any cause fails to take proper action to stop. In the most recent development of automatic train control devices, continuous control is obtained whereby the engineman is not dependent upon indications received at fixed locations, but is immediately made aware of a change in condition ahead of his train and may act promptly to govern his train accordingly, but in the event of his failure so to do the device automatically operates to protect the train, either by slowing it down or by stopping it. The record indicates that automatic train control devices of the ramp type are practicable under actual service conditions, and that when properly installed and maintained they unquestionably increase the safety of train operation. The record holds expectations of satisfactory tests and operation. The record holds out expectation of satisfactory tests and operation of the other types of train control devices. The cost of installing automatic train control devices depends upon the nature of the particular installation, the number of locomotives to be aquipped, the type of device selected and the extent of train control that is desired. The Commission is convinced that the carriers can, if they are determined to do so, readily install upon their roads devices which will meet the requirements of safety and which at the same time will not unduly interfere with operating requirements. The development of its present state of efficiency is evidence of what can be accomplished. Investigations have shown that the art of automatic train control has long since passed the experimental stage. The time has now arrived when the carriers should be required to select and install such devices as will meet the specifications and requirements of the Commission. Under the act the order of the Commission must be issued and published at least two years before the date specified for its fulfillment. The Commission is of the opinion that a six months period will give sufficient time for any road to decide upon the device it should select. Respondents will be required to make monthly reports to the Commission during the six months period beginning July 1, 1922, of their arrangements for such tests and of the progress made. HELD, carriers are required to install on or before Jan. 1, 1925, an automatic or train control or train device or devices which comply with specifications and requirements of the Commission, such device to be applied to or operated in connection with all road engines running on or over at least one full pessenger locomotive division. Each of the carriers will be required to file with the Commission on or before Jan. 1, 1923, complete and detailed plans of the signal systems in use on the portion or portions of its lines designated and a report of the number and type of locomotives assigned to or engaged in road servoice on the designated portion or portions of its line. Automatic train control devices, 69 I. C. C. 258.

(s) Section 26 of the act places upon the commission the duty, after investigation, of ordering the carriers or any of them to install upon the whole or any part of their lines automatic train-stop or train-control devices or other safety devices which comply with specifications and requirements prescribed by the commission. Automatic Train Control Device, 69 I. C. C. 263.

(t) An automatic train-stop or train-control device is a system of installation so arranged that its operation will automatically result in either the application of the brakes until the train has been brought to a stop, or, when the speed of the train exceeds a prescribed rate, until the speed has been reduced to a predetermined or prescribed rate. Automatic Train Control Devices, 69 I. C. C. 264.

(u) The essential safety function of an automatic stop is to compel obedience to a stop signal. Where the device is made subject to manual control of the engineman so that he may forestall the automatic-brake application according to his own judgment of the conditions, the automatic safety feature of the device is to that extent nullified. This factor of human judgment is the factor which an automatic train-stop device is designed to eliminate. Automatic Train Control Device, 69 I. C. C. 264, 276.

(v) An undesirable stop is one which occurs when there is no operating or traffic condition which requires the stop to be made. Where the train-control device causes a stop under such conditions, the action is upon the side of safety. It is undesirable, however, from an operating point of view. A false-clear failure is one in which the train-control device indicates by its action or lack of action that no danger exists, when the contrary is true. Failure in this case is a dangerous one. Automatic Train Control Devices, 69 I. C. C. 266.

(w) Carriers can, if they are determined to do so, readily install upon their roads devices which will meet the requirements of safety and which at the same time will not unduly interfere with operating requirements. Had railroads taken prompt action when the block-signal and train-control board pointed the way in 1911, the art would have been far advanced to-day. Many of the operating problems, such as the interchangeability, effect on track capacity, and others, would have been solved. The development of the automatic block-signal system to its present state of efficiency is evidence of what can be accomplished. Automatic Train-Control Devices, 69 I. C. C. 273.

(x) Disastrous collisions will continue to occur until automatic train-control devices are installed to protect against human failure. Investigations have shown that the art of automatic train control has passed the experimental stage. No other safety devices were perfected to as high a degree as the automatic train control before they were either ordered installed or were voluntarily adopted. The results obtained in actual employment have clearly demonstrated the practicability of and the necessity for automatic train stops or train control, and the time has now arrived when carriers should be required to select and install such devices as will meet the commission's specifications and requirements. Automatic Train-Control, 69 I. C. C. 274.

(y) Power of commission to prosecute an inquiry upon its own motion under provisions of section 1 of interstate commerce act, as to adequacy of facilities for performance as common carriers of car service by each of the railroads subject to its jurisdiction, with view to requiring carriers to provide themselves with such safe and adequate locomotives and cars as may be warranted by facts as shown, and as required by law, first came into the interstate commerce act as one of the amendments made by the transportation act, 1920. Assigned cars for Bituminous Coal Mines, 80 I. C. C., 520, 562.

(z) Where ore cars of a railroad used in interstate commerce were no longer required for carrying ore, but were reconstructed for carrying limestone by placing thereon a superstructure which raised the height of the sides above the 36 inches permitted by regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission for cars having no ladder on the side, and some of the cars had been so used for five years, and all would be so long as the limestone traffic continued, the superstructure was not a mere temporary addition to the cars, but the placing of it on the cars, without also placing ladders, subjected the railroad company to the penalty for violation of the order. United States v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co., 281 Fed. 347.

(aa) The regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission that all cars having sides more than 36 inches high must be equipped with side ladders is final, and not subject to review or change by the courts. United States v. Duluth, S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 281 Fed. 347.

(bb) Since the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission requires that cars of special construction shall have the equipment of cars of general construction nearest in class or kind, the construction of stone cars from ore cars by adding a superstructure, even though it makes the cars of special construction, does not relieve the carrier of its obligation to place side ladders thereon, and it was its duty to construct the superstructure in such manner that the side ladders could have been so placed. United States v. Duluth, S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 281 Fed. 347.

(cc) Where three cars loaded with coal had been brought in by a railroad from another state and placed on a siding for the consignee, who had unloaded two of the cars, the shifting of the three cars by the carrier, so as to remove the two unloaded cars to another siding until orders were received to return them to the mine, and to place the loaded car in position for unloading, was a movement in "interstate commerce," so that there may be recovery for the death of an employee resulting from the violation of the federal Safety Appliance Act requiring automatic couplers. Camp v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 195 N. Y. S. 90.

(dd) An interurban railway company which confines its business to transportation of passengers and goods from place to place within the state, but which rents its cars and transfers its employes to the service of a street railway company for street car traffic in Kansas City, Kas., and Kansas City, Mo., located contiguously on opposite sides of the Kansas-Missouri state line, is not engaged in the sort of "interstate commerce" which is governed by the federal Safety Appliance Act. Kasper v. Kansas City, L. & W. Ry. Co., (Kans. 1922,) 207 Pac. 203.

(ee) Power of commission to prosecute an inquiry upon its own motion under provisions of section 1 of interstate commerce act, as to adequacy of facilities for performance as common carriers of car service by each of the railroads subject to its jurisdiction, with view to requiring carriers to provide themselves with such safe and adequate locomotives and cars as may be warranted by facts as shown, and as required by law, first came into the interstate commerce act as one of the amendments made by the transportation act, 1920. Assigned Cars for Bituminous Coal Mines, 80 I. C. C. 562.

(ff) Act Cong. Feb. 17, 1911 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8630-8639), to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads, the 1915 amendment thereof (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8639a-8639d), extending the act to include "the entire locomotive and tender and all parts and appurtenances thereof," and the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission show the plain intent of Congress to occupy the field of regulation exclusively; and hence Railroad Law § 77, as amended by Laws 1918, c. 649, requiring all openings between the engine cab, and tender to be inclosed, could not apply to trains in interstate commerce. Whish v. Public Service Commission, 200 N. Y. S. 282.

SEASON RATES

See Reasonableness of Rates §35.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Rates on grain products from Missouri River cities to Virginia ports are equalized during the season of open navigation with the rail-lake-and-rail rates in effect to Baltimore; and are likewise equalized with the all-rail rates via Chicago to Baltimore during the season of closed navigation on the lakes. Export Grain Products from Missouri River Points, 40 I. C. C. 195, 198.

(b) Traffic of ocean carriers operating along the Alaska coast is essentially a one-way seasonal traffic in which full cargoes are the exception rather than the rule. The Alaska Investigation, 44 I. C. C. 680, 692.

(c) Peanuts are shipped from farms during period from October to December and from mills from October to July Fidelity Cotton Oil Co. v. A. & V. Ry., 47 I. C. C. 542, 544.

(d) The demand for heater cars and lined cars during the season from November to April is heavy and prompt release of equipment is necessary. New York & New Jersey Produce Co. v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R., 51 I. C. C. 399, 400.

(e) The movement of fruits and vegetables is not wholly seasonal, and is becoming less so with the increasing use of cold storage facilities, and the need for refrigeration varies widely during the period in which fruits and vegetables commonly move. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 471.

(f) A railroad company issued and filed a local tariff, naming special car demurrage rules and charges on lake coal held by the company for transshipment at a lake port during the shipping season which was fixed as from August 15th to December 31st. This tariff was to become effective July 12th, and provided that all cars on hand August 15th should be recorded as arriving on that date, and that all cars remaining on December 21st should be recorded as released on that date, and after 10 free days should be subject to local demurrage. HELD, that such tariff was a "seasonal tariff," operating only during the summer shipping season, and applying only to shipments made after July 12th each year, and that a new tariff, issued and filed in a subsequent year and effective before July 12th, governed as to shipments for the following shipping season, although such shipments were made before it became effective. IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The "shipping pound" includes the weight of the package in which silk is shipped; and, when used, the spool, bobbin, warp beam, or cone on which it is wound. Silk Asso. of America v. P. R. R., 44 I. C. C. 578, 579.

SHRINKAGE RATES

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) To equalize rates, carriers established proportional or shrinkage rates from upper Ohio River crossings, making them applicable on coarse grains and their products moving through certain stated gateways or junctions from a defined territory west of the Illinois-Indiana state line, usually referred to as shrinkage territory. Indianapolis Freight Bureau v. C. C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 26 I. C. C. 53, 55.

(b) Complainant attacked the rate on corn and its products from Cincinnati, O., Covington and Louisville, Ky., to Wilmington, N. C., as unjustly discriminatory in comparison with a proportional or shrinkage rate of 21c applying from the same crossings to Charleston, S. C., as a typical lower port on traffic originating at points west of the Mississippi River or in Illinois. The 20c rate to Wilmington, applied whether the traffic originated at Cincinnati, etc., or beyond. From Cincinnati to Charleston the local rate was 23c per 100 lbs. When corn originated from beyond this rate from Cincinnati to Charleston was shrunk to 21c. Wilmington demanded that the 20c rate on like traffic should be shrunk so as to give it a rate of 18c on corn from Cincinnati, when from beyond. It appeared, however, that the shrinkage rate of 21c to Charleston was made in order to equalize the rates at the upper and lower crossings, whereas to Wilmington the rate from the lower crossings, such as Cairo and Evansville was 22c, as against 20c, and it was necessary for the carriers at the upper crossings to shrink the 20c rate in order to gain their share of the business. The rate from shrinkage territory, taking Champaign, Ill., as representative, to the lower crossings, was 7c on grain, and that for the upper crossings was 9c. The rate from both the lower and upper crossings to Charleston is 23c, necessitating the shrinkage of 2c from the upper crossings. To Wilmington the rates from the lower and upper crossings were 22c and 20c, respectively, resulting in a total rate of 29c in both cases. HELD, the 20c rate attacked was not shown to be unjustly discriminatory against Wilmington. Boney & Parker Milling Co. v. A. C. L. R. R. Co., 28 I. C. C. 383.

(c) Assuming local rates to be reasonable, a carrier cannot be compelled on through traffic to shrink such rates to absorb other local rates of another carrier beyond a designated destination. Kansas City & M. Rate Cancellation, 28 I. C. C. 640, 643.

SIDE TRACKS AND SPUR TRACKS

See Switch Tracks and Switching §11; Transportation §5.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Defendants failure or refusal to provide at its own cost and thereafter maintain a spur or side track from its main line to complainant's mill and elevator at Mt. Vernon, South Dakota, was not, by the evidence adduced as to the provision and maintenance of side tracks from defendant's line to mills or elevators at other points in South Dakota, shown to be a violation of section 3 of the Act to Regulate Commerce. Mt. Vernon Milling Co. v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 194.

(b) A railroad company will not be required to provide and maintain spur track to a mill and elevator because of the maintenance of such tracks to mills and elevators at other points in the state, where the latter were erected before the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act and the adoption by the railroad company of a fixed policy of requiring private individuals for whom it constructs switch tracks to pay the actual cost, and under different circumstances. Mt. Vernon Milling Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 194.

(c) The enactment by Congress, in section 3 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, that the carriers affected thereby shall not subject persons, localities, or descriptions of traffic to undue prejudice or unreasonable disadvantage, or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to persons, localities, or kinds of traffic, in any respect, whatsoever, applies to discrimination in facilities or instrumentalities of shipment or carriage; and while the Commission has no authority to order a carrier to put in sidetrack connections, or to prescribe the terms or conditions relating to the construction of such connections, its jurisdiction does extend to any case of wrongful prejudice resulting from discrimination in the provision of such facilities or instrumentalities of shipment or carriage, including track connections.

Red Rock Fuel Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 438.

(d) Complainant alleged defendant refused to allow a side track connection with its line which will enable complainant to equip its coal mines in West Virginia with side track facilities and make shipments from such mine to points in other states, while allowing such concessions to its competitors. Defendant controls through ownership of capital stock, large coal mining enterprises in the Fairmont district which, during the year 1904, shipped more than one half the tonnage from that district. Complainant has purchased the right of way for the side track and the physical conditions pertaining to the proposed connections are at least as favorable as those pertaining to connections already made for the other mines in that coal field. It is found generally that as between complainants and the favored mines similarity exists in essential respects. Under such discrimination complainant is made unable to make interstate shipments of coal from its mine, and the defendant, by continuing its policy of denying these facilities to applying owners of coal lands, may practically control in its own interest all the undeveloped coal in this field, as well as derive greater profits from its large holdings in mines already developed in that section. HELD, that the discrimination is not wrongful as between complainant and other favored shippers, but amounts to undue and unreasonable preference by defendant of itself, and that order forbidding further violation of section three of the Act should issue accordingly. Red Rock Fuel Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 438.

(e) Defendant declines to permit a sidetrack connection between its line and a switch or sidetrack to complainant's coal mine in the Fairmont District of West Virginia for the purpose of receiving interstate shipments of coal from its mine, although it has provided and maintains sidetrack connections for other mines in that district from which large quantities of coal are shipped to interstate destinations. Defendant controls, through ownership of capital stock, large coal mining enterprises in the Fairmont District which, during the year 1904, shipped more than one-half the tonnage from that district. Complainant has purchased the right of way for side track and the physical conditions pertaining to the proposed connection are at least as favorable as those pertaining to connections already made for other mines in that coal field. It is found generally that as between complainant's and the favored mines similarity of situation exists in essential respects. Under such discrimination complainant is unable to make interstate shipments of coal from its mine, and the defendant, by continuing its policy of denying these facilities to applying owners of coal lands, may practically control in its own interest all the undeveloped coal in this field, as well as derive greater profits from its large holdings in mines already developed in that section. HELD: That the discrimination is not only wrongful as between complainant and other more favored shippers, but amounts to undue, and unreasonable preference by defendant of itself, and that order forbidding further violation of section three of the statute should issue accordingly. Red Rock Fuel Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 441.

(f) Complainant sought an order compelling defendant to install a side track from its line at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., to complainant's nearby coal sheds. It appearing at the hearing that defendant is wiling to install such side track upon payment of actual cost thereof and agreement by complainant that the side track may be removed when a proposed new station building is undertaken, no order will now be made, but the case is retained awaiting action of the parties. James E. Nield v. C. St. P. M. & O. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 203.

(g) Location of private siding will be left largely to discretion of carrier. Weleetka Light & Power Co. v. Ft. S. & W. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 503.

(h) A contract for prepayment to shipper of advances for building switch, should be filed with Commission. Weleetka Light & Water Co. v. Ft. S. & W. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 503.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(i) A spur used or necessary exclusively in the transportation of persons is as much subject to the Act as are "freight depots, yards and grounds" used or necessary "in the transportation or delivery of property." West End Improvement Club v. O. & C. B. R. & B. Co., 17 I. C. C. 239, 244.

(j) Because a spur track is included in service of one carrier, it does not follow that service of another carrier without a spur track is inadequate. Southern California Sugar Co. v. S. P. L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., 19 I. C. C. 6, 11.

(k) Complainant built a spur track to connect its factory with the main line of defendant. Defendant refused to operate the same unless its standard form of industrial switch track agreement was signed, one clause of which required the industry to indemnify it from liability and claim from loss and damage by fire caused by the sparks of burning coal from its locomotive on its spur track. The spur track ran between lumber piles and there were shavings and sawdust and other inflammable material on the premises. HELD, it is no part of the duty of the carriers either at common law or under the Act to spot cars at a warehouse or factory, or to do more than set them on the spur track and off its own right of way. If it undertakes to do so, with or without additional compensation, there is no reason why it may not predicate its undertaking upon the condition that it shall not be liable to the industry for fire losses of the nature presented. Imperial Wheel Co. v. St. L. I. M. & S. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 56, 58.

(l) Complainant built a spur track 2.71 miles long to the C. B. & Q. R. R. tracks from its mines at Thayer to Thayer Junction. The C. B. & Q. R. R. built and operated spur tracks to other mines in the Springfield group in which Thayer is located but refused to build or, after construction, to operate the connection between its rails and complainant's mine. At other mines except Thayer, the C. B. &. Q. R. R. had operated spurs without extra charge above the group rate applicable from stations on its own rails. HELD, that such a practice created a case of unjust discrimination. C. W. & V. Coal Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 23 I. C. C. 13, 16.

(m) It is not the duty of a common carrier by rail, as a matter of law, to deliver and receive carload freight on private sidings or spurs without making separate charge for such service in addition to the line haul rate. R. R. Commissioners of Florida v. F. E. C. Ry., 42 I. C. C. 616, 624.

(n) The typical spur track ordinarily does not exceed a few hundred feet in length. National Tube Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 489, 497.

(o) The Commission is without jurisdiction to prescribe uniform liability clauses to be contained in leases or contracts for the construction, maintenance, and use of industrial or private side tracks, limiting liability for loss and damage caused by fire from locomotives operating over such tracks. National Industrial Traffic League v. A. & R. R. R. Co., 61 I. C. C. 120.

(p) Section 1 of the act clearly refers to the construction, maintenance, and operation of switch connections, and under its provisions the Commission has no authority to require a railroad to construct a private side track, authority being limited to requiring a carrier to make a switch connection with a private side track. National Industrial Traffic League v. A. & R. R. R. Co., 61 I. C. C. 120, 121, 122.

(q) The demands upon a carrier which lawfully may be made are limited by its duty, but it is not its duty as a common carrier to enter into a contract to lease a railroad siding to a shipper or to enter into an agreement to operate privately owned side tracks. National Industrial Traffic League v. A. & R. R. R. Co., 61 I. C. C. 120, 123.

(r) Shipments delivered to complainant's private siding by P. & R. were switched by the Pennsylvania to another private siding, both within the switching limits of Williamsport, Pa., for which later service the Pennsylvania assessed a class rate. Lower switching charge in effect but tariff provided that "this charge not applicable from or to tracks of connecting line." Contention that complainant's private siding should be considered an interchange track of the carriers held not sustained and since shipments were switched from a private siding and not from tracks of a connecting carrier, lower switching charge legally applicable. Refund of overcharges directed. Central Pennsylvania Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 99.

(s) In determining the amount of damages for loss of profits resulting from failure of carrier to construct a siding and switch connection, the Commission is restricted to shipments that would have moved in interstate commerce. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 186.

(t) Without deciding that term "transportation" in section 1 is broad enough to cover a siding and switch connection, paragraph 9 of section 1 makes it the duty of common carriers to construct, maintain, and operate switch connections with private sidetracks, but the shipper must construct his sidetrack before the carrier is obliged to grant him the switch connection. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 187.

(ta) There is no duty on the part of the common carriers subject to the act to provide sidetracks off their lands to effect connection with an industry. If an industry desires connection with a trunk line, the duty devolves upon it to make arrangements for the procuring of a spur. Certain-Teed Products Corp. v. C. R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 68 I. C. C. 260, 263.

(u) Contention that a carrier's team tracks are its private terminals for the accommodation of its traffic and the shippers it serves, and their use may not be required for the traffic of foreign lines, HELD: Where carrier permits the use of such tracks and performs the switching service out of which a complaint arises, the commission may determine whether or not the switching charge was unreasonable. Oakes Co. v. M., St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 77 I. C. C. 93, 95.

(v) Complainant attacked rate charged on one car of coal shipped Dec. 12, 1918 from Ferndale, W. Va., to Madrys Spur, N. C., as illegal and unreasonable. Shipment was consigned to Madry Siding, N. C., but shipment was not accepted because defendants agents were unable to locate a siding by that name in the tariffs. Madrys Spur is listed in the tariffs. Complainant thereupon revised the address of consignee to Scotland Neck, N. C., Care Madry Siding, N. C. The latter is about 12 miles from Scotland Neck. For operating reasons the A. C. L. handled through Madrys Spur to Scotland Neck. Charges were applicable rate of $3 per ton to Scotland Neck, demurrage which accrued while the A. C. L., was obtaining disposition orders $9.00 back haul charge from Scotland Neck to Madrys Spur, $36.09. If the shipment had moved over the short route there would have been no back haul. Deemurrage accruing at Scotland Neck was due to carrier's error. HELD, charges should have been $150.60, shipment overcharged $45.09, reparation awarded. Webb Fuel Company v. Director General 81 I. C. C. 631.

(w) When a spur track is erected by a railroad company under a contract with a shipper, and such spur track is not a part of the carrier's railroad track that is used for the ordinary or a substituted delivery of freight on such spur track is an additional service of special advantage to the particular shipper that is rendered under special contract, and the agreed compensation for such special service has been paid as the service is rendered, the amounts so paid cannot be recovered from the carrier upon the ground that the charges were unlawful. Henderson v. Hines (Fla. 1923), 98 So. 333.

(x) Contracts between railroad company and one for whose use spur tracks were constructed, requiring the user to hold the railway company harmless and indemnify it from loss or liability, were binding as between the user and Director General of Railroads, in absence of unconditional refusal by Director General to be bound thereby, especially where Director General's order provided that such contracts should be adhered to until otherwise ordered. Davis v. A. F. Gossett & Sons (Georgia 1923) 118 S. E. 773.

SLEEPING CAR COMPANIES

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Complainant alleged that defendants, by reason of having discontinued a through sleeping car service between Guthrie, Okla., and Canadian, Tex., are subjecting the citizens of Oklahoma to great inconvenience. The service in question was installed when Guthrie was capitol of Oklahoma. The average daily number of passengers was 5.6, and the average revenue was 13.4c per mile, for the period during which the car was in service. Defendants assert that it was a financial loss. No roads offer Pullman service between the points in question, but defendant's witness testified that passengers from Guthrie to Canadian could usually get a Pullman on the train leaving Kiowa, Kans., at 10:30, and when coming from Canadian could occupy a sleeping car until Kiowa is reached at 4 a. m. HELD, without raising a question of the sufficiency of the petition, or the jurisdiction of the Commission, the facts proved do not call for the exercise of regulative power under the statute. Complaint dismissed. Corporation Commission of Oklahoma v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 25 I. C. C. 120.

(b) The value to the passenger of sleeping-car occupancy can not be gauged by exactly the same standards as passenger transportation by day. To the latter, mileage, in the absence of unusual conditions, may be applied as a fair rule of the value of the service. The bare service of transportation to the occupant of a sleeping car, however, has been covered in the first instance by the passenger fare paid. The value of the occupant of a sleeping car, however, over and above the value of being carried a certain distance is found primarily in obtaining a night's rest under as comfortable conditions as compatible with railroad travel, essentially a night's lodgings; and secondly, in the keeping intact for the transaction of business the daylight hours which otherwise would be spent in covering distance. If the physical conditions under which transportation is conducted were invariably the same, if the speed of sleeping cars were uniformally the same, if the traffic density on all sleeping-car lines were the same, and if detraining during the night imposed no discomfort, mileage might possibly be taken as a measure of the value of sleeping-car occupancy. But it would then be a fair test because it would roughly measure the advantage of a nights occupancy of the sleeper to the passenger and the cost of service to the carrier. What the patron of a sleeper seeks first is a night's rest, and for this he pays as he would for a hotel room, for a unit service, and this service is approximately the same whether the car be hauled 200 or 300 miles during the sleeping hours. Whether a berth has been in use four hours or ten hours, as a rule, it cannot again during the same night be made a source of revenue to the carrier. Hence, berth-mile rates are of little comparative value, and are not controlling in fixing rates for the occupancy of sleeping cars. Commercial Club of Sioux Falls v. Pullman Co., 31 I. C. C. 654, 657.

(c) The Commission has not undertaken to prescribe what is a reasonable rate or return upon property employed in a particular service, nor that the rates of return upon all services shall be uniform hence, the mere showing that specific rates attacked yield a goodly profit is not conclusive as to their unreasonableness. Where the rates for a particular service, such as a full night's occupancy of a sleeper are fairly uniform, the reduction of such rates wherever they afford a good profit coupled with maintenance of the rates wherever they result in loss would materially level the average of profits generally. Commercial Club of Sioux Falls v.Pullman Co.,31 I. C. C. 654.

(d) The value to the passenger of sleeping car occupancy can not be gauged by exactly the same standards as passenger transportation by day To the latter, mileage, in the absence of unusual conditions, may be applied as a fair rule of the value of the service. The bare service of transportation to the occupant of a sleeping-car, however, has been covered in the first instance by the passenger fare paid. The value of the occupancy of a sleeping car over and above the value of being carried a certain distance is found primarily in obtaining a night's rest under as comfortable conditions as compatible with railroad travel, essentially a nights' lodging; and secondly, in the keeping intact for the transaction of business the daylight hours which otherwise would be spent in covering distance. If the physical conditions under which transportation is conducted were invariably the same, if the speed of sleeping cars were uniformly the same, if the traffic density on all sleeping-car lines were the same, and if detraining during the night imposed no discomfort, mileage might possibly be taken as a measure of the value of sleeping-car occupancy. But it would then be a fair test because it would roughly measure the advantage of a night's occupancy of the sleeper to the passenger and the cost of service to the carrier. What the patron of a sleeper seeks first is a night's rest, and for this he pays as he would for a hotel room, for a unit service, and this service is approrimately the same whether the car be hauled 200 or 300 miles during the sleeping hours. Whether a berth has been in use for four hours or ten hours, as a rule, it cannot again during the same night be made a source of revenue to the carrier. Hence, berth-mile rates are of little comparative value, and are not controlling in fixing rates for the occupancy of sleeping cars. Commercial Club of Sioux Falls v. Pullman Co., 31 I. C. C. 654, 657.

(e) Surcharge upon passengers in sleeping and parlor cars amounting to 50 percent of the charge for space such cars, authorized, such charge to be collected in connection with the charge for space, and to accrue to the rail carriers. Increased Rates, 1920, 58 I. C. C. 220, 242.

(f) Under section 1 of the interstate Commerce Act, as amended June 29, 1906, the term "common carrier" as used in the Act includes sleeping car companies, so as to make it unlawful to attach a sleeping car moving in interstate commerce under a state writ. Pullman Co. v. Linke, 203 Fed. 1017, 1019.

(g) Where a Pullman passenger is refused admission to car his tickets called for gave his tickets to a station porter with instructions to return to the ticket office and ascertain whether another berth could be had, the porter was the messenger of and not the passenger's agent and information given him by the ticket agent as to berth vacancies in the designated car not being communicated was not binding. Pullman Co. v Walton, (Ark. 1922), 239 S. W. 385.

(h) Where passengers were refused admission to cars designated, a sleeping car company was not absolved from liability for its refusal to furnish accommodations conforming to tickets purchased, by the fact that the holders surrendered their tickets and accepted a return of the price thereof. Pullman Co. v. Walton, (Ark. 1922), 239 S. W. 385.

(i) Where a sick passenger was refused Pullman accommodation, and his suffering augmented by his failure to secure a comfortable bed during a 15 hour journey, a verdict of $1,000 for added suffering, inconvenience, and discomfort from his riding on the day coach HELD not excessive. Pullman Co. v. Walton, (Ark. 1922), 239 S. W. 385.

(j) Where a desperately ill passenger was refused admission to the sleeping car his ticket called for and proceeded on his journey in the day coach, the inconvenience of remaining over was sufficient to justify him in failing to suspend his journey and mitigate possible damages. Pullman Co. v. Walton, (Ark. 1922), 239 S. W. 385.

(k) A verdict for $25 damages for refusal of Pullman berth accommodation conforming to a passenger's ticket for a 15-hour journey HELD excessive, and should be reduced to $25. Pullman Co. v. Walton, (Ark. 1922), 239 S. W. 385.

(l) In invalid passenger's action against sleeping car company for breach of contract to allow her to occupy berth as bed during a trip extending into the daytime, special findings of the jury that such breach was the proximate cause of her injuries, that her own acts were the proximate or contributinng cause, and that the overexertion of the long trip was the proximate cause of her injuries, HELD so conflicting as to require a new trial. Pullman Co. v. Castleberry, (Tex. 1923), 251 S. W. 518.

(m) If sleeping car company breached its contract with invalid passenger to permit her to occupy berth as bed during a trip extending into the daytime, she was entitled to recover only such substantial damages as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the parties' contemplation, and for injuries occasioned by her own negligence, or from overtaxing her strength by taking the trip while too frail to endure it, no damages could be recovered. Pullman C. v. Castleberry, (Tex. 1923), 251 S. W. 518.

(n) A provision in the contract of employment between the Pullman Company and a porter by which the latter released all railroad corporations over whose lines the cars of that company might be operated while he was traveling in its service "from all claims for liability of any nature or character whatsoever on account of any personal injury or death" is valid. Robinson v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 35 Sup. Ct., 491.

SPACE RENTAL CHARGES

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Proposed increased "space rental" charges on domestic, export, and coastwise shipments of cotton and cotton linters at New Orleans, La., and subports, found not justified as the general level of charges on all commodities handled in domestic, export, import, or coastwise traffic is not only lower than the level of the charges proposed, but is lower than the level of the present charges. Space Rental Charges on Cotton, 66 I. C. C., 121.

(b) "Space rental" charges found, in fact, to be charges for storage, and ambiguities in tariffs giving color to a distinction between charges for "storage" and charges for "space rental" should be eliminated. Space Rental Charges on Cotton, 66 I. C. C., 121, 123.

(a) The power of the state to regulate is not a power to destroy, and limitation is not the equivalent of confiscation. Chicago M. & St. P. R. R. Co., v. State of Minn. 3 I. C. R. 209.

(b) Laws of Minnesota of 1869, chap. 78 p. 95, and sec. 8 of chap. 103 of the General Laws of Minnesota of 1875, do not constitute such a contract with the corporation, as to the fixing by it of its rate of charges, as to deprive the Legislature of its power to regulate those charges. Minneapolis Eastern R. Co. v. State of Minn. 3 I. C. R. 224.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) The Act is not unconstitutional as infringing the right of contract or as taking property for public use without just compensation or due process of law by reason of the fact that it invalidates a contract entered into prior to its passage between a person and a railroad by which the latter, in consideration of the release of a cause of action for personal injuries, granted to such person and his family free transportation for life. L. & N. R. R. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 482, 484, 31 Sup. Ct. 265, 55 L. ed. 297.

§2 In general.

(a) An assurance made by a carrier that if one will locate in business on the line of its road his property shall be taken for transportation as belonging to a specified class cannot bind the carrier so as to compel a classification according-

ly. A right to special rates cannot be made out in this way; the classification must have the same construction in favor of all persons; the law requires uniformity and impartiality in the dealings of a carrier with all persons. Hurlbert v. Lake Shore & Michigan Southern R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 81.

(b) A common carrier by rail, to which property is offered for transportation, cannot in an indirect manner as by refusing to carry freight and by refusal to perform obligations imposed by law upon it, enforce its contracts, but must for that purpose resort to the customary remedies. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. 2 I. C. R. 102.

(c) No common carrier by rail can by any contract with another confer upon the latter any privileges which, either directly or otherwise can have the effect to limit the rights which any locality or any person otherwise under its charter, or under common law principles, have against it. Alford v. C. R. I. & P. R. Co. 2 I. C. C. 771, 774.

(d) A railroad corporation takes its charter, containing such a provision, subject to the general law of the State, and to such changes as may be made in such general law, and subject to future constitutional provisions and future general legislation, in the absence of any prior contract with it exempting it from liability to such future general legislation. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. v. State of Minn. 3 I. C. R. 209.

(e) The grant of power by section 9 of the charter, to the directors of the company, to make needful rules and regulations touching the rates of toll and the manner of collecting the same, does not deprive the State of its general authority itself to regulate the rates of toll to be collected by the company. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. v State of Minn. 3 I. C. R. 209.

(f) Exemption from future general legislation, either by a constitutional provision or by an Act of the Legislature, does not exist unless it is given expressly or unless it follows by an implication equally clear with express words. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., v. State of Minn. 3 I. C. R. 209.

(fa) A contract between corporations charged with a public duty, such as is that of common carriers, providing for the formation of a combination having no other purpose than that of stifling competition and providing means to accomplish that object, is illegal and against public policy. Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Closser 3 I. C. R. 387.

(g) Existing contracts for special freight rates or rebates from regular tariff rates, which had been made with railroad companies subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, became illegal when that Act took effect, and were after that time incapable of enforcement. Bullard v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 536.

(h) The Act of Congress of Feb. 4, 1887, to Regulate Commerce, prohibiting unjust freight discriminations by common carriers, applies to contracts which are within its provisions, entered into prior to, but not fulfilled until after its passage; and a shipper in whose favor such unjust discrimination has been made cannot recover rebates stipulated for in such contract. Bullard v. Northern P. R. Co. (Mont.) 3 I. C. R. 536.

(i) A contract between a carrier and shipper stipulating for certain rebates, the effect of which is that other shippers having no special agreement will pay the amount of such rebates for the same service in excess of the freight paid by such shipper, is contrary to public policy and cannot be enforced. Bullard v. Northern P. R. Co. (Mont.) 3 I. C. R. 536.

(j) A contract is invalidated by the subsequent enactment of police regulations which render its performance illegal as to one of the parties. Jamieson v. Ind. Natural Gas & Oil Co. 3 I. C. R. 613.

(k) But a private and secret agreement between a railroad company and favored shippers for the payment of rebates to the latter, thereby discriminating against other shippers of the same class of goods under like conditions, to whom such rebates are not allowed, is illegal at common law. Cook v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) 383; Fitzgerald v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Vt.) 3 I. C. R. 633.

(l) Contracts concerning interstate transportation must be regarded as made upon the basis and with the understanding that changes in the law applicable to them may be made by Congress, and there is no vested right in the law as it exists at the time they are made. Fitzgerald v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 3 I. C. R. 633.

(m) A contract with a carrier for rates less than those on its schedule, and which is therefore unlawful as to the carrier because in violation of the Interstate Commerce Law, may nevertheless be enforced by the shipper if he had no knowledge that the schedule rate was higher than that given him. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Dismukes (Ala.) 4 I. C. R. 200.

(n) Where a contract is made with a shipper by a carrier, member of a thru line, for shipments of goods over the line at a less than the published lawful rate charged shippers in general, it is not a violation of the act for the delivering carrier to exact payment of the full lawful rate before delivery. Where, however, the shipper did not enter into the contract willfully for the purpose of securing a rate which he knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence might have known, but was an innocent party to it and made shipment on the faith of the rate named, the courts seem inclined to hold that justice to the shipper requires that the goods be delivered on payment by him of the amount specified in the contract. Duncan v. A. T. & S. F. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 385, 390.

(o) A contract of employment for the main purpose of getting cut freight rates and rebates from railroad companies, within the Interstate Commerce Act is void, and no recovery can be had for its breach under the provisions prohibiting special rates and rebates and making it a misdemeanor for the shipper or his agent to solicit or induce the violation of its provisions. Parks v. Dold Packing Co., 4 I. C. R. 486.

(p) In determining whether a contract of employment to procure rebates from railroads included railroads within the operation of the Interstate Commerce Act, the conduct of the parties in obtaining rebates from roads outside the state may be resorted to. Parks v. Jacob Dold Packing Co. (Buff. Super. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 486.

(q) Where a contract is made with a shipper by a carrier, member of a through line, for shipment of goods over the line at a less than the published lawful rate charged shippers in general, it is not a violation of the Act to Regulate Commerce for the delivering carrier to exact payment of the full lawful rate before delivery. Where, however, the shipper did not enter into the contract willfully for the purpose of securing a rate which he knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence might have known, to be illegal, but was an innocent party to it and made the shipment on the faith of the rate named, that courts seem inclined to hold (and it is a matter for their determination) that justice to the shipper requires that the goods be delivered on payment by him of the amount specified in the contract. Blanton Duncan v. A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co., et al, 6 I. C. C. 85.

(r) The fact that a special rate was offered the plaintiff by mistake of the agent of one of two connecting lines of railroad cannot give any added force to the contract. A contract made by mistake can have no greater validity than one intentionally entered into. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific R. Co. v. Hubbell, 5 I. C. C. 241.

(s) A contract for the transportation of freight from a point in Missouri to a point in Kansas for a rate less than that demanded and collected from other persons for like service at the same time, where the usual rate is not unreasonable or excessive, violates the provisions of the interstate commerce act, and is utterly void. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific R. Co. v. Hubbell, 5 I. C. R. 241.

(t) Subject to the two leading prohibitions that their charges shall not be unjust or unreasonable, and that they shall not unjustly discriminate, so as to give undue preference or advantage to persons or traffic similarly circumstanced, the Act to Regulate Commerce leaves common carriers as they were at the common law, free to make special contracts looking to the increase of their business, to classify their traffic, to adjust and apportion their rates so as to meet the necessities of commerce, and generally to manage their important interests upon the same principles which are regarded as sound and adopted in other trades and pursuits. C. N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Inters. Com. Commission, 5 I. C. R. 391.

(u) A contract of interstate shipment, which violates the interstate commerce act in fixing the terms of shipment at a less amount than that fixed in the schedules by the carrier and Interstate Commerce Commissioners, will not be enforced. Gerber v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.), 5 I. C. R. 458.

(v) A contract of interstate shipment, which violates the interstate commerce act in fixing the terms of shipment at a less amount than that fixed in the schedules by the carrier and interstate commerce commissioners, will not be enforced, even in favor of a shipper who was ignorant of the violation. Gerber v. Wabash R. Co., 5 I. C. R. 458.

(w) The Act to Regulate Commerce is not to be construed so as to abridge or take away the common law right of the carrier to make contracts and adopt proper business methods further than its terms and recognized purposes require. A railroad company may lawfully charge lower rates on coal in the summer months, in order to keep its coal cars and coal crews employed during that season of the year, provided such rates be offered in good faith to all persons upon equal terms. Interstate Commerce Commission v. L. & N. R. Co., 5 I. C. R. 656.

(x) The interstate commerce act is not to be construed so as to abridge or take away the common law right of the carrier to make contracts and adopt proper business methods, further than its terms and recognized purposes require. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (C. C. M. D. Tenn.), 5 I. C. R. 656.

(y) Subject to the two leading prohibitions that their charges shall not be unjust or unreasonable, and that they shall not unjustly discriminate, so as to give undue preference or advantage, or subject to undue prejudice or disadvantage, the act leaves common carriers as they were at common law, free to make special contracts looking to the increase of their business, to classify their traffic, to adjust and apportion their rates so as to meet the necessities of commerce, and, generally, to manage their important interests upon the same principles which are recognized as sound and adopted in other trades and pursuits. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Alabama M. R. Co., 5 I. C. R. 685.

(z) Common carriers may under the Act to Regulate Commerce make special contracts looking to the increase of their business, classify their traffic, adjust and apportion their rates so as to meet the necessities of commerce, and generally manage their important interests on the same principles which are recognized as sound in other trades and pursuits, subject to the prohibition that their charges shall not be unjust or unreasonable, and that they shall not unjustly discriminate so as to give undue preference or advantage or subject to undue prejudice or disadvantage persons or traffic similarly circumstanced. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Alabama Midland R. Co. (C. C. App. 5th C.), 5 I. C. R. 685.

(aa) The Interstate Act abrogated all existing contracts with common carriers for interstate commercial rates, and especially vested in the Federal tribunals exclusive jurisdiction to inquire and adjust such interstate rates as are alleged to be unfair and discriminative. The Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company had a contract with the Missouri Pacific Railway Company to transport men and materials to be used in the construction of certain roads by the Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction Company, at construction rates, which were calculated to be about the cost of transportation. Subsequently the railroad company exacted payment at the regular transportation rates, and the attempt was made to recover back the overcharge. The opinion contains a valuable discussion of the question, with the citation of many authorities. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald & Mallory Construction et al., 7 I. C. C. App. V.

(bb) A contract by a railroad company subject to the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Law to ship all lumber of the other party to the contract to a specified place at a rate not to exceed two cents per hundred pounds, where the rate charged other customers varied from two to four cents per hundred, is void because it violates such law which prohibits any special rate, rebate, or drawback, and makes it unlawful to give any undue or unreasonable advantage to any particular person. Kizer v. Texarkana & Ft. Smith Ry. Co., 8 I. C. C. App. LXXXVI.

(bba) Complainant attacked rate charged on machinery, carloads, from Erie, Pa., to Salton, Calif., as unreasonable in that the rate charged was higher than he claimed was contracted for by him with the defendant. Shipment moved via the Lake Shore, Chicago, C. R. I. & P., T. & P., and S. P. The tariff naming the rate having been legally established, it was the duty of defendant to apply the rate so published and in effect between the points in question; and if, as claimed by complainant, a contract was made with defendant for a lower charge upon that shipment, such contract was not binding and its violation furnishes no ground for redress under the act. HELD, lawful rate assessed, complaint dismissed. Red Cloud Mining Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 9 I. C. C. 216.

(cc) A contract made by a carrier to transport machinery at a lower rate than that fixed by the legally fixed tariff is not binding upon the company, and its violation furnishes no grounds for redress under the Act to Regulate Commerce. Red Cloud Mining Co. v. Southern P. Co. 9 I. C. C. 216.

(dd) Reparation for breach of contract for privilege not mentioned in tariff, because its allowances with publication was in violation of law. Shiel & Co. v. Ill. C. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 210.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(ee) Contract rates cannot prevail against the legal, published, and filed rates. Rates for transportation of anthracite coal, 35 I. C. C. 220, 243.

(ff) The application of special contract rates on through rail-and-water shipments for cannery and mining companies which are lower than the published rates constitutes an unlawful departure from the tariffs and an unjust and unlawful discrimination against other shippers. The Alaska Investigation, 44 I. C. C. 680, 704.

(gg) Where a carrier buys out the interest of a mercantile company in transportation facilities, an agreement to pay the latter annually an amount "equivalent to $12 per ton on all commercial tonnage originating at or destined to points beyond the lines of the carrier, whether the property of the mercantile company or of others," by way of deferred payment on the purchase price, would seem to be contrary to the well-settled rule that nothing but money may be lawfully received in payment for transportation. The Alaska Investigation, 44 I. C. C. 680, 708.

(hh) A contract under which a shipper has placed itself in a position where it can not take advantage of facilities offered by certain carriers, affords no basis for a finding of unjust discrimination or undue prejudice, and such contracts can not be held to obligate carriers to move traffic or furnish facilities at rates that are less than reasonable. Tennessee Copper Co. v. Director General as Agent, 59 I. C. C. 253, 256.

(ii) Property owners advanced sum to short-line carrier toward building a branch, and agreement entered into providing for repayment out of earnings, and that a certain arbitrary over main-line rate be charged on traffic moving off the branch. HELD: No such contractual provisions can preclude commission from fixing reasonable or nonprejudicial rates from points on such carrier to interstate destinations. Clay County Coal Asso. v. C. & M. R. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 414, 422.

(jj) A contract between carriers can not be permitted to defeat the plain requirements of the law. St. Louis & O'Fallons Ry. v. East St. Louis & Suburban Ry., 81 I. C. C. 538, 541.

(kk) The power of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution and the authority of the Commission by virtue of enactments of Congress thereunder can not be restricted by any preexisting or subsequent private agreement. C. M. & St. P. Ry. v. U. P. R. R., 88 I. C. C. 312, 317.

(ll) A contract between a railroad company and a pipe line company by which the latter was granted right of way for its pipe line over the railroad right of way in consideration for which it agreed to ship a stipulated tonnage of oil over the railroad in interstate commerce at a fixed rate, which was less than the published rate, HELD indivisible and illegal, and not enforceable by either party. Central R. Co., of N. J. v. U. S. Pipe Line Co. (Penn. 1923), 290 Fed. 983.

(mm) Whatever power under its charter a terminal company may have to convey or lease its property generally does not give it authority to enter into a contract under the operaion of which one shipper is preferred over another, and such preference cannot be secured by making a contract in the form of a lease of property. Eichenberg v. S. P. Co., 14 I. C. C. 250, 269; decision of Commission sustained, S. P. Terminal Co. v. I. C. C., 219 U. S. 498, 31 Sup. Ct. 279, 55 L. ed. 310.

(nn) A special contract with respect to an interstate shipment contrary to tariff provisions is void and of no effect. King v. Chicago, R. I. & Co., (Tex. 1922), 241 S. W. 180, 181.

(oo) Under the Act to Regulate Commerce contracts causing unlawful preferences and discrimination are void. Fort Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Burns, (Tex. 1922), 242 S. W. 295.

(pp) Where claimant, who contracted to construct and lease a line of railway to the receiver of another road for the period of receivership, with an option to continue for 10 years and with trackage rights after expiration of lease, was not required to ballast road, receiver's agreement, inconsideration of fact that ballasting would reduce expense of maintenance and operation to transport chats for ballasting for cost of transporting in work trains, instead of amount fixed by tariffs filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, was valid. Oklahoma Belt R. Co. v. Schaff, 282 Fed. 128.

(qq) A promise by the owner of a grain elevator to a railroad company, whose schedule, as filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, included a charge for elevation and transfer of grain from vessels to cars, that such charge, when paid to such owner, would be retained, and that no part would be given to any one having an ownership interest in the grain but that this was subject to cancellation on written notice, was not violated by giving a special rate or rebate to a forwarding agent, after notice had been given withdrawing the promise. Spencer Kellogg & Sons, Inc., v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 197 N. Y. S. 380.

(rr) Though a contract for rebates of freight rates was lawful when executed, Congress, by subsequent legislation could make it illegal. State Line & S. R. Co. v. Leigh Valley R. Co. (Pa. 1923), 120 A 829.

(ss) The rule that, where a contract is susceptible of two constructions, one of which is legal and the other not, that construction should be followed which makes the contract legal cannot be applied, if the contract is undoubtedly illegal. State Line & S. R. Co. v Lehigh Valley R. Co. (Pa. 1923), 120 A 829.

(tt) Contracts made in violation of the carrier's interstate tariff are void, and cannot be enforced. McGuire v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (Va. 1923), 118 S. E. 225.

(uu) The Interstate Commerce Act does not forbid all contracts between shippers and carriers, but only those which give undue or unreasonable preference or advantage. Vander Zyl v. Chicago R. I. & P. Ry. Co., (Iowa 1922) 189 N. W. 953.

(vv) A contract by which a carrier agrees to furnish cars to a shipper of livestock by a certain time on its line is not forbidden by the Interstate Commerce Act, and if it fails to furnish cars under such contract is liable for the resulting damages. Vander Zyl v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., (Ia. 1922), 189 N. W. 953, 955.

(ww) Where a carrier agreed to ship cattle within a reasonable time, the contract was not made a preferential one, in violation of the Interstate Commerce regulating interstate commerce merely because the shipper requested the carrier to extend the time of confinement of the cattle without unloading for feed, water and rest for 36 hours, as authorized by the twenty-eight hour law. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Bower (Ind. 1920), 127 N. E. 458.

(xx) No verbal agreement for cattle cars for shipment in interstate commerce can be relied on under the Carmack Amendment which requires a written contract, nor can a preliminary oral agreement for a future interstate shipment. Underwood et al. v. Hines, Director General of Railroads (Mo. 1920), 222 S. W. 1037.

(yy) A station agent of a railroad operating under federal control has no authority to make an absolute and unconditional contract to have cattle cars ready at a certain place or date, irrespective of the government's needs or of general service to the public; such a contract being special and discriminatory, and violative of the Commerce Act. Underwood et al. v. Hines, Director General of Railroads, (Mo. 1920), 222 S. W. 1037.

(zz) A contract between the local agent of a railway company under federal control and a shipper, whereby the carrier agreed to furnish nine stock cars at a certain station on a named date, HELD not to violate the Interstate Commerce Act prohibiting unjust discrimination among shippers. Cornwell v. Davis, (Mont. 1923), 213 Pac. 218.

§2½. Previous Validity.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) A common carrier may contract to ship freight at a lower rate than the published tariff, but he cannot contract to deny the same reduced rate to other shippers. Christie v. Missouri Pacific R. Co. 2 I. C. R. 22.

(aa) A contract by a railroad company to carry corn at the customary rates and to grant a rebate to the shipper, is not illegal, as being in violation of the law to prevent unjust discrimination, nor is it fraudulent as to the purchaser of the corn. Christie v. Missouri Pacific R. Co. 2 I. C. R. 22.

(b) Neither the Act to Regulate Commerce, nor the Act of June 15, 1866 (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258), was ever intended to invade the domain of private contracts between common carriers, which were valid when made, and are not in conflict with the provisions of the Law. The observance of good faith between parties, the upholding of private contracts, and enforcing their obligations, are matters of higher moment and importance to the public welfare, and far more reaching in their consequences, than the public policy sought to be established in the facilitation of commercial intercourse among the States, which the Act of June 15, 1866, aimed to promote. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(c) A statute confirming a contract between commissioners for placing electric wires underground, and a subway company, to lay subways for such wires, is none the less an exercise of police power because it gives to such company special privileges but no exclusive privileges or franchises. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Mayor of New York., 2 I. C. R. 533.

(d) Mere inequality between the rate charged a shipper by a railroad company for transporting goods, and the company's published tariff rates, is not prohibited either by the common law or by the provision in section 6, article 15, of the Constitution, that "no undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges," hence a contract to transport a certain shipper's goods at less than regular tariff rates is valid unless it be shown that an unjust discrimination was thereby made or intended. Bayles v. Kansas Pacific R. Co. 2 I. C. R. 643.

(e) The ninth section of the charter of the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company giving power to the directors of that company to make rules as to rates of toll does not constitute an irrepealable contract with that company that it shall have the right for all future time to prescribe its rates of toll, free from all control by the Legislature of the State. Chicago M. & St. P. R. R. v. State of Minn., 3 I. C. R. 209.

(f) Complainant is a miner and shipper of anthracite coal from a region in Pennsylvania from which defendant is a common carrier, and also a miner, purchaser and shipper of coal on its own account. Complainant alleges that defendant gives to itself as a shipper of coal an undue and unreasonable preference and advantage in rates, as compared with those charged complainant; and further alleges specifically that the rates charged him by defendant on coal east to Hoboken, and west and north to Buffalo and other points, are unreasonable and unjust. Respondent in reply relies on certain contracts between itself and complainant entered into prior to the enactment of the Act to Regulate Commerce, as controlling the charges for that transportation of coal by the former for the latter, and as precluding the jurisdiction of the Commission in the premises. The substance of one of these contracts is that the price for transporting complainant's coal to Hoboken shall be fifty per cent of the price for which respondent sells its own coal in Hoboken; the substance of the contracts is that complainant may ship his coal to points north and west upon the same terms and conditions as respondent for the time being transports coal for other parties, the terms to other parties being fixed in the published tariffs of respondent. No claim is made that the validity of these contracts has been impaired or affected by the passage of the Act to Regulate Commerce, although the Commission distinctly propounded the inquiry whether such. claim was made. The case being thus at this issue the complainant applied for subpoenas duces tecum, to compel certain third parties, as well as officers of respondent, to produce certain papers and contracts, alleged to be material as evidence upon the issue; and respondent moved to dismiss for want of jurisdiction. The Commission carefully abstains from expressing any opinion as to the effect of the Act to Regulate Commerce in impairing the validity of the contracts referred to, but, assuming them to be still in force, as both parties admit them to be HELD: That complainant is precluded, by the terms of the contract for shipping coal to Hoboken, from going into evidence to show that the rate on his coal to Hoboken ought to be different from that fixed by the contract; and witnesses and evidence asked for to that end are immaterial. The contracts providing that complainant may ship coal to points north and west, on the same terms and rates that respondent for the time being gives other persons, do not preclude complainant from showing that such rates are unjust, oppressive or unreasonable. Complainant is therefore entitled to a hearing upon that question. The Commission cannot, for the purpose of discovery and preventing unjust discrimination by respondent, which is both a shipper and a carrier of its own products over its own line, compel it to keep separate accounts showing what it charges itself for transportation or what the cost of transportation to it is; and even were such a separate account required, it would form no safe guide in determining whether respondent did or did not use its power as a carrier oppressively. The application for subpoenas duces tecum is denied. As applicable to contracts and papers of third persons, not before the Commission, it is denied on the ground of the injustice that might be done such persons; and generally (for the present at least) it is denied on the ground that the material facts can be proven by the testimony of witnesses, without the aid of the documentary evidence; although respondent will be expected to produce, for purposes of examination any books and papers of its own, material to the controversy. The respondent's motion to dismiss the complaint in toto is denied, as good ground of complaint is set forth in respect to northern and western shipments. Haddock v. Delaware, Lackawana & W. R. C., 3 I. C. R. 302.

(g) If an agreement is legally void and unenforceable by reason of some statutory or common law prohibition which does not involve any positive immorality, and there is no other reason of public policy why the courts should refuse to grant relief, a party who has received anything under it from the other party, and has failed to perform on his part, must account to the other for what he has received. Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Co. (N. H.) 3 I. C. R. 319.

(h) Where a carrier agrees that he will carry goods at a certain rate and that after the shipment he will repay the shipper a rebate of part of such rate, this is only an agreement to carry the goods at a compensation ultimately agreed upon, and is not illegal. Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Closser, 3 I. C. R. 387.

(i) If a common carrier makes a special contract to repay part of the sum received from the shipper, he must perform his part of the contract unless he overthrows the presumption of fairness and right by countervailing facts. Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Closser, 3 I. C. R. 387.

(j) A contract binding a carrier to transport as many carloads of grain as the shipper may desire transported is valid as to acts done in performance of it, until revoked. Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Closser (Ind.), 3 I. C. R. 387.

(k) A contract between corporations charged with a public duty, such as is that of common carriers, providing for the formation of a combination having no other purpose than that of stifling competition and providing means to accomplish that object, is illegal and against public policy. Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Closser (Ind.), 3 I. C. R. 387.

(l) Interstate carriers have power to make commodity class rates and special class rates to meet the circumstances and conditions of traffic along their lines. New York Bd. of Trade & Transp. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (Com.) 3 I. C. R. 417.

(m) A contract with a carrier for rates less than those on its schedule, and which is, therefore, unlawful as to the carrier because in violation of the Interstate Commerce Law, may nevertheless be enforced by the shipper if he had no knowledge that the schedule rate was higher than that given him. Mobile & Ohio R. Co., v. Dismukes, 4 I. C. R. 200.

(n) Where a contract is made with a shipper by a carrier, member of a thru line, for shipment of goods over the line at a less than the published lawful rate charged shippers in general, it is not a violation of the Act to Regulate Commerce for the delivering carrier to exact payment of the full lawful rate before delivery. Where, however, the shipper did not enter into the contract willfully for the purpose of securing a rate which he knew, by the exercise of reasonable diligence have known, to be illegal, but was an innocent party to it and made the shipment on the faith of the rate named, the courts seem inclined to hold (and it is a matter for their determination) that justice to the shipper requires that the goods be delivered on payment by him of the amount specified in the contract. Duncan v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 385.

(o) Where a railroad company is not restricted or inhibited by its charter or the law of the land, it is not unlawful for it to make an arrangement of rates for special purposes, on a sufficient consideration, and for the legitimate increase of its business. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. (C. C. E. D. La.) 4 I. C. R. 428.

(p) Contracts between carriers are not necessarily invalid because they incidentally restrict competition, but this depends upon their reasonableness. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 4 I. C. R. 443.

III. LIABILITY.

§3. Criminal liability.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Defendant initial carrier made a contract with a shipper to haul goods destined for export from Kansas City to New York City at the published rate then in effect over the lines of defendant and its connecting carriers. Subsequent to the making of the contract, the connecting carriers, without the consent of the initial carrier, raised the rates for their portion of the haul and duly published them, so as to make the lawfully published rate from Kansas City to New York City higher than that specified in defendant's contract with the shipper. HELD, in an indictment under the Elkins Act for granting concessions defendant was guilty, despite the existence of its contract with the shipper, for accepting less than the duly published increased rates. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 157 Fed. 831, 835.

(b) Where a carrier, under a private contract with a shipper, pays back from the published interstate rate to the shipper a sum of money as an allowance for the service rendered by the shipper in bringing carloads of its products from its plant over its private plant tracks to the tracks of defendant carrier, it is guilty of a violation of the Elkins law forbidding a carrier from granting a rate less than the published rate. C. & A. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 156 Fed. 558, 562.

§4. Damages for breach.

(1) In general.

See Interstate Commerce Commission I; Jurisdiction of Commission.

(a) The Commission has no power to enforce contracts, nor has it any general power to manage business of carriers. Traders & Travelers Union v. Phila. etc. R. R. Co., 1 I. C. R., 371.

(aa) That the power to enforce contracts has not been confided to the Commission, nor has it any general power or authority to manage the business of carriers, but only a limited power, expressly defined by the Act, to interfere to prevent wrong and oppression in specified cases. Traders & Travelers Union v. P. & R. R. 1 I. C. C. 371, 374.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) The Commission has no authority to approve or enforce a private agreement made between shippers and carriers concerning charges for transportation, nor is it bound by such agreement, when the reasonableness of such charges are challenged in the mode prescribed in the Act. The Commission will not undertake to interfere or construe an agreement, nor to determine its legal effect, nor to see that a tariff shall be issued in compliance therewith. But such an agreement may be regarded as an admission as between the parties executing it of strong evidentiary value that the rate agreed upon is reasonable and such evidence will be considered by the Commission together with all other facts, circumstances and conditions that may reasonably apply to the matters under investigation. Hood & Sons v. D. & H. Co., 17 I. C. C. 15, 18.

(c) The Commission has no authority to enforce express or implied contracts between shippers and carriers as to the maintenance of specific rates. Allegheny Ore & Iron Co. v. C. & O., 52 I. C. C. 415, 423.

(d) The fact that rates to certain points are maintained under contract between the carriers and shippers does not affect the authority of the Commission to require the carriers to desist from violations of the act. Graham & Gila Counties Traffic Asso. v. A. E. R. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 134, 143.

(e) The Commission has no jurisdiction to construe or enforce contracts and may inquire into contractual relations only in so far as is necessary to determine who, in fact, paid and bore the freight charges as such. International Coal Products Corp. v. Director General, 81 I. C. C. 435, 439.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) There is nothing in the prohibition of the Hepburn Act against charging, collecting, or receiving a greater or less or different compensation for transportation than that specified in the carrier's published rates, which prevents or relieves a carrier from making just compensation in money for the unpaid balance of the purchase price of a map made for it, because the delivery of the particular consideration stipulated for in the contract, viz., free transportation, became unlawful upon the passage of that statute. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co. v. Gray, 36 Sup. Ct. 176, 239 U. S. 583, 60 L. ed. 451.

(b) Whether a contract between a carrier and a shipper has been discharged depends upon the circumstances of the transaction. The question under the Interstate Commerce Act is not one of form but of actuality Southern R. Co. v. Prescott, 36 Sup. Ct. 469, 472, 240 U. S. 632, 60 L. ed. 836.

(a) Complainant alleged that defendant gives to itself as a shipper of coal an undue and unreasonable preference and advantage in rates, as compared with those charged complainant; and further complained specifically that the rates charged him on coal east to Hoboken, N. Y., and west and north to Buffalo and other points are unreasonable and unjust. Certain contracts were in effect between complainant and defendant whereby the price for transporting complainants coal to Hoboken shall be fifty per cent of the price for which respondent sells its own coal at Hoboken. No claim is made that the validity of these contracts has been impaired or affected by the act. HELD, complaint dismissed as to the rates to Hoboken, but held open as to rates to western and northern points. Haddock v. D. L. & W. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 302.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Contracts cannot justify unjust discrimination. Baltimore Butchers Live Stock Co. v. P. B. & W. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 124, 128; Shoemaker v. C. & P. Tel. Co., 20 I. C. C. 614, 621.

(c) The law contemplates that all shippers shall be treated alike and shall pay one rate, as established, published, and posted. The provisions of the Act are controlling as to contracts entered into prior to the Act's enactment. Therefore, contractural obligations can not be accepted as justification for the unlawful preference of one shipper to the disadvantage of others, or for the payment to a shipper of allowances in contravention of law. Allowances on Anthracite Coal, 36 I. C. C., 164, 170.

(d) Defendant carrier made a special contract with plaintiff for the transportation of horses by which it agreed to make the haul within a particular time, to make a particular connection, and to carry by a particular train. The shipment was to move at the regular rate. This expedited service was not provided for in its published tariffs and was not open to all. HELD, the contract was in violation of sections 3 and 6 of the Act forbidding unreasonable preferences in rates or regulations. Plaintiff could not recover damages for a breach thereof for delay of the shipment in transit. C. & A. R. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 165, 32 Sup. Ct. 648, 56 L. ed. 1033.

§5½. In general.

(a) In case of a transaction which is simply ultra vires, neither party will be heard to allege its invalidity while retaining its fruits. Limitation of the contractural power of a corporation does not prevent it from making restitution of money or property obtained under an unauthorized contract. Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Co. (N. H.), 3 I. C. R. 319.

(b) Where a special service is required of the carrier, such as rapid transit and speedy delivery in cases of perishable freight, a higher rate than for the carriage of ordinary freight is warranted, and, if a carrier charging a rate based on such special service, fails to render it, to the damage of the shipper, and without legal excuse, the remedy of the latter would seem to be by a proper proceeding in a court of law. Land v. South Carolina R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 205.

(c) Fraud and illegality in contracts are not to be presumed. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 4 I. C. R. 443.

(d) Performance of an illegal contract on one side only does not make it an executed contract so that an action can be maintained for the consideration. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.), 4 I. C. R. 578.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) Only the courts are empowered to enforce provisions of a contract, even though interpretation thereof involves the question of rebating. McArthur Bros. Co. v. E. P. & S. W. Co., 34 I. C. C. 30, 31.

(f) Although the Hepburn Act prohibits a railroad from performing a special contract under which railroad charges may be payable in other things than money, it by no means follows that the carrier is thereby relieved from any performance of such contract. Therefore, a carrier which prior to the passage of the Hepburn Act agreed to purchase a map for $750 of which $150 was to be paid in cash and the balance in transportation is obligated to pay the maker of the map cash in lieu of the consideration which was to be paid. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co. v. Gray, 36 Sup. Ct. 176. 239 U. S. 583; 60 L. ed. 451.

(g) Where a railroad agreed to perform intra-plant switching free for a large shipper and receiver of freight and filed an agreement to this effect with the Interstate Commerce Commission it cannot afterwards contend that such an agreement was void and recover the reasonable value of such switching. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. American Smelting & Refining Co., 269 Fed. 898.

(h) Where a lessor of a railroad sought to recover as additional rent, 5 cents per ton for all coal that the lessor had shipped during the year as provided for in the lease, if the amount of coal shipped by lessor exceeded 100,000 gross tons, HELD, that the 5 cents per ton was a rebate, and not rent, and even though plaintiff could recover this illegal rebate, he should have sued for breach of contract and not on covenant for rent. State Line & S. R. Co. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (Pa. 1923) 120 Atl. 829.

(i) That a contract in violation of law has been performed by one party, the part performed including that part which was illegal, does not entitle such party to enforce it against the other. Central R. Co. of N. J. v. U. S. Pipe Line Co., (Penn. 1923), 290 Fed. 983.

(a) In case of a transaction which is simply ultra vires neither party will be heard to allege its invalidity while retaining its fruits. Limitation of the contractural power of a corporation does not prevent it from making restitution of money or property obtained under an unauthorized contract. Manchester & Lawrence R. Co. v. Concord R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 319.

(b) If an agreement is legally void and unenforceable by reason of some statutory or common-law prohibition which does not involve any positive immorality, and there is no other reason of public policy why the courts should refuse to grant relief, a party who has received anything under it from the other party and has failed to perform on his part must account to the other for what he has received. Manchester & Lawrence R. Co. v. Concord R. Co., 3 I. R. 319.

(c) No right of action can spring out of an illegal contract; and this rule applies, not only when the contract is expressly illegal, but whenever it is opposed to public policy. Cleveland C. & C. & I. R. Co. v. Closser 3 I. C. R. 387.

(d) The rule that the question of the illegality of the contract for breach of which an action is brought is not raised when not alleged in the answer does not apply when from plaintiff's own testimony the contract appears to be illegal. Parks v. Jacob Dold Packing Co. (Buff. Super. Ct.), 4 I. C. R. 486.

(e) Where it appears that a complainant has invoked the aid of the law for the purpose of securing what he, with the acquiescence of the carrier, had previously obtained in apparent contravention of the law, such acquiescing carrier will not be held entitled to plead violations of the law by complainant in bar of a decision on the merits, nor will the individual interests of the complainant be taken into consideration; but the Commission will examine the evidence and make such report thereon as, under the provisions of the law, the rights of other shippers and the public generally may require. If, independently of any action or interest of complainants, the conduct of defendants with reference to the transportation which is the subject of the proceeding is shown by the evidence to be unlawful, it is the duty of the Commission to execute and enforce the statutory provisions applicable thereto. Page v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 525.

(f) Performance of an illegal contract on one side only does not make it an executed contract so that an action can be maintained for the consideration. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 578.

(g) Any question as to complying with special contract terms touching presentation of claim or making demand, or the time of so doing, does not arise where the default sued for is failure to start the message. A contract which one party abandons without excuse or justification cannot be enforced against the other. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Michelson, 5 I. C. R. 236.

(h) A railroad company which seeks to release itself from its agreement to deliver goods for a specified freight rate, on the ground that the contract is illegal because the rate specified is less than that fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, has the burden of proving that the contract was necessarily unlawful, and not merely that it might have been so. Southern Pacific Co. v. Redding & Son, 8 I. C. C. App. II.

(i) Contracts for carriage made by carriers within the scope of their general powers are not to be declared, in any collateral proceedings, null and void by reason of some alleged or supposed departure from the requirements of the Interstate Commerce Act with reference to the matters of fares and charges. Pond-Decker Lumber Co. v. Spencer 8 I. C. C. App. LXV.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(j) Where a contract with a railroad company is in contravention of the Act to Regulate Commerce by reason of granting the shipper rates lower than those lawfully published, defendant cannot be estopped from setting up such illegality as a defense to a suit at law for damages for breach thereof. Taenzer & Co. v. C. R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 191 Fed. 543, 551.

(k) The fact that one portion of a contract is illegal under the Interstate Commerce Act vitiates the whole contract and prevents its enforcement. Lewis, Leonhardt & Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., Fed. 321, 328.

(l) The courts will not enforce a contract opposed to public policy. Davis v. Southern Pac. Co., 235 Fed. 731.

(m) A decision of the United States Supreme Court is controlling on the District Court in determining whether a railroad's contract with hop growers to transport hops at a lesser rate than the road's published tariff is violative of the Interstate Commerce Act. Davis v. Southern Pac. Co., 235 Fed. 731.

(n) A contract by a carrier contrary to express provision of law prohibiting rebates, concessions, and discrimination, and opposed to public policy as declared by the supreme legislative authority of the country, cannot be enforced in any court. Davis v. Southern Pac. Co., 235 Fed. 731.

V. AS EVIDENCE OF REASONABLE RATES.

§7. In general.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) A contract between an express company and railroad companies over whose lines it operates providing that the former shall not charge less than a certain percentage over the railroad rate applying on the same commodity between the same points, cannot be considered as a controlling factor in passing upon the reasonableness of the express rates. The Commission will, of course, notice the railroad rate as affording a basis of comparison, but the law requires the fixing of just and reasonable charges and the authority of the Commission to prescribe a reasonable rate is not restricted by the terms of any agreement between the express company and the railroad company. Reynolds v. Southern Express Co., 13 I. C. C. 536, 539.

(b) The Commission can give no weight to fact that defendant's practice of absorbing connecting line charges to and from Commonwealth pier at Boston are subject of contract, except in so far as that fact may have evidential bearing upon rates, practices, and status of the carriers. National Dock & Storage Warehouse Co. v. B. & M. R. R., 38 I. C. C. 643, 647.

(c) Carrier and city, in consideration of grant of certain privileges by city to carrier, contracted for maintenance of a definite rate on freight moving interstate. Carrier afterwards established a higher rate in manner provided by the Act. HELD, Commission not authorized in testing the reasonableness of the increased rate, to apply considerations other than those which would be generally applicable in any other case. Cape Girardeau Commercial Club v. I. C. R. R., 51 I. C. C. 105, 106, 107.

(d) Fact that a city ordinance was passed and contractual relations were entered into thereunder many years ago can give that ordinance and those contractual relations no more validity as a bar to the Commission's jurisdiction than if they had been recently adopted and entered into. City of East Liverpool, Ohio v. S. E. L. & B. V. T. Ry., 51 I. C. C. 563, 569.

(a) A carrier may make special rates with individuals to enable the latter to make proposals to the Interior Department for transportation of Indian supplies, such transportation being for the United States. Re Indian Supplies, 1 I. C. R. 22.

(aa) The Commission should clearly see that duty requires an answer to the question, on ex parte application, whether special privileges by a railroad to manufacturers in a single line of trade, and not to manufacturers generally, is consistent with the law, before it does so. Re Iowa Barb Steel Wire Co. 1 I. C. R. 605.

(b) For a special service by a carrier, —such as the transportation of perishable freight,—requiring quick movement, prompt delivery at destination, special fitting up of cars, their withdrawal from other service, and their return empty on fast time, a higher rate than for the carriage of ordinary freight is reasonable and just, but should bear a just relation to the value of the service to the traffic, and is not wholly in the discretion of the carrier. Delaware State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry v. New York, P. & N. R. Co. (Com.) 3 I. C. R. 554.

(c) The higher rate for a special service should bear a just relation to the value of the service to the traffic, and is not wholly in the discretion of the carrier. While a carrier should be fully compensated, the public interests require that the traffic should not be rendered valueless to the producer, if the charges of the carrier have such an effect and can be reasonably reduced. Delaware State Grange v. N. Y. P. & N. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 554, 561.

(d) The violation, by giving special rates, of schedules of joint rates for through shipments from points in the United States to points in Canada which have been established and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and posted in the carriers' offices cannot be punished by the United States government so far as the vialotion was committed wholly or partly in Canada. United States v. Knight, 3 I. C. R. 801.

(e) Where a special service is required of the carrier,—such as rapid transit and speedy delivery in cases of perishable freight,—a higher rate than for the carriage of ordinary freight is warranted; and if a carrier charging a rate based on such special service fails to render it, to the damage of the shipper and without legal excuse, the remedy of the latter would seem to be by a proper proceeding in a court of law, and not by a complaint of excessive rates. Loud v. South Carolina R. Co. (Conn.) 4 I. C. R. 205.

(f) As a general proposition, where a railroad company is not restricted or inhibited by its charter or the law of the land, it is not unlawful for it to make an arrangement of rates for special purposes, on a sufficient consideration and for the legitimate increase of its business. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 4 I. C. R., 428.

(g) A contract to furnish single-deck cars for shipping hogs at the same schedule rate per hundred as for double-deck cars is invalid, although made by a railroad which is wholly within one State, if the shipment was destined for a point in another State, to be completed by carriers with which the initial carrier had established a through traffic arrangement. Houston & Texas Central R. R. Co. v. Dumas 8 I. C. C. App. IV.

(h) It is the duty of a carrier to provide special service, or to cease from charging higher rate therefor. American Fruit Union of Cincinnati v. C. N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. 12 I. C. C. 411.

(i) Carrier undertaking to provide special service in consideration of an unusually high rate, must do so or desist from charging the higher rate. American Fruit Union v. C. N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 411.

(j) Special rates with conditions possible to few shippers, disapproved. Paper Mills Co. v. Pa. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 438.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(k) If a consignor orders a car placed on his private track, and he there loads it with less-than-carload shipments, and then orders the carrier to transport the car to its local freight or transfer station for rehandling and forwarding of contents, the consignor has used the facilities of the carrier to dray his shipments. The carrier has rendered a service which is special in character and for which it would seem to be entitled to fair compensation, with due regard to the service rendered. The same character of service is rendered when a car is held at a local freight or transfer station and inbound less-than-carload shipments are loaded into it and it is then transported to an industry sidetrack. If a car is loaded with less-than-carload shipments and is transported between the sidetrack and transfer point outside the terminal district, on or off the line of the industry carrier, or if the car moves between a gateway and destination, the service at the terminal is not different from that rendered with respect to carload shipments moved from or to the same siding. The so-called trap or ferry car service involved is not a free service. Trap or Ferry Service Charges, 34 I. C. C. 516, 546.

(l) Special services in particular localities should be paid for by a special charge and the cost not distributed generally among all the rates upon a commodity; but the peculiar terminal costs incident to the delay of equipment carrying hay at the markets, while they differ somewhat in the several localities, appear in the great majority of places where hay is delivered, and may be said to be incident to the hay traffic as at present conducted. This loss of the use of the equipment resulting from the method of handling this traffic is an important factor to be considered in determining the reasonableness of a rate. 1915 Western Rate Advance Case, 35 I. C. C. 497, 630.

(m) The fact that a similar service was for a time performed to a limited extent and without extra charge furnishes no good reason why a proper charge may not be imposed when the nature or conditions of the shipment makes the service necessary. Hammond, Standish & Co. v. M. C. R. R. 42 I. C. C. 102, 104.

(n) Unloading, reconsigning, reshipping and similar services are strictly transportation functions; and the detention of a car for any such purpose bears not even a remote relation to the detention of a car by a shipper as a salesroom for its contents. The latter use of a carrier's equipment and property, while undoubtedly a commercial convenience to the shipper, lies entirely outside the service and duty a railroad owes the shipper as a common carrier and is in no sense a common carrier service. The Car Peddling Case, 45 I. C. C. 494, 499.

(o) Obviously service should be rendered as not to bring about discrimination between shippers. The only way to make it definite, certain, and equal in value to all shippers is to require that the cars be placed on hold tracks designated for the purpose and that notice of the location of these tracks be given to the consignees. Respondents can not fairly dispute the reasonableness of this requirement; it comprehends no more service than they claim to be performing at the present time, and it is the precise remedy recommended by the Western Demurrage and Storage Bureau. Reconsignment Case No. 3, 53 I. C. C. 455, 472.

(p) Services of a special character are not subject to the increases authorized under Increased Rates, 1920, 58 I. C. C., 220. National Box Co. v. M. P. R. R. Co., 61 I. C. C. 211, 213.

(q) Proposed cancellation of special newspaper rates on illustrated newspaper supplements shipped in baggage cars on passenger trains prior to publication; leaving in effect higher first-class freight or express rates, found not justified. Withdrawal of the present service and rates would necessitate resort to the express service as the only kind that would appear adequate, and the higher rates that would then be applicable are not to be sanctioned on this traffic. Rates on Illustrated Newspaper Supplements, 74 I. C. C. 336.

SPECIAL TRAINS

See Passenger Fares and Facilities §7¾.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Complainant attacked the charge of $1,260 collected by defendant for a special train from Yuma to Tucson, Arizona, alleging that it was unreasonable to the extent that it exceeded $880. The train was chartered on the morning of July 25, 1912, to expediate the arrival of a specialist summoned by complainant by telegraph from Los Angeles. The physician left Tucson with a through ticket over defendant's line to Los Angeles and without knowledge that a special train would be provided, the decision to use the same being reached while he was well on his way. The tariff charge for the special train was 125 fares. Complainant was allowed $7.60 for the unused portion of the ticket. The question is, whether the journey from Yuma to Tuscon was part of an interstate journey or an intrastate journey beyond the jurisdiction of the Commission. Unquestionably it was the intention of the physician to make the journey continuously from Los Angeles to Tucson on the regular train. The journey by special train from Yuma to Tucson was under a new contract subsequent to his own between defendant and complainant and without his knowledge or request. HELD, when the physician left the regular train and boarded the special train at Yuma, his contract with defendant ceased, and the charge imposed for the special train from Yuma to Tuscon is beyond the Commission's jurisdiction. CASES 1887-1908

(a) The O. R. & N. Company carries certain kinds of goods on its steamers forth and back between Portland and San Francisco at special and reduced rates; the O. & C. Railway, under the management of the petitioner, carries the same kind of goods forth and back between Portland and Ashland and way stations in Oregon, at special and reduced rates; the O. P. Railway Company carries the same kind of goods forth and back between certain points on the line of the O. & C. Road and San Francisco via its railway from Albany to Yaquina Bay and thence by steamer, at reduced rates and thereby competes with the O. & C. and the O. R. & N. for business between said points and San Francisco. The O. R. & N. and the receiver of the O. & C. act independently, although concurrently, in making these reduced rates; but no through bill of lading or freight receipt is given, nor is either interested in or liable for the carriage of the goods beyond its own line of transportation. HELD, that the O. & C. Road and the steamers of the O. R. & N. Company in the carriage of the goods in question are not "used under any common control, management or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipments" thereof, to and from San Francisco, within the intent and meaning of the Act, and that the carriage and handling of said goods so far as the receiver is concerned is performed wholly within the State, and therefore especially exempted by the terms of the Act from its operation; provided, the same are not directly shipped to or from a foreign country. Ex Parte Koehler, Receiver of Ore. & Cal. R. Co. 1 I. C. R. 28.

(b) Illinois Act regulating transportation of goods under one contract to points beyond the State is unconstitutional. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. People (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 31.

(ba) A statute of Illinois enacts that if any railroad company shall, within that State, charge or receive for transporting passengers or freight of the same class, the same or a greater sum for any distance than it does for a longer distance, it shall be liable to a penalty for unjust discrimination. The defendant in this case made such discrimination in regard to goods transported over the same road or roads from Peoria in Illinois and from Gilman in Illinois to New York; charging more for the same class of goods carried from Gilman than from Peoria, the former being eighty-six miles nearer to New York than the latter, this difference being in the length of the line within the State of Illinois. The U. S. Supreme Court follows the Supreme Court of Illinois in holding that the Statute of Illinois must be construed to include a transportation of goods under one contract and by one voyage from the interior of the State of Illinois to New York. That adopting such construction the Statute is void, as an interference with Interstate Commerce. Wabash, etc. R. Co. v. People, 1 I. C. R. 31.

(c) The negotiation of sales of goods which are in another State, for the purpose of introducing them into the State in which the negotiation is made, is interstate commerce. Such commerce is not subject to state taxation, even though there be no discrimination between it and domestic commerce. Robbins v. Taxing District of Shelby County 1 I. C. R., 45.

(d) A state statute which levies a tax upon the gross receipts of railroads for the carriage of freights and passengers into, out of, or through the State, is a tax upon commerce among the States, and therefore void. Fargo v. Stevens, 1 I. C. R. 51.

(e) While a State may tax the money actually within the State, after it has passed beyond the stage of compensation for carrying persons or property, as it may tax other money or property within its limits, a tax upon receipts for this class of carriage specifically is a tax upon the commerce out of which it arises; and, if that be interstate commerce, it is void under the Constitution. Fargo v. Stevens, 1 I. C. R. 51.

(f) The States can not be permitted, under the guise of a tax upon business transacted within their borders, to impose a burden upon commerce among the States, when the business so taxed is itself interstate commerce. Fargo v. Stevens, 1 I. C. R. 51.

(g) State law impairing right of removal to federal court, as condition of doing business, is void. Barron v. Burnside, (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 795.

(h) A corporation is a citizen of the State by which created, so far as its right to sue and be sued in the federal courts is concerned. Barron v. Burnside (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 295.

(i) Iowa Act of April 16, 1886, seeking to make the right of foreign corporations to transact business in that State dependent upon surrender of right to remove causes to federal courts, is invalid. Barron v. Burnside (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 295.

(j) A State can not regulate interstate commerce. Wabash etc. R. Co. v. People (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 31; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Pendleton (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 306.

(k) A State cannot constitutionally impose upon a steamship company, incorporated under its laws, a tax upon its gross receipts derived from the transportation of persons and property by sea, between different States, and to and from foreign countries. Phil. & Southern Mail S. S. Co. v. Penn., 1 I. C. R. 308.

(l) In absence of interference by Congress a State may carry on works of a local character, although they necessarily more or less affect interstate commerce. Ouachita etc. Packet Co. v. Aiken (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 379; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 382.

(m) The only state interference with the landing and receiving of passengers and freight which is permissible is confined to such measures as will prevent confusion among the vessels and collision between them, insure their safety and convenience, and facilitate the discharge or receipt of their passengers and freight. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Commonwealth of Pa., 1 I. C. R. 382.

(n) State Legislature may prescribe conditions upon which foreign corporation may do business, unless engaged in interstate commerce. List v. Pennsylvania (Pa. Sup. Ct.,) 1 I. C. R. 784; Indiana v. Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co. (Sup. Ct. Ind.) 1 I. C. R. 798; Stockton v. Baltimore etc. R. Co. (U. S. C. Ct. N. J.) 1 I. C. R. 411. Cited in Barron v. Burnside (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 295.

(o) Congress can confer upon a state corporation powers not contained in its original charter. Stockton v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co. (U. S. C. Ct. N. J.) 1 I. C. R. 411.

(p) In the pursuit of business authorized by the Government of the United States, and under its protection, corporations of other States cannot be prohibited or obstructed by any State. Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. R. Co., 1. I. C. R. 411.

(q) Arkansas Act, 1885, February 27, prohibiting greater charge by a carrier for transportation of freight than specified in bill of lading, and imposing a penalty for refusal to deliver on payment or tender of charges as shown in such bill, is not special legislation, nor a regulation of interstate commerce, but within police power of State. Little Rock & F. S. R. Co. v. Hanniford (Sup. Ct. Ark.) 1 I. C. R. 580.

(r) The Arkansas Act of February 27, 1885, prohibiting any railroad company in the State from charging a greater sum for the transportation of freight than is specified in the bill of lading, and imposing a penalty for refusal to deliver freight on payment or tender of the charges due as shown by the bill of lading, is general and uniform in its operation upon all within the class to which it applies, and therefore is not within the constitutional prohibition against special legislation. Little Rock & Fort Smith R. Co. v. Hanniford, 1 I. C. R. 580.

(s) Arkansas Act, 1885, February 27, prohibiting greater charge than specified in bill of lading, and imposing a penalty for refusal to deliver on payment or tender of charges as shown in such bill, is within police power of State. Little Rock & F. S. R. Co. v. Hanniford (Sup. Ct. Ark.) 1 I. C. R. 580.

(t) Said Act is within the police power of the State and is not an attempt to regulate interstate commerce, within the meaning of the clause of the Federal Constitution vesting in Congress exclusive power to regulate commerce among the States. Little Rock & Fort Smith R. Co. v. Hanniford, 1 I. C. R. 580.

(u) Louisiana Constitution, §236, providing that a foreign corporation shall have a place of business and an agent upon whom service may be made within the State, is void as a restriction on navigation. New Orleans & M. Packet Co. v. James (U. S. C. C. La.) 1 I. C. R. 599.

(v) The provision of article 236 of the Louisiana Constitution, which provides that no foreign corporation shall do business in that State without having one or more places of business, and an authorized agent or agents in the State upon whom process may be served, is null and void, as being an attempt on the part of the State to interpose a restriction on navigation, and therefore in conflict with the Act of Congress approved February 18, 1793 (1 Stat. at L. 305). N.

Orleans & Memphis Packet Co. v. James, 1. I. C. R. 599.

(w) State statute which conflicts with common law exercise of powers of Congress over commerce must give way to supremacy of national authority. Smith v. State of Alabama (U. S. Sup. Ct.), I. C. R. 804.

(wa) Short road used as means of conducting interstate traffic in coal by companies owning connecting interstate roads is subject to Act to Regulate Commerce. Hech v. E. Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co., 1 I. C. R. 775.

(x) The Statute of Alabama requiringlocomotive engineers to be examined and licensed is not a regulation of interstate commerce, and does not therefore contravene the Constitution of the United States, and is valid. Smith v. State of Alabama, 1 I. C. R. 804.

(y) Such statute is properly an Act of legislation, within the power reserved to the State to regulate the relative rights and duties of persons within its territory, intended to secure for public safety of person and property. Smith v. State ofAlabama, 1 I. C. R. 804.

(z) Such statute, so far as it affects transactions of commerce among the States, does so indirectly, incidentally and remotely, and not so as to burden or impede them; and in the particulars in which it touches those transactions at all it is not in conflict with any enactment of Congress on the subject, nor contrary to any intention of Congress to be presumed from its silence. Smith v. State of Alabama, 1 I. C. R. 804.

(aa) Any legislation of a State, although in pursuance of an acknowledged power reserved to it, which conflicts with the actual exercise of the power of Congress over the subject of commerce, must give way before the supremacy of the national authority. Smith v. State of Alabama, 1 I. C. R. 804.

(bb) The fee to be paid by an applicant for his examination is not a provision for raising revenue, but is only an equivalent for the service rendered, and is not a tax or burden upon transportation. Smith v. State of Alabama 1 I. C. R. 804.

(cc) State may exercise its police power, even when it incidentally operates upon commerce. Smith v. State of Alabama (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 806.

(dd) State quarantine laws do not derive validity from their adoption by Congress. Smith v. State of Alabama (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 1 I. C. R. 807.

(ee) State laws prohibiting manufacture of intoxicating liquors are valid police regulations. Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 825

(ff) State possesses power to adopt police regulations, Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. So. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 825.

(gg) State cannot under cover of exerting its police powers substantially prohibit or burden interstate commerce. Cited in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 832.

(hh) Prohibiting driving or conveying of certain cattle into State between certain days in each year is void as regulation of commerce, and is not legitimate exercise of police power. Cited in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 832.

(ii) Under police power, State may prohibit spread of crime or pauperism or disturbance of the peace; it may exclude from its limits convicts, paupers, idiots and lunatics, as well as persons afflicted with contagious diseases. Cited in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 832.

(jj) State law requiring master of vessel engaged in foreign commerce to pay certain sum to state officer on account of each passenger brought from a foreign country is void. Cited in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 836.

(kk) State statute requiring locomotive engineers to be licensed is not regulation of interstate commerce. Cited in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 840. S. P. in Smith v. Alabama (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. C. 804.

(ll) The Alabama Act of Jan. 15, 1887 (Ala. Acts 1886-1887, p. 36, §5, subd. 10), which exacts a license fee from itinerant dealers in fruit trees, etc., is an attempted regulation of commerce between the States, and hence in conflict with the Federal Constitution, and therefore void. State v. Agee (Ala.) 2 I. C. R. 21.

(mm) The New Jersey Act of March 22, 1886 (P. L. 1886, p. 107,) rendering penal the sale of oleomargarine colored with annotto, is valid as applied to a sale made in that State by the agent of the manufacturer in Indiana, although the package sold here was that which had been sent by the manufacturer from Indiana to that State for sale. State, Waterbury, v. Newton (N. J.) 2 I. C. R. 63. But see the recent case of Leisy v. Hardin (U. S. Ct.) 3 Interstate Com. Rep. 2 I. C. R. 36.

(nn) Laws passed by the individual States, under the general authority over internal concerns, may incidentally affect foreign and interstate commerce, without conflicting with the Constitution of the United States, provided they do not discriminate against such commerce and are not inconsistent with the Acts of Congress. State, Waterbury v. Newton, 2 I. C. R. 63.

(oo) Complainant attacked rates on fruit from Flemington, N. J., to New York as unreasonable. The traffic originates in New Jersey, and is destined to New York; but the delivery by the defendants to the consignees is made at Jersey City, N. J., and the rates of defendants are made not to New York but to Jersey City. HELD, traffic is not interstate and the Commission has no jurisdiction, complaint dismissed. New Jersey Fruit Exchange v. C. R. R. Co. of N. J., 2 I. C. C. 84.

(pp) The traffic originates in the State of New Jersey, and is destined to the City of New York; but the delivery by the defendants to the consignees is made at Jersey City in New Jersey, and the rates of defendants are made not to New York but to Jersey City. Under these facts the traffic, so far as defendants' conduct of it is concerned is not interstate, and the Commission has no jurisdiction over their rates. New Jersey Fruit Exchange v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 2 I. C. R. 84.

(qq) State legislation as to qualifications, duties, and liabilities of employes on railway trains engaged in interstate commerce, to provide against accidents on trains while within the State, is valid in the absence of legislation on that subject by Congress, Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. Alabama (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 238.

(rr) The statute of a State requiring owners of vehicles using the streets of a city to pay an annual license, and providing that the license moneys be placed to the credit of the street-repairing fund of the public treasury of said city, is not repugnant to U. S. Const. art. 1, §8, cl. 3 (the Interstate Commerce Clause), when enforced upon owners who are nonresidents of the State and not engaged in any business in the State, for vehicles used by them upon such streets in interstate transportation and in prosecution of interstate commerce. Such license fees being intended by the statute for the repair of the streets, their enforced payment must be regarded as compensation for the advantages and facilities afforded to such transportation; and the requirement of license is not a restraint or other form of regulation of interstate commerce. Bogart v. State (Ohio C. P.) 2 I. C. R. 297.

(ss) Where the state board of railroad commissioners publish, for the length of time required by law, a notice that a schedule of rates will go into effect on a certain day, and the secretary of the commission, on receipt of a telegram from certain railroads asking an extension of time, grants the extension and publishes the following week notice of such change, the commission, on the application of the railroads to restrain the further publication of the notice, cannot urge that the publication is complete, and that the extension of time was unauthorized. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey (C. C. S. D. Iowa). 2 I. C. R. 325.

(tt) Giving railroad commissioners power to fix rates is not an unlawful delegation of legislative power. Chicago & M. W. R. Co. v. Dey (C. C. S. D. Iowa). 2 I. C. R. 325.

(uu) The authority conferred upon the railroad commissioners by the Iowa Act of April 5, 1888 (Laws 22d Gen. Assem. chap. 28), to make and put in effect a schedule of rates for railroad transportation within the State, is not an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co. v. Dey, 2 I. C. R. 325.

(vv) The provision of said Act making the commissioners' schedule prima facie evidence that the rates fixed thereby are reasonable, is not an infringment of the constitutional guarantees of the right to trial by jury and against deprivation of property without due process of law. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co. v. Dey, 2 I. C. R. 325.

(ww) State legislation which deprives the owners of a railroad line within the State of all compensation from their business, cannot be upheld on the grounds that the company is a foreign corporation; that it is permitted simply as an act of grace to do business in the State; and that it can abandon its business therein if found unremunerative. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co. v. Dey, 2 I. C. R. 325.

(xx) Nor can such legislation be upheld on the ground that the railroad affected thereby is an interstate road, and that its deficiency of revenue may be made up by receipts from interstate commerce or by traffic in other States; or on the ground that a future increase of business may render the prescribed rates remunerative. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co. v. Dey, 2 I. C. R. 325.

(yy) The State of Texas has the right to prohibit and interfere with a contract in restraint of competition, some of the parties to which are corporations created by the State, although it regulates charges upon freight carried to and fro between Texas and other States. This agreement, being illegal as to some, is illegal as to all. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State (Tex.) 2 I. C. R. 335.

(zz) Where the probable effect of putting in force a schedule of rates prepared by the state board of railroad commissioners, under Iowa Act of April 5, 1888, would be to destroy all dividends from the operation of the roads, and the Act provides for treble damages to any shipper injured by an overcharge, the preliminary injunction should be granted. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., v. Dey. (C. C. D. Iowa), 2 I. C. R. 325.

(3a) Iowa Code, §4059, making the owner of Texas cattle which have not been wintered north liable for any damages from allowing them to run at large and to spread Texas fever, does not conflict with the paramount authority of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. Kimmish v. Ball (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 407.

(3b) The South Carolina Railroad Commission has no jurisdiction of a complaint for charges unlawfully made by a railroad partly in North Carolina for transportation which was partly in the latter State, although it was for part of the original transportation by connecting lines between points both in South Carolina, such transportation being interstate commerce. Sternberger v. Cape Fear & Y. V. R. Co. (S. C.) 2 I. C. R. 426.

(3c) The Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota has no authority to prescribe rates for transportation by common carriers in another State. It cannot fix the rates for carriage between two points within Minnesota, over a route extending across a neighboring State. Such power is vested exclusively in Congress. State v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (Minn.) 2 I. C. R. 519.

(3d) Where a tariff of freight and passenger rates has been established by the railroad commissioners and the railroad company and the commissioners differ as to whether such rates, considered as a whole, will prove remunerative to the company, and there is room for a difference of intelligent opinion on the question, the courts cannot interfere or substitute their judgment for that of the commissioners; but the tariffs as fixed by the commissioners must, in so far as the courts are concerned, be left to the test of experiment. Pensacola & Atlantic R. Co. v. State of Florida, 2 I. C. R. 522.

(3f) The enforcement of a tariff of freight and passenger rates which will not pay the expenses of operating a railroad,—HELD, upon the pleadings, to show an abuse of the discretion given to railroad commissioners by the statute authorizing them to prescribe reasonable and just rates of freight and passenger transportation, and to amount to a taking of the railroad company's property without just compensation. Pensacola & Atlantic R. Co. v. State of Florida, 2 I. C. R. 522.

(3g) State legislation compelling electric wires in the streets of a city to be placed under the surface of the streets, although such streets, being letter carrier routes, are all post roads, is an exercise of police power, and is not an unlawful attempt to regulate commerce or an invasion of the rights of a telegraph company as a business agency of the general government under the Act of Congress of July 24, 1866 (U. S. Rev. Stat. title 65), to operate its lines on "any post road of the United States." Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Mayor of New York, 2 I. C. R. 533.

(3h) A state statute prohibiting the sale of dressed meats within the State, unless the animals have been inspected by a state officer within twenty-four hours before slaughter, is unconstitutional as an invasion by the State of the domain of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, and as a discrimination against the citizens of other States. Swift v. Sutphen (C. C. N. D. Ill.) 2 I. C. R. 656.

(3i) The Mississippi Statute of March 2, 1888, as settled by the Supreme Court of that State, applies solely to commerce within the State; and this court must accept as conclusive such construction of the Statute of the State by its highest court. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. State of Mississippi, 2 I. C. R. 801.

(3j) There is a commerce wholly within the State, which is not subject to the constitutional provision, and a distinction between commerce among States and between the citizens of a single State, conducted within its limits. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 801.

(3k) A person who has received the benefit of a special rate which unlawfully discriminates in his favor cannot complain because, for the return shipment, he is charged the same as the general public. Elvey v. Illinois C. R. Co. (Com.) 2 I. C. R. 804.

(3l) The proviso in the first section that the provisions of the act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers or property, as to the receiving, delivery, storage, or handling of property, wholly within one state, and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any state or territory as aforesaid, that is, by continuous carriage or shipment, only excludes from regulation the purely internal commerce of a state, that which is confined within its limits, which originates and ends in the same state. Mattingly v. Pennsylvania Company, 2 I. C. C. 806, 812.

(3m) A State has no power to interfere by seizure or any other action, to prevent the importation and sale of goods by a foreign or nonresident importer. Leisy v. Hardin (U. S. Sup Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 36.

(3n) A state statute imposing a charge of a cent a pound for inspection upon fresh meats intended for sale at places 100 miles and more from the place of slaughter is unconstitutional, because it imposes an unreasonable and unnecessary burden upon an important article of trade between the States. Re Rebman 3 I. C. R. 126.

(3na) A license tax assessed, under the Pennsylvania Act of June 7, 1879 (P. L. 112, 120), by the auditor general of that State, against a railroad company which is a corporation of Virginia, for keeping an office in Philadelphia for the use of its officers, stockholders, agents, and employes, is unconstitutional as a tax upon interstate commerce, when the company is engaged in interstate commerce. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 178.

(3o) A state statute prohibiting the sale of dressed meats within the State unless the animals have been inspected by a state officer within twenty-four hours before slaughter, is unconstitutional as an invasion by the State of the domain of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, and as a discrimination against the citizens of other States. Minnesota v. Barber (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 185.

(3p) The charter of the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company, §9, giving power to the directors of that company to make rules as to rates of toll, does not constitute an irrepealable contract with that company that it shall have the right for all future time to prescribe its rates of toll, free from all control by the Legislature of the State. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minnesota R. & W. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 209.

(3q) A railroad corporation takes its charter containing a provision as to rates, subject to the general law of the State and to such changes as may be made in such general law, and subject to future constitutional provisions and future general legislation, in the absence of any prior contract with it exempting it from liability to such future general legislation. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minnesota R. & W. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 209.

(3r) Exemption from future general legislation, either by a constitutional provision or by an Act of the Legislature, does not exist unless it is given expressly, or unless it follows by an implication equally clear with express words. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minnesota R. & W. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 209.

(3s) The power to regulate a carrier's rates is not a power to destroy, and limitation is not the equivalent of confiscation. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minnesota R. & W. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 209.

(3t) The grant of power by a charter to the directors of a railroad company, to make needful rules and regulations touching the rates of toll and the manner of collecting the same, does not deprive the State of its general authority itself to regulate the rates of toll to be collected by the company. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minnesota R. & W. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 209.

(3u) Where no hearing is provided for, no summons or notice to a carrier, before a railroad commission has found what it is to find and declared what it is to declare as to rates to be charged, and no opportunity provided for the company to introduce witnesses before the commission, there is not the semblance of due process of law. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minnesota R. & W. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 209.

(3v) A law which allows a railroad commission to establish rates for railroads which are final, without issue made or inquiry had as to their reasonableness, and forbids the courts to stay the hands of the commission if the rates established by it are unreasonable and unequal, conflicts with the Constitution of the United States, because it deprives a company of its rights to a judicial investigation by due process of law, and substitutes therefor, as an absolute finality, the action of a railroad commission, which is not clothed with judicial functions and does not possess the machinery of a court of justice. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minnesota R. & W. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 209.

(3x) The provision in a statute that a railroad company organized thereunder may charge for transportation such reasonable rates as may from time to time be fixed by the corporation or prescribed by law, and a provision that no company shall demand an unreasonable price, do not constitute such a contract with the corporation as to the fixing of rates that the Legislature is deprived of power to regulate those charges. Minneapolis E. R. Co. v. Minnesota (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 224.

(3y) Even if a statute imposing a license fee for the privilege of buying certain produce in a particular county to be shipped out of it may be void as an interference with interstate commerce so far as it applies to produce purchased to be shipped out of the State, it is valid in its application to produce intended for shipment to places within the State. Rothermel v. Meyerle (Pa.) 3 I. C. R. 315.

(3z) A statute requiring the payment of a license fee for the privilege of purchasing certain kinds of produce in a certain county, to be shipped out of it, which fee is greater in the case of nonresidents of the county than of residents, is not obnoxious to U. S. Const. art. 4, §2, entitling citizens of each State to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several States. Rothermel v. Meyerle (Pa.) 3 I. C. R. 315.

(4a) The police power of the State cannot be exercised over the interstate transportation of subjects of commerce. Com. v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Lynchburg Corp. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 398.

(4b) A state statute imposing a charge of a cent a pound for inspection upon fresh meat intended for sale at places 100 miles and more from the place of slaughter is unconstitutional because it imposes an unreasonable and unnecessary burden upon an important article of trade between the States. Re Rebman (C. C. E. D. Va.) 3 I. C. R. 485.

(4ba) A state inspection law, so called, which is in fact a law taxing articles of interstate commerce for the benefit of the state treasury, is unconstitutional. Re Rebman (C. C. E. D. Va.) 126, Aff'd in U. S. Sup. Ct., 3 I. C. R. 485.

(4c) The sale of oleomargarine in original packages as imported from another State cannot be prohibited or interfered with by state statute. Re Gooch (C. C. D. Minn.) 3 I. C. R. 530.

(4d) A license tax cannot be upheld as an inspection law in respect to goods brought from another State, when the amount of the tax is in excess of that required for the purpose of inspection, and the proceeds are applied to other uses. American Fertilizing Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agriculture (C. C. E. D. N. C.) 3 I. C. R. 532.

(4e) A state statute prohibiting game birds to be killed for the purpose of conveying them out of the State is not an unlawful interference with interstate commerce. State of Conn. v. Geer, 3 I. C. R., 732.

(4f) One soliciting orders for goods from house to house cannot refuse to comply with the terms of a police ordinance regulating such business, which applies to all alike, on the ground that he is engaged in interstate commerce, because he is working for a person domiciled in another State and simply exhibits samples and takes orders which are filled by another agent or by express. City of Titusville v. Brennan, 3 I. C. R. 735.

(4g) Persons engaged in showing samples of goods manufactured by their principal at his residence in another State, and in taking orders for such goods, which are transmitted to the principal to be filled, cannot be compelled to pay a license tax by the State in which they are operating whether they are within its statutory definition of peddlers or not. Re Spain 3 I. C. R. 738.

(4h) Filling orders taken from house to house by an agent in another State by sending the articles in bulk to the agent to be distributed by him does not subject the latter to the payment of a license tax as a peddler when he breaks the bulk and begins the distribution. Re Spain 3 I. C. R. 738.

(4i) The Indiana statute of 1889 entitled "An Act for the Protection of the Public Health by the Promoting of the Growth and Sale of Healthy Cattle and Sheep, Making it a Misdemeanor to Sell the Same Without Inspection before Slaughter within This State, and to Authorize Cities to Appoint Inspectors,"—is in violation of the Constitution of the United States. State v. Klein (Ind..), 3 I. C. R., 573.

(4k) There is no uncertainty in a statute prescribing the penalty for unreasonable railroad charges and declaring that rates fixed by railroad commissioners as the maximum shall be prima facie reasonable, as the State is precluded from denying that the commissioners' rates are reasonable. Burlington, Cedar Rapids & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 3 I. C. R. 584.

(4j) A city ordinance prohibiting any railroad company from allowing the sale of fruit, vegetables, or perishable freight arriving in the city over its lines from cars on the tracks, from any platform, shed, or building at the depot on the grounds of the company, is, where the merchandise affected largely comes from other states, void as an interference with interstate commerce, if not based on considerations of public health or intended to prevent the crowding and obstruction of streets and public places, but solely to hinder competition between non-resident shippers and resident licensed dealers in the same line. Spellman v. New Orleans (C. C. E. D. La.), 3 I. C. R. 575.

(4l) The provision of a statute, that rates fixed by railroad commissioners shall be regarded as prima facie reasonable, is within the power of the State as to prescribing rules of evidence in all proceedings under the laws of the State. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey (Iowa), 3 I. C. R. 584.

(4m) A statute requiring freight in carload lots to be transferred without unloading unless the unloading is done without charge, and that smaller quantities shall be transferred into the cars of the connecting carrier at cost, which shall be made a part of the joint rate, does not interfere with the constitutional guaranties for the protection of the rights and properties of the carriers. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey (Iowa), 3 I. C. R., 584.

(4n) Special proceedings applicable to specified subject matter, and conformable to the rules requiring notice and the acquisition of jurisdiction, and which affect all persons alike whose property or rights come within the lawful scope of the proceedings, are prosecuted with "due process of law." Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey (Iowa), 3 I. C. R. 584.

(4o) A statute giving railroad commissioners authority to fix joint rates for a railroad makes the rules thus fixed only prima facie evidence, although not expressly limiting them to that effect, where the only penalties are for charging unjust and unreasonable rates, and a former statute, which did not extend to joint rates and of which this was an amendment, expressly limited the effect of the commissioners' order as to rates to prima facie evidence. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey (Iowa), 3 I. C. R. 584.

(4p) Penalties imposed upon railroad corporations for violation of statutes are not excessive if no greater than necessary to enforce obedience to the statute, although they might appear excessive if imposed upon individuals. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey (Iowa), 3 I. C. R. 584.

(4q) A contract is invalidated by the subsequent enactment of police regulations which render its performance illegal as to one of the parties. Jamieson v. Indiana Natural Gas Co. (Ind.), 3 I. C. R. 613.

(4r) Woodcock, ruffled grouse, or quail, need not have been killed for the purpose of conveying them out of the State in order to make it an offense, under Conn. Gen. Stat. § 2546, to have such birds in possession with intent to procure their transportation out of the State. State v. Geer (Conn.), 3 I. C. R. 732.

(4s) The New York Act of 1888, as to elevators, is constitutional, as an exercise of the police power of the state; it is not a regulation of interstate commerce, and does not deprive the elevator owners of the equal protection of the laws. Budd v. State of New York, 4 I. C. R. 45.

(4t) The Legislature can fix a maximum beyond which any charge would be unreasonable, for the use of property in which the public has an interest, but cannot compel the doing of services without reward. Budd v. State of New York, 4 I. C. R. 45.

(4uv) Having the absolute power of excluding the foreign corporation, a state may impose such conditions upon permitting the corporation to do business within its limits as it may judge expedient,—such as the payment of a specific license tax, or a sum proportioned to the amount of its capital. Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York (U. S. Sup Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 57.

(4w) A foreign corporation cannot claim a right to do business in another state, except subject to the conditions imposed by its laws. Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 4 I. C. R. 57.

(4x) The granting of the rights and privileges which constitute the franchises of a corporation may be accompanied with any such conditions as the legislature may deem most suitable to the public interest and policy. Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 4 I. C. R. 57.

(4y) A corporation being the mere creature of the Legislature, its rights, privileges, and powers are dependent solely upon the terms of its charter. Horn Silver Mining Co. v. State of New York, 4 I. C. R. 57.

(4z) A statute prohibiting the shipment out of the state of oysters taken in the waters of the state while they are in shells, and also prohibiting the taking of such oysters by any person who is not a resident of the state, is not unconstitutional as a regulation of interstate commerce. State v. Harrub (Ala.), 4 I. C. R. 99.

(5a) The enforcing of an order of railroad commissioners requiring a railroad company to conform to their schedule of rates is a matter of public right for which an action may be maintained in the name of the state. Campbell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa), 4 I. C. R., 203.

(5b) The details of practice and pleading may be supplied by a railroad commission which is constituted a court of record, under the inherent power of every court of record to make such rules not inconsistent with the law as is necessary to the exercise of the powers conferred upon it. Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 4 I. C. R. 294.

(5c) Authority is given to the railroad commission to hear and determine complaints of unjust discriminations and preferences, under the North Carolina Railroad Commission Act, which expressly provides that if a railroad company is guilty of a violation of the rules of the commission, and after due notice of such violation does not make full recompense for the wrong or injury done, it shall incur a penalty, and also constitutes such commission a court of record. Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 4 I. C. R. 294.

(5d) Investing a railroad commission with authority to make just and reasonable rules and regulations to prevent excessive charges and unjust discriminations and preferences by carriers, the reasonableness and legality of which is reviewable by the courts, is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative powers. Atlantic Express Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 294.

(5e) A statute making it unlawful for any common carrier to give undue or unreasonable preference to any person, company, firm, corporation or locality does not require equal facilities to be given to express companies for carrying on business over a railroad unless it holds itself out as a common carrier of such companies. Atlantic Express Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 294.

(5f) The business of insurance, as ordinarily conducted in this state by insurance companies organized under the legislation of other states, is not interstate commerce. William C. Phipps, State of Kansas, 4 I. C. R., 299.

(5g) Foreign insurance companies doing business in this state, that combine to control and increase the rates of insurance on property within a city in this state, violate the provision of chapter 257 of the Laws of 1889, being "An Act to Declare Unlawful Trusts and Combinations in Restraint of Trade and Products, and to Provide Penalties therefor;" and their local agents who attempt to, and do, enforce such combined rates, are subject to prosecution under the provisions of said act. William C. Phipps State of Kansas, 4 I. C. R. 299.

(5h) The provision of §4578 of the code making it a misdemeanor to run a freight train upon any railroad in this state on the Sabbath day is a regulation of internal police, and not a regulation of commerce. It is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, even as to freight trains passing through the state from and to adjacent states, and laden exclusively with goods and freight received on board before the trains entered this state, and consigned to points beyond its limits. Hennington v. State of Georgia, 4 I. C. R. 413.

(5i) The act of the general assembly of the state of Arkansas approved February 27, 1885, prohibiting the collection of freight in excess of that specified in the bill of lading, was not intended to give validity to stipulations in bills of lading which are the result of fraud or mistake. Baird v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 422.

(5j) An original package, trade in which is protected by the Federal Constitution, is such form and size of package as is used by producers or shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience in handling and security in transportation of merchandise between dealers in the ordinary course of actual commerce. Com. v. Schollenberger (Pa.), 4 I. C. R. 488.

(5k) The sale of a package of goods, entire and unbroken as imported from another state, will be protected as interstate commerce only when the form and size of the package is that usually adopted in the trade for purpose of transportation, and not when adopted with a view to unlawful interstate retail trade. Com. & Schollenberger (Pa.), 4 I. C. R. 488.

(5l) Showing that a package of material to be used as food was made, stamped, and branded in another state, is not sufficient to show that it is an original package, trade in which is protected by the Federal Constitution, without showing further that it was in the form usually adopted in the trade for purposes of transportation. Com. v. Schollenberger (Pa.), 4 I. C. R. 488.

(5m) The fixing and enforcement by a railroad commission of unjust and unreasonable rates for transportation by railroad companies is an unconstitutional denial of the equal protection of the laws. Reagan v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 4 I. C. R. 560.

(5n) A tariff of railroad rates fixed by a commission, which will so diminish the earnings of a road that they will not be able to pay half the interest on its bonded debt above the operating expenses, is unjust and unreasonable, where, without waste or mismanagement in construction or operation, the road has cost far more than the amount of stock and bonds outstanding, which represent money expended in its construction, and the rates have been voluntarily decreased by the company during ten years more than 50 per cent, while under these rates the stock representing two fifths of the value of the road has never received a dividend, and for the last three years the earnings above operating expenses have been insufficient to pay the interest on the bonded debt. Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 4. I. C. R. 560.

(5o) A schedule of rates made by railroad commissioners, being challenged as a whole, the court must either condemn or sustain it as a whole and cannot rearrange it or prepare a new schedule. Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 4 I. C. R. 560.

(5p) The Texas & Pacific Railway Company is, as to business done wholly within the state, subject to the control of the state in all matters of taxation, rates, and other police regulations. Reagan v. Merchantile Trust Co., 4 I. C. R. 575.

(5q) A state law prohibiting the exaction by carriers of unreasonable rates is as applied to a contract for shipment from one state to another, an interference with interstate commerce, and cannot be so applied. Swift v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (C. C. N. D. Ill.), 4 I. C. R. 633.

(5r) A contract for interstate shipment does not come within a state law regulating rates, because made in that state, so that such law will introduce a new term into the contract, but its utmost effect would be to forbid a contract for an unreasonable rate and make the contract unlawful, leaving the transaction open to adjustment under the laws of the United States. Swift v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (C. C. N. D. Ill.), 4 I. C. R. 633.

(5s) The police power cannot be set up to control the inhibitions of the Federal Constitution, or the powers of the United States government created thereby. Brennan v. City of Titusville, 4 I. C. R. 658.

(5t) Whatever may be the reason given to justify, or the power invoked to sustain the act of the state, if that act is one which intrenches directly upon that which is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the national government, it cannot be sustained. Brennan v. City of Titusville, 4 I. C. R. 658.

(5uv) Nothing which is a direct burden upon interstate commerce can be imposed by the state without the assent of Congress. Brennan v. City of Titusville, 4 I. C. R. 658.

(5y) The exaction of a charge by a state for the filing of articles of consolidation of several railroad companies forming a connecting line, only one of which is a corporation of the state as a condition imposed by the state upon the taking of corporate being or the exercise of corporate franchises, constitutes no tax upon interstate commerce, or the right to carry on the same, or the instruments thereof, and its enforcement involves no attempt on the part of the state to extend its taxing power beyond its territorial limits. Ashley v. Ryan, 4 I. C. R. 664.

(5z) The law of Ohio requiring a corporation to pay the secretary of state for filing articles of agreements of consolidation of corporations a percentage on the capital stock of the new consolidated corporation created by such articles, is valid and constitutional when applied to the consolidation of foreign corporations with a domestic corporation of the state forming a continuous line of railroad through several states. Ashley V. Ryan, 4 I. C. R. 664.

(6a) The law of North Dakota, of March 7, 1891, regulating grain warehouses and the weighing and handling of grain, etc., is constitutional. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113 (24: 77) and Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517 (36: 247) followed. Brass v. State of North Dakota, 4 I. C. R. 670.

(6b) The North Dakota law of March 7, 1891, is not unconstitutional, because it is applicable to the entire state, which is agricultural and is not restricted to large cities. Brass v. State of North Dakota, 4 I. C. R. 670.

(6c) One who enters upon the business of elevating and storing the grain of other persons for profit in North Dakota, becomes subject to the statutory regulations, although he also elevates and stores his own grain in the same warehouse. Brass v. State of North Dakota, 4 I. C. R. 670.

(6d) The legislature of North Dakota, in regulating by a general law the business and charges of public warehousemen engaged in elevating and storing grain for profit, does not deny to the plaintiff in error the equal protection of the laws nor deprive him of his property without due process of law, and such statutory regulations do not amount to a regulation of commerce between the states. Brass v. State of North Dakota, 4 I. C. R. 670.

(6e) The power of railroad commissioners to make a schedule of reasonable maximum rates does not impair the obligation of the contract of a railroad company, under a statute which authorizes its board of directors to establish rates of toll from time to time, but also provides that the company's by-laws shall not be repugnant to the constitution and laws of the state. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones (Ill.), 4 I. C. R. 683.

(6f) A statute changing a rule of evidence is applicable to a pending action. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 4 I. C. R. 683.

(6g) A schedule of rates cannot be excluded from evidence under the Illinois statutes when accompanied by a regular certificate of the commissioners as to its publication on the ground that it never took effect because never published as required by statute, since the statutes make the schedule and accompanying certificate prima facie evidence that the schedule offered is a schedule of the commissioners. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 4 I. C. R. 683.

(6h) Only transportation within the state, and that which is not a part of any continuous transportation without the state, is within the provisions of sections 1, 7, 8, and 11 of the Act of May 2, 1873, and these do not therefore affect interstate commerce. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 4 I. C. R. 683.

(6j) Making a schedule compiled by commissioners prima facie evidence that the rates therein fixed are reasonable maximum rates of charges for railroad carriage does not infringe upon the right of trial by jury. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 4 I. C. R. 683.

(6k) There is no unconstitutional delegation of power to railroad commissioners by a statute authorizing them to fix reasonable maximum rates of charges for freight and passenger traffic, where their schedule is not final but is made merely prima facie evidence of the reasonableness of the rates established. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 4 I. C. R. 683.

(6l) A statute prohibiting more than fair and reasonable rates by a railroad corporation, being merely declaratory of a common law rule, although penal, does not deprive the company of its property without due process of law, because the statute does not fix any limit of the rates —especially where a provision is made in the same statute for the fixing of rates by commissioners, or as a delegation of the police power of the state to grant licenses to engage in business. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 4 I. C. R. 683.

(6m) Laws 1893, chap. 66, entitled "An act to regulate the sale and redemption of transportation tickets of common carriers and to provide punishment for the violation of the same," is not unconstitutional, either as "class legislation" granting special privileges to carriers. State v. Corbett, 4 I. C. R. 694.

(6ma) The Minnesota statute concerning the redemption of unused railroad tickets, is not void, (at least as to tickets purchased after the passage of the act) as depriving a citizen of his property "without due process of law." State v. Corbett, 4 I. C. R. 694.

(6n) A license fee of $200 for doing express business in a city of 15,000 inhabitants is not shown to be prohibitory or destructive of the business of express companies, even if it be that any judicial action could be based on such a showing. Osborn v. State (Fla.), 4 I. C. R. 731.

(6o) Foreign corporations selling through itinerant agents and delivering goods manufactured outside of the state are not, in view of the commerce clause of the United States Constitution, affected by state statutes requiring foreign corporations to file their articles of association with the secretary of state and pay a franchise fee as a condition of doing business within the state. Coit v. Sutton (Mich.), 4 I. C. R. 768.

(6p) The clause in the charter of the Union Pacific Railroad Company giving Congress power over the rates of freight to be charged thereon does not preclude the several states from interfering with such rates. Ames v. Union P. R. Co. (C. C. D. Neb.), 4 I. C. R. 835.

(6q) A reduction of 29½ per cent by the legislature in the local freight rates of a railroad is unreasonable and void, where the new rates would result in a loss on local business to more than half of the roads affected by it, and as to the other roads the earnings from local business would not be enough to pay the proportion of the interest on the bonded debt which should be paid by such business in comparison with business of other kinds. Ames v. Union P. R. Co. (C. C. D. Neb.), 4 I. C. R. 835.

(6r) The fact that the freight rates are higher in one state than in another is not of itself sufficient to justify an arbitrary reduction of them by the legislature in the former state, for the purpose of equalizing rates. Ames v. Union P. R. Co. (C. C. D. Neb.), 4 I. C. R. 835.

(6s) A state has the power to levy a charge upon a foreign telegraph company, doing business within the state and also doing interstate business, in the form of a franchise tax, but arrived at with reference to, and graduated according to, the value of its property within the state and in lieu of all other taxes, and the exercise of that power by a state statute, held by the highest judicial tribunal of the state to be a just equivalent for other taxes, does not amount to a regulation of interstate commerce, nor put an unconstitutional restraint thereon. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Adams, 5 I. C. R. 1.

(6t) An impost or duty on imports or exports is not laid by a state statute requiring coal and coke boats and barges to be gauged by a state officer. Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Louisiana, Charity Hospital (U. S. Sup.), 5 I. C. R. 18.

(6u) A state statute providing for gauging any coal or coke boat or barge in a port of the state, with a fee to the gauger, does not make an unconstitutional regulation of commerce. Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Louisiana, Charity Hospital (U. S. Sup.), 5 I. C. R. 18.

(6v) Discrimination between states, in the transportation of coal and coke which is brought from Pennsylvania to Louisiana by boat and from Alabama by land, is not shown by regulations for gauging vessels under the Louisiana statutes. Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Louisiana, Charity Hospital (U. S. Sup.), 5 I. C. R., 18.

(6w) The provisions of the act of Louisiana providing for the appointment of two gaugers of coal and coke boats, are not regulations of commerce, in conflict with the power vested in Congress over the subject, but police regulations which every state may enact although they may in some cases in a slight degree affect commerce, nor does such statute lay an impost or duty on imports or exports from other states. Pittsburg & Southern Coal Co. v. State of Louisiana, 5 I. C. R. 18.

(6x) An occupation tax may be collected by ordinary suit, if so provided in the ordinance imposing it. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Fremont (Neb.), 5 I. C. R. 46.

(6y) A city may impose a license tax for the business of telegraphy therein, although the messages are transmitted to or from points outside of the city, if they are within the state. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Fremont (Neb.), 5 I. C. R. 46.

(6z) A city of the above class may lawfully enact an ordinance imposing on telegraph companies a license tax of a reasonable sum per annum for the privilege of transacting the business of telegraphy within the city and the fact that the telegrams received and delivered within the city were transmitted over the lines of the telegraph companies from other points within the state, or that the messages received by it at its office or place of business in the city were transmitted to various other places in the state, does not invalidate the tax. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Fremont, 5 I. C. R. 46.

(7a) Nothing in interstate law, whether constitutional or statutory, offers any impediment to enforcing the statute of Georgia imposing upon telegraph companies a penalty for not transmitting messages, the message involved in the given case not having been even started to its destination, and thus the whole of the negligence by which the statute was violated having occurred within the territory and jurisdiction of the state. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Michelson, 5 I. C. R. 236.

(7b) Kan. Laws 1881, chap. 161, as amended by Kan. Laws 1885, chap. 191, making it a misdemeanor to drive any cattle with Texas fever into the state, does not violate the interstate commerce clause of the United States Constitution, but is a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. Rouse v. Youard (Kan. App.), 5 I. C. R. 315.

(7c) A statute imposing a license tax of $30 upon every agent for the sale of machines, with a farther tax of $10 for each additional county and each additional agent, except that manufacturers who pay to the state a tax upon capital to the amount of $30 may sell without further payment, is not unequal and un-uniform, as the requirement of equality and uniformity applies only to a direct tax upon property, and does not limit the power of the legislature as to the subjects of taxation. American Harrow Co. v. Shaffer (C. C. W. D. Va.), 5 I. C. R., 336.

(7d) One who goes upon a railway train for the sole purpose of paying an overcharge for transportation if demanded, and bringing an action for the penalty prescribed by statute, may recover the penalty for such an overcharge, under Ark. act April 4, 1887, regulating the rates of charges for carriage of passengers by railroad. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Smith (Ark.), 5 I. C. R. 348.

(7e) A railroad company is not relieved from liability for the penalty for overcharge, prescribed by Ark act April 4, 1887, § 1, regulating the rates for the carriage of passengers, by the fact that it was mistaken as to the distance for which transportation was charged, where such mistake was not induced by the person seeking to enforce the penalty or his confederates. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Smith (Ark.), 5 I. C. R. 348.

(7f) The rate of charges for carriage of passengers by railroads, fixed by the Arkansas legislature, is not necessarily unreasonable, enabling the court to declare the act fixing it unconstitutional, merely because the business and the traffic of the road to which the act applies are small and unremunerative, and under the act would be insufficient to pay the interest on the company's debts and expenses of operating the road. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Smith (Ark.), 5 I. C. R. 348.

(7h) The exhibition of the bill of lading at the time of the tender of the charges and demand of the goods is not a condition precedent to the recovery of a penalty, under the Texas statute, for refusal to deliver the goods, although such penalty should be inflicted only for a wilful disregard of the law. Dwyer v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (Tex.), 5 I. C. R. 361.

(7i) A state statute providing a penalty for the refusal of a railroad company to deliver freight on payment or tender of the charges due as shown by the bill of lading is not invalid as a regulation of commerce. Dwyer v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (Tex.), 5 I. C. R. 361.

(7j) A state has the right to prohibit a citizen from contracting within her jurisdiction, either in his own behalf or through an agent, with a foreign corporation which has not acquired the privilege of engaging in business therein. Hooper v. California (U. S. Sup.), 5 I. C. R. 610.

(7k) The right of a foreign corporation to engage in business within a state other than that of its creation depends solely upon the will of such other state. Hooper v. State of California, 5 I. C. R. 610.

(7l) The exceptions to this rule embrace only cases where a corporation created by one state rests its right to enter another and to engage in business therein upon the Federal nature of its business. Hooper v. State of California, 5 I. C. R. 610.

(7m) A statute requiring all railroads in the state to furnish equal but separate accommodations for whites and blacks, and requiring conductors to assign passengers to their respective places, when applied to a passenger from another state on an interstate railroad line, invades the powers conferred on Congress by the commerce clause of the Constitution. Carrey v. Spencer (N. Y. Sup. Ct.), 5 I. C. R. 636.

(7n) The prohibition of the transportation of Texas, Mexican, Cherokee, and Indian cattle through a State by railroads and steamboats, is an unconstitutional regulation of commerce; but the invalidity of a provision against transportation of the cattle does not invalidate regulations in the statute against bringing such cattle into the State or moving them from one part of the State to another. The court says that, granting that all Texas cattle have power to communicate disease to native cattle, yet this power exists only when they come in contact with the ground, and that shipping such cattle by railroad or steamboat is attended with but little, if any, danger. Grimes v. Eddy et al. 7 I. C. C. App. III.

(7o) A statute requiring each railroad within the State to cause three of its regular passenger trains each way to stop at all stations of cities or villages having more than a designated number of inhabitants is not invalid as applied to a railroad company having but one train each way not engaged in interstate commerce as a regulation of commerce between the States. The court says: Although the act in question may, and as the railroad company now conducts its trains does, affect the transportation of persons traveling through the State of Ohio from one State to another, we are of the opinion that the Act is not a regulation of commerce between States, although it might be void if Congress, with its paramount authority, should pass an Act with which this would be inconsistent. Lake Shore & Mich. Southern Ry. Co. v. St. of Ohio ex rel. George L. Lawrence, 7 I. C. C. App. XV.

(7p) A State statute providing a penalty in case a carrier refuses to deliver goods transported by it upon tender of the freight charges specified in the bill of lading is void as to interstate shipments, in so far as it conflicts with the Interstate Commerce Act of February 4, 1887, as amended by the act of March 2, 1889, requiring the publication of schedules of rates, and forbidding deviations from such schedules. Gulf Colorado & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Hefley, 7 I. C. C. App. XXV.

(7pa) A State statute requiring railroad companies to stop all regular passenger trains at county seats is not unconstitutional or void either as being an unreasonable regulation or as interfering with interstate commerce. The court says: It is not necessary to put it on so narrow a ground; we will say that this is not a regulation of interstate traffic, but most distinctively a regulation of local traffic, the purpose for which the train was required to stop. St. of Minn. v. Gladson, 7 I. C. C. App. XXI.

(7r) An act forbidding the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, when none is manufactured in the State, and the act is plainly aimed against that imported for sale from another State, is unconstitutional and void. Ex parte Scott 7 I. C. C. XXVII.

(7s) A State statute empowering a corporation to reclaim lands under tidewaters along the seacoast, by erecting dykes and pumping out the water from the land inclosed by them, and conferring the right of property in the lands so reclaimed, is in conflict with the power of Congress to regulate foreign and interstate commerce. Macgrane Coxe v. State of N. Y., 7 I. C. C. app. XXVIII.

(7t) A police regulation making it a public offense to buy and sell deer meat within the State, which is cut from the entire carcass brought from without the State, is not an unlawful attempt to regulate interstate commerce. The court says: It is true the enforcement of the act may indirectly or incidentally affect, to some extent, traffic in the inhibited article between the people of this and other States, but that of itself is not sufficient to bring it within the objection that it is an unlawful interference with commerce. The right of the States under the very comprehensive police power reserved to them under our dual system of government to regulate and control their own internal affairs, including trade, to the reasonable advantage and good of their people, is conceded and upheld in all the cases in which the question, growing out of the right of the Federal Congress to regulate interstate commerce, has arisen. Petitioner imported the meat into the State, broke the original package, and put the commodity upon the market. It thereupon became property strictly subject to State regulation and control, and fell within the denunciation of the statute. Ex parte Simon Maier 7 I. C. C. App. XXVIII.

(7uv) A State may lawfully prohibit the shipment out of the State of certain kinds of fish caught within its borders. The court says: The fish had never become articles of commerce within the meaning contended for by defendant's counsel. Under the laws of the State they had, it is true, become private property, but of a qualified and limited character; one of the attached limitations being that they should not be shipped out of the State—that is, should not become the subject of interstate commerce. St. of Minn. v. Northern Pacific Express Co., 7 I. C. C. App. XXXI.

(7x) That the plaintiff's purpose in applying for a mileage book was to tender coupons in exchange for a ticket enabling him to travel from a point within to a point without the state does not effect his right to recover the penalty prescribed by N. Y. Laws 1896, chap. 835, for the refusal of a railroad company to issue to him a mileage book, although the company after issuing the book might properly refuse to accept the coupons in exchange for such ticket. Dillon v. Erie Ry. Co., 7 I. C. C. App. XXXVII.

(7y) One to whom a telegram is addressed may recover the penalty provided by a state statute for failure to promptly deliver it, although it was transmitted from another state, since the failure to deliver occurs after it has reached the state and come within its police power. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Lark, 7 I. C. C. App. XL.

(7z) State laws prohibiting the running of railway trains on Sunday, if enacted in good faith for the preservation and protection of the health and morals of the people and without discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, are not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. The court says, it cannot be doubted that such laws are police regulations of the greatest utility for the physical and moral well-being of society. Neither is there any question that the statute was enacted in good faith for the preservation and protection of the health and morals of the people of the State and without any discrimination whatever against interstate or foreign commerce, and that its only effect upon such commerce would be to delay it a few hours in its journey from the point of shipment to its destination. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 7 I. C. C. App. XLII.

(8a) A train composed of empty coal cars, although destined for a point in another State to procure a load, is not engaged in transporting articles of interstate commerce so as to be beyond the control of State laws. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 7 I. C. C. App. XLII.

(8b) The interstate commerce clause of the United States Constitution does not prevent a foreign corporation which leases a railroad within the state from being subject to the police power of the state so that it may be held liable for damages caused by fire set out by not having the required spark arresters. Steuben v. Central Ry. Co. of N. J., 7 I. C. C. App. XLII.

(8c) The Texas statute requiring the carrier to feed and water live stock during the time of conveyance, and until the same is delivered to the consignee, does not apply to shipments made from that state into others. Gulf Colorado & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. Gray, 7 I. C. C. App. XLIV.

(8d) State health officers will not be enjoined from detaining immigrant passengers at the State lines for the purpose of inspection and quarantine, although they are journeying on a through route which runs between States and into a foreign country and although passengers from noninfected countries and localities are thus detained and they have been passed by the United States officials. This ruling is placed upon the authority of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and upon the fact that the quarantine act of Congress of February 15, 1893, expressly recognizes the validity of State laws. Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Ry. Co. v. Milner et al, 7 I. C. C. App. L III.

(8e) The prohibition in the United States Constitution against interference with interstate commerce is not violated by Texas act April 3, 1889, p. 87, forbidding foreign corporations to transact business within the State or to maintain any action therein without filing its articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State. Western Paper Bag Co. v. Johnson & Co., 7 I. C. C. App. LXIV.

(8g) The provision of N. C. Code, § 1937, making the running of engines on Sunday a misdemeanor, is a valid exercise of the police power when applied to trains running on railroad lines and engaged in interstate commerce until the passage of an act by Congress superseding the same. The court says: Although it affects interstate commerce to some extent there is nothing in its provisions which suggests a purpose on the part of the legislature to interfere with such traffic or is indicative of any other intent than to prescribe in the honest exercise of the police power a rule of civil conduct for persons within her territorial limits. Such a law is valid and must be obeyed unless and until Congress shall have passed some statute which supersedes that act by prescribing regulations for the running of trains on the Sabbath on all railway lines engaged in interstate commerce. States have the power, at least in the absence of any action by Congress, to pass laws necessary to preserve the health and morals of the people, though their enforcement may involve some slight delay and disturbance in the transportation of persons and goods through their borders. St. of N. Carolina v. Southern Ry. Co., 7 I. C. C. App. LXV.

(8ga) The provision of the Texas statute of March 4, 1891, that no contract limiting the period in which to sue to a shorter time than two years shall be valid, is not an attempt to regulate interstate commerce when applied to an interstate shipment under a contract requiring suit to be instituted within forty days after the cause of action accrued. Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Ry. Co. v. Herring, 7 I. C. C. App. XLVI.

(8h) A state statute making a carrier which accepts anything for transportation to a point beyond its own route liable for its safe carriage to such point of destination, in the absence of a written contract to the contrary, and imposing upon the carrier the burden of proving even in case of such contract, that the loss or injury did not occur while the thing was in its charge, is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce. Richmond & Alleghany R. R. Co. et al v. Patterson Tobacco Co. 7 I. C. C. App. LXXIII.

(8i) The various acts of the State legislatures designed to protect domestic cattle against the introduction and communication of Texas fever, are not nullified by the act of Congress of May 29, 1884, as such act is intended to operate concurrently with the statutes of several States to prevent the spread and infection of contagious diseases among the cattle. Miss. Kansas & Tex. Ry. Co. v. Haber et al. 7 I. C. C. App. LXXIII.

(8j) A State statute making it unlawful to run any freight train on Sunday is not an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce as applied to an interstate train in the same way that it applies to a domestic train, in the absence of any congressional legislation on the subject. The court says: In our opinion there is nothing in the legislation in question which suggests that it was enacted with the purpose to regulate interstate commerce, or with any other purpose than to prescribe a rule of civil duty for all who on the Sabbath Day are within the territorial jurisdiction of the State. The legislature having, as will not be disputed, power to enact laws to promote order and secure the comfort, health and happiness of the people, it is within its discretion to fix the day when all labor, within the limits of the State, works of necessity and charity excepted, should cease. It is not for the judiciary to say that the wrong day was fixed, much less that the legislature erred when it assumed that the best interests of all required that one day in seven should be kept for the purposes of rest from ordinary labor. Is the admitted general power of a State to provide by legislation for the health and morals and the general welfare of its people, so fettered that it may not enact any law whatever that relates to or affects in any degree the conduct of commerce among the States? If the people of a State deem it necessary to their peace, comfort, and happiness, to say nothing of the public health and the public morals that one day in each week be set apart by law as a day when business of all kinds carried on within the limits of the State shall cease, whereby all persons of every race and condition in life may have an opportunity to enjoy absolute rest and quiet, is that result, so far as interstate freight traffic is concerned, attainable only through an affirmative act of Congress giving its ascent to such legislation? The argument in behalf of the defendants rests upon the erroneous assumption that the statute of Georgia is such a regulation of interstate commerce as is forbidden by the Constitution without reference to affirmative action by Congress and not merely a statute enacted by the State under its police power, and which, although in some degree affecting interstate commerce, does not go beyond the necessities of the case, and therefore is valid, at least until Congress interferes. Hennington v. State of Georgia, 7 I. C. C. App. LXXIII.

(8k) A State statute prohibiting the sale of game or fish during the close season is not an unlawful restriction of interstate commerce as applied to game or fish imported from other States as articles of food. The court says: The cases cited abundantly establish the doctrine that it is competent for the legislature, for the purpose of protecting game or fish, to absolutely prohibit the sale of game or fish caught during the closed season or during the entire year. The question of the right to prohibit the importation and sale of game or fish, with the same purpose, is discussed, and the right affirmed in Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476. People of the St. of Mich. v. O'Neil et al, 7 I. C. C. App. LXXIV.

(81) A state has power to make it an offense to have in possession, for the purpose of transportation beyond the State, birds which have been lawfully killed within the State during the open season; and a statute creating this offense does not violate the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. The court, after tracing the origin of the right to animals ferae naturae, says: The sole consequence of the provision forbidding the transportation of game killed within the State beyond the State is to confine the use of such game to those who own it, the people of that State. The proposition that the State may not forbid carrying beyond her limits involves, therefore, the contention that a state cannot allow its own people the enjoyment of the benefits of the property belonging to them in common, without at the same time permitting the citizens of other states to participate in that which they do not own. It was said in the discussion at bar, although it be conceded that the State has an absolute right to control and regulate the killing of game as its judgment deems best in the interests of its people, inasmuch as the State has here chosen to allow the people within her borders to take game, to dispose of it, and thus cause it to become an object of interstate commerce, as a resulting necessity such property has become the subject of interstate commerce, hence controlled by the provisions of the United States Constitution. But the errors which this argument involves are manifest. It presupposes that where the killing of game and its sale within the State are allowed it thereby becomes commerce in the legal meaning of that word. In view of the authority of the State to affix conditions to the killing and sale of game, predicated as is this power on the peculiar nature of such property and its common ownership by all the citizens of the State, it may well be doubted whether commerce is created by an authority given by a State to reduce commerce within its borders to possession, provided such game be not taken when killed without the jurisdiction of the State. The common ownership imports the right to keep the property, if the sovereign so chooses, always within its jurisdiction for every purpose. But granting that the dealing in the game killed within the State created internal State commerce, it does not follow that such internal commerce became necessarily the subject-matter of interstate commerce. The distinction between internal and external commerce and interstate commerce is marked. Geer v. St. of Connecticut, 7 I. C. C. App. LXVIII.

(8m) The question whether a given exercise of power upon the part of the State as applied to an article of interstate commerce is really the exercise of a police power, or only a restriction of such commerce, is for the Federal courts, to be determined by the public policy of the United States rather than that of the State. Re Lazarus E. Lebolt 7 I. C. C. App. LXXVIII.

(8n) A State statute making the running of engines on Sunday a misdemeanor is a valid exercise of the police power when applied to trains running on railroad lines andengaged in interstate commerce, until the passage of an act by Congress superseding the same. The courts says: Congress is unquestionably empowered, whenever it may see fit to do so, to supersede, by express enactment on this subject, all conflicting State legislation. But until its powers are asserted and exercised, the statute under which the indictment is drawn may be enforced, and will constitute one of the many illustrations of the principle that the States have the power at least in the absence of any action by Congress, to pass laws necessary to preserve the health and morals of their people, though their enforcement may involve some slight delay or disturbance of the transportation of goods or persons through their borders. St. of N. Carolina v. Southern Ry. Co. 7 I. C. C. App. LXXXII.

(8o) A State statute imposing a tax on each ton of fertilizers to defray the expense of inspection does not violate the interstate commerce law. St. of N. Carolina. ex rel. Goodwin v. Caraleigh Phosphate & Fertilizer Works, 7 I. C. C. App. LXXXIII.

(8p) An inspection law must be fair, equal, and in no way discriminating in favor of either persons or property. Donald v. Scott et al, 7 I. C. C. App. LXXXVI.

(8q) A State statute prohibiting the transportation through the State of any Texas, Mexican, Cherokee, or Indian cattle afflicted with Texas or Spanish fever, is an attempted regulation of interstate commerce and void. Selvege v. St. Louis & San Francisco Ry. Co. 7 I. C. C. App. LXXXVI.

(8r) The interstate commerce provision of the United States Constitution is violated by a law forbidding the sale of all goods made by convict labor, including those made in the State of New York, to be labeled or branded before being exposed for sale or sold, so far as concerns goods made by convict labor in other States which are not from their nature or condition withdrawn from the class of merchandise belonging to commerce, as the police power of the State does not extend to such articles when considered in connection with interstate commerce. People of the St. of N. Y. v. Hawkins 7 I. C. C. App. CIII.

(8s) A railroad train running between two points within the same State, although carrying passengers who are to be transferred to another train of the same company which shall carry them to another State, is not exempt from a State law requiring it to stop at county seats, on the ground that this constitutes an interference with interstate commerce. Gladson v. St. of Minn., 7 I. C. C. App. CVI.

(8t) A prohibition of wagers or the sale of pools or tickets or other chance on any horse race, prize fight, or other contests outside of the State is not an unconstitutional interference with commerce. The court says: The State has a right to protect the lives and morals of its people against acts which threaten them, even though such acts can only be accomplished through some instrumentality of interstate commerce. And it might as well—indeed, with less want of force—be said that a law of this State inhibiting agencies here from procuring from other States, and dissemating here, obscene literature or criminal libels upon our citizens, would be an unwarranted interference with commerce between the States. The right of the State to enact and enforce such laws, assuming they touch upon such commerce, is supported by the same principle which upholds State statutes forbidding the running of trains on Sunday. St. of Alabama v. Stripling, 7 I. C. C. CV.

(8u) A state statute fixing a penalty for detention and delay of delivery of freight which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act is void as to interstate shipments. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Tex. v. Carden et al (Tex. Civ. App.) 7 I. C. R. App. XXXVII.

(8v) A State statute requiring a fast mail train carrying interstate passengers and the United States mail over an interstate highway established by authority of Congress, to delay the transportation of such passengers and mails by turning aside from the direct interstate route, and running to a station 3½ miles away from a point on that route and back again to the same point, because such station is a county-seat, for the interstate travel to and from which the railroad company furnishes other and ample accommodation,—is an unconsitutional interference with and obstruction of interstate commerce and of the passage of the mails. The court said: It may well be, as held by the courts of Illinois, that the arrangements made by the company with the Postoffice Department of the United States cannot have the effect of abrogating a reasonable police regulation of the State. But a statute of the State which unnecessarily interferes with the speedy and uninterrupted carriage of mails of the United States cannot be considered as a reasonable police regulation. Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. People of the St. of Illinois, Ex rel Butler. (U. S.) 7 I. C. R. App. IXXI.

(8w) The rule of the Kansas statute that proof that cattle were brought from south of the 37th parallel of north latitude should be prima facie evidence that they were capable of imparting Texas fever, and that the persons in charge of them had knowledge or notice thereof, does not obstruct commerce. The court says that the statute is not within the meaning of the Constitution, nor in any just sense, a regulation of commerce among the States. It cannot be supposed to have been so intended, even if its validity were to depend upon the intent with which it was passed. It did nothing more than to declare as a rule of civil liability in Kansas that anyone driving, shipping, or transporting, or causing to be driven, shipped, or transported, into or through any county in that State, cattle liable to impart, or capable of communicating, Texas, splenic, or Spanish fever to domestic cattle, should be responsible in damages to any person injured thereby. It was passed in execution of a power with which the State did not part when entering the Union, namely, the power to protect the people in the enjoyment of their rights of property, and to provide for the redress of wrongs within its limits. Miss. Kans., & Tex. Ry. Co. v. Haber 8 I. C. C. App. VIII.

(8x) The Kansas statute of 1885, for the protection of domestic animals from contagious diseases, which gives a right of action to recover damages for bringing diseased cattle into contact with domestic cattle, is not a regulation of interstate commerce, but only declares a rule of civil liability, and was passed in execution of the power of the State to protect the rights of property and to provide for the redress of wrongs within its limits. Nor is such statute a regulation of commerce among the States simply because it may incidentally affect such commerce. Miss., Kans. & Tex., Ry. Co. v. Haber, 8 I. C. C. App. VIII.

(8y) The Federal Constitution does not by its own force give anyone the right to introduce into a State, against its will and without liability for damages, cattle so infected with disease as to be dangerous to domestic cattle. Miss., Kans., & Tex. Ry. Co. v. Haber, 8 I. C. C. App. VIII.

(8z) A State legislature has no power to require oleomargarine imported from another State to be discolored by pink or any other coloring matter, before it can be offered for sale. The court said: If this provision for coloring the article were a legal condition, a legislature could not be limited to pink in the choice of its colors. The legislative fancy or taste would be boundless. It might equally as well provide that it should be colored blue, or red, or black. Nor do we see that it would be limited to the use of coloring matter. It might, instead of that, provide that the article should only be sold if mixed with some other article which, while not deleterious to health, would give out a very offensive smell. If the legislature had the power to direct that the article should be colored pink, which can only be accomplished by the use of some foreign substance which would have that effect, we do not know upon what principle it should be confined to discoloration, or why a provision for an offensive odor would not be just as valid as one prescribing the particular color. Collins v. St. of N. Hampshire, 8 I. C. C. App. X.

(9a) An importer has the right to sell oleomargarine in original packages to consumers as well as to wholesale dealers; and the exercise of this right will not be prevented by the fact that the packages are put up in such form as is suitable for retail trade. Schollenberger v. Commonwealth of Penn., 8 I. C. C. App. X.

(9b) A State cannot absolutely prohibit the introduction within its borders of an article of commerce which is not adulterated, and which in its pure state is healthful, simply because such article in the course of its manufacture may be adulterated by dishonest manufacturers for the purpose of fraud or illegal gains. Therefore, oleomargarine having been recognized as a proper subject of commerce, it cannot be excluded by the State, although inspection or analysis is difficult and burdensome. Schollenberger v. Commonwealth of Penn., 8 I. C. C. App. X.

(9c) Inspection laws are valid when they act upon articles brought from other States, if they provide for inspection in the exercise of that power of self-protection commonly called the police power. The court says: No doubt can be entertained of this where the inspection is manifestly intended and calculated in good faith to protect the public morals or public safety. And it has now been determined that this is so if the object of the inspection is the prevention of imposition on the public generally. To protect agricultural interests against spurious and low-grade fertilizers was the object of this law, which simply imposed the actual cost of inspection, necessarily varying with the agricultural condition of the various years. Patapso Quano Co. v. Board of Agriculture of North Carolina, 8 I. C. C. App. XIII.

(9d) A regulation of the price of labor by depressing, through the penalties of the criminal law, the market price of goods made by convicts, which it requires to be labeled or marked "Convict-Made," and thereby correspondingly enhancing the price of goods made by other workmen, is not a valid exercise of the police power of the legislature,—at least as applied to convict-made goods from another state. The court says: A state law which interferes with the freedom of commerce is not saved by the fact that it applies to all states alike, including the state enacting it. Interstate commerce cannot be taxed, burdened, or restricted at all by state laws, even though operating wholly within its own jurisdiction. If it is a regulation of commerce, the law relates to a subject within the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, upon which the state has no power to legislate. It matters not whether the regulation be under the guise of a law requiring a municipal license to sell certain goods, or a health law requiring inspection of the article, or a label law, as in this case, requiring the article to be branded or labeled. When they operate as burdens or restrictions upon the freedom of trade or commerce they are invalid. This statute manifestly discriminates against the sale of goods made in a prison in the state of Ohio by a certain class of workment, and in favor of the same article when made outside a penal institution and by free labor. Trade and commerce between the states must be left free. The Constitution intended that it should be affected only by natural laws and the ordinary burdens of government imposed, through the exercise of the taxing power, equally on all property. The police power of a state cannot be used to depress the price or restrict the sale of articles of commerce, merely because they happen to be made in a prison or by a certain class of workmen, while the same articles made in some other place and by free labor are left untouched by the regulation. A citizen of this state who happens to buy goods made in a prison in Ohio has the right to put them upon the market here on their own merits; and if this right is restricted by a penal law, while the same goods in factories are untouched, such a law is a restriction upon the freedom of commerce, and the objection to it is not removed by the fact that it may have been enacted in the guise of a police regulation. People of the St. of N. Y. v. Hawkins, 8 I. C. C. App. XX.

(9e) A state law absolutely prohibiting sale or importation into the state of cigarettes or cigarette paper, in so far as it prevents importation and sale in original packages by the importer, is invalid as an interference with interstate commerce. Sawrie v. St. of Tenn., 8 I. C. C. App. XXIV.

(9f) The purchase and solicitation of wool by an agent of a foreign corporation, for shipment to other states wherein the principal business of the corporation is done, is a business pertaining directly to interstate commerce, which the foreign corporation is entitled to engage in without complying with a state statute imposing conditions upon its right to do business in the state. Machaughton v. McGirl, 8 I. C. C. App. XXVIII.

(9g) A state statute requiring as a condition of the right of a foreign corporation organized for pecuniary profits to maintain a suit or action in the courts of the state upon any demand arising out of the contract or tort, that it shall have filed its articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state before the contract was made or the tort committed, interferes with interstate commerce, and is void so far as it applies to sales by a foreign corporation of goods manufactured in another state and shipped into the state enacting the statute, whether the goods are sold before or after shipment. Goodman v. Miller & Co., 8 I. C. C. App. XXIX.

(9h) Restrictions on bringing sheep into the State by a statute appointing a sheep inspector and making it unlawful to bring sheep into the State without his inspection, and having the sheep dipped as provided in the statute, constitute an unnecessary and unconstitutional burden upon interstate commerce. St. of Idaho v. Duckworth, 8 I. C. C. App. XXXIX.

(9i) The non-exercise by Congress of its power to regulate commerce among the States is equivalent to a declaration that such commerce shall be free from any restrictions. St. of Idaho v. Duckworth, 8 I. C. C. App. XXXIX.

(9j) A packing company engaged in slaughtering and packing cattle, sheep, and hogs within the State with the intent to transport and sell the carcasses and products for human consumption in other States and territories, or in foreign countries, is not engaged in interstate commerce, and its business cannot be regulated by Congress, through the appointment of inspectors under the inter-state laws of the Constitution, U. S. v. Boyer, 8 I. C. C. App. XL.

(9h) The power of Congress to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes did not preclude Rhode Island from purchasing tribal lands from the Narragansett Indians whose existence had never been recognized by the United States, and who existed as an Indian tribe only in name. Re Narragansett Indians, 8 I. C. C. App. XLVI.

(91) The penalty imposed for unjust discrimination in excessive freight charges, provided by Texas Rev. Stat. 1895, arts. 4574, 4575, is not applicable to interstate shipments. Gulf, Western Texas, & Pacific R. R. Co. v. Barry, 8 I. C. C. App. XLIX.

(9m) A State statute making it unlawful to keep a place in which the business of transmitting money to be placed or bet on any horse race, etc., whether within or without the State, is permitted or carried on, or to be concerned in such business, is not an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce as applied to an agent of a telegraph company who keeps such place or is engaged in such business, and transmits the money to another State by telegraph. St. of Connecticut v. Harbourne, 8 I. C. C. App. L.

(9n) An ordinance imposing an occupation tax on each railroad corporation carrying or transporting freight or passengers to or from any point within the limits of the city and any point within the limits of the State, and having a depot within the city limits, expressly excepting and exempting from the levy of the tax all interstate traffic commerce or business of such corporation, does not violate the Federal Constitution as imposing a burden on interstate commerce. City of York v. Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy, R. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. App. LVI.

(9o) The requirements of Illinois act of July 1, 1879, §25, that all regular passenger trains shall stop at the railroad station of county seats to receive and let off passengers, is not, as applied to interstate trains running over tracks constructed under the authority of the State, an unlawful interference with interstate commerce. The court relies principally upon the prior case of Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 105 Ill. 657, but says that the company cannot by its manner of doing business escape such control and disregard a statute of the State which seeks to regulate and control domestic concerns within the limits of the State for the public welfare and general good. Appellant's "Knickerbocker Special" is not national in its character, requiring uinformity of regulations affecting all States alike. The act is not an interference with interstate commerce, but a mere police regulation applicable only to the limits of the State of Illinois. It no more interferes with the expedition with which trains passing through the State carrying passengers from one State to another may reach their destination than does a regulation limiting the speed of trains running through a crowded thoroughfare, and, like the latter regulation, is for the public welfare. Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Ry. Co. v. People of the St. of Ill., ex rel. Jett., 8 I. C. C. App. LVI.

(9p) U. S. Rev. Stat. §5258, authorizing railroad companies to carry government supplies, mails, etc., from one state to another, does not prevent the State from enacting such regulations, with respect, at least, to a railroad corporation of its own creation, as are not directed against interstate commerce, and are not regulations thereof, but only incidentally or remotely affected, and are designed to promote the public convenience. Lake Shore & Mich. Southern Ry. Co. v. St. of O. ex rel. Lawrence, 8 I. C. C. App. LVIII.

(9q) The Ohio statute requiring each railroad whose road is operated within the State to cause three, each way, of its regular trains carrying passengers, if so many are run daily, Sundays excepted, to stop at a station, city, or village containing over 3,000 inhabitants long enough to receive and let off passengers, is for the public convenience, and is not a regulation of interstate commerce and unconstitutional when applied to the trains of a corporation of the State engaged in interstate commerce. Lake Shore & Mich. Southern Ry. Co. v. St. of O. ex rel. Lawrence, 8 I. C. C. App. LVIII.

(9r) The Texas act of 1882 prescribing a penalty for failure of a carrier to deliver goods in its possession on demand of the consignee, and tender of the freight specified in the bill of lading, is inoperative so far as it imposes a penalty upon a carrier engaged in interstate commerce, because it is in conflict with the act of Congress of 1887. Houston, East & West Texas Ry. Co. v. Peters & Wills, 8 I. C. C. App. LIX.

(9s) Discrimination in freight rates, in violation of the Kentucky Constitution, §218, prohibiting such discrimination, may not be justified on the ground that it was necessary in order to allow competition in a certain market, when the railway commission has refused to exclude the company from the operation of the provision. The court said: It is earnestly argued for appellant that the transportation is not under substantially similar circumstances and conditions when competition exists at one point and not at another. On the other hand, it is contended for the State that to adopt this construction is to emasculate the section and to deprive it of all practical operation and effect. The precise question thus presented was determined by this court in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1380, 43 L. R. A. 541, 46 S. W. 707, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1102, 47 S. W. 210, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1394, 43 L. R. A. 549, 47 S. W. 598, where the construction of the section adopted by the State was sustained. We are urged to overrule that case; but it was fully considered, and then reconsidered by the whole court, and we disinclined, with substantially no new light on the question, to set aside the conclusion of the court reached then after so mature deliberation. It is insisted for appellant that this construction makes it an arbitrary interference with the right of appellant to engage in competitive traffic, depriving it of its property without due process of law, denying it the equal protection of the law, impairing the obligation of its charter contract, and unlawfully interfering with interstate commerce. A railroad is only an improved modern highway. It must, of necessity, be subject to public control. To hold that only railroad men understand rates, or that they shall be allowed alone to fix the rates, and that no tribunal can review their decision as to what rates are reasonable, is to put in their hands a power dangerous to the welfare of the community, and utterly out of keeping with the doctrine that they are public agencies. If it be true that the public interests require the discrimination in rates shown in this case, and that no injustice has really been done, it may be that, upon presentation of the facts to the railroad commission, it would allow the rates to stand. It does not appear that the appellant has presented its case to the commission. The power to determine this matter must be decided somewhere, and, the Constitution having created a special tribunal for this purpose, we cannot see that these provisions are subject to any of the objections raised by appellant. No principle of constitutional law is violated when the State, which has created these agencies for the public service, creates an impartial tribunal to prevent their great powers from being used to build up certain favored ones at the expenses of others. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, 8 I. C. C. LXXIII.

(9t) The words "upon the same conditions" in the Kentucky Constitution, requiring all railroad companies to receive and handle freight of the same class for all purposes from and to the same points and upon the same conditions, in the same manner and for the same charges, and the same method of payment, relate solely to the process or facts of receiving and handling freight, and require the charges therefor to be the same for all persons alike, except when the freight is transported from and to different points, or is of different classes, or the cost of transporting, including savings and gains from facilities and conveniences furnished by the shipper, is different. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Ky., 8 I. C. C. App. LXXIII.

(9u) Discrimination by carriers other than in the manner expressly prohibited by §215 of the Kentucky Constitution, requiring all railway companies to receive and handle freight of the same class for all persons from and to the same points upon the same conditions for the same charges, was contemplated by §196, providing that transportation of freight and passengers by railroads shall be so regulated by general law as to prevent unjust discrimination. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Ky., 8 I. C. C. App. LXXIII.

(9v) The omission from Kentucky Statute, §820, of the proviso found in Constitution, §218, that the railroad commission may authorize a less charge for longer than for shorter distances on application by the carrier, does not make the statute inconsistent with the Constitution, as the proviso is self-executing and the statute expressly provides that the commission may exonerate a carrier from its provision even without previous application. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, 8 I. C. C. App. LXXIV.

(9w) A quarantine regulation of the Texas live-stock sanitary commission duly promulgated, reciting reasons to believe that anthrax has or is liable to break out in Louisiana, and providing that during a certain time no animals are to be transported or driven into Texas from Louisiana, is not invalid intreference with commerce. The court says it is universally conceded that the power to pass proper quarantine is among the powers reserved to the several sovereign States of the Union. Citing Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 203, 6 L. ed. 71; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 149, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 136, 38 L. ed. 388; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall, 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115; Morgan's S. S. Co. v. Louisiana Bd. of Health 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 42 L. ed. 878. It is often a matter of great perplexity to undertake to trace the sometimes shadowy line between the lawful exercise of the police power of the State and the conceded power of Congress to regulate commerce. However, when a statute or police regulation, such a quarantine duly promulgated by the legally constituted authority, is attacked on the ground of unconstitutionality, the burden is entirely upon the party insisting upon its invalidity to clearly point out its vice. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Tex. v. Smith, 8 I. C. C. App. LXXXIII.

(9x) The provision for free transportation of shippers of live stock in Kan. Laws 1897, chap. 167, has no application to interstate shipments. State of Kansas v. Otis, 8 I. C. C. App. LXXXV.

(9y) An ordinance prohibiting the sale of perishable food commodities in the railway depots or landings of the city, except in unbroken packages in which they are imported into the State, does not interfere with interstate commerce. The court says: It is urged or implied that private interests or rivalry in the business of selling food commodities dictated the ordinance. It is not for the court to ascertain the motives that may have promoted the ordinance. The inquiry is whether its declared purpose is lawful, and whether the ordinance is restricted within the scope of that purpose. The ordinance imposes no restriction on the sale of the commodities in the original package. When the transportation is completed, the articles taken from the package and offered for sale, the ordinance then operates to regulate the places of sale. It is settled that when the importation is complete, the property no longer in the original package, but removed therefrom, and mingled with the property in the State, the mass becomes subject to the police as well as the taxing power of the State. Citing Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 436, 6 L. ed. 684. St. of Louisiana v. Davidson, 8 I. C. C. App. LXXXIX.

(9z) An attempt by a municipal corporation to enforce by resolution a forfeiture of the rights of a railroad in its streets, under a contract providing for such forfeiture in case the railroad makes rates unequally discriminating against the city, is not an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce. The court said: Was the action of the city a law attempting to regulate interstate commerce? Plainly it was not. A railroad company has a right to make a contract with respect to interstate commerce, and to bind itself to certain rates if it chooses to do so. It bound itself here to impose no rates which were unequally discriminating against the city of Memphis. This was its duty under the interstate commerce law, if it had any power to fix rates upon such commerce, and it might contract with any person or city to do that which it was its duty to do under the law. The action of the city, therefore, was merely an attempt to enforce a contract right, and not to regulate interstate commerce, except in so far as the common carrier had lawfully bound itself to the city contractually with respect to a particular part of that commerce. Iron Mountain R. R. Co. of Memphis v. City of Memphis, 8 I. C. C. App. XCIII.

(10b) The Southern Railway Company in applying to complainant's interstate traffic at Macon, Ga., the storage rates prescribed by the Georgia Railroad Commission, and the Columbia, Newberry, and Laurens Railroad Company, in applying to complainant's interstate traffic at Columbia, S. C., the storage rates prescribed by the South Carolina Railroad Commission, did not violate the Act to Regulate Commerce, although such storage rates were in excess of the usual public warehouse charges in Macon and Columbia. Blackman v. Southern R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 352.

(10c) A state has jurisdiction to enact that carriers of coal therein shall provide track connections with all mines within its borders, but the power of the state in that respect arises from its authority over state commerce and does not constitute any limitation upon the exclusive power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. Red Rock Fuel Company v. B. & O. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 438, 452.

(10d) The rates fixed by the State Commissions of South Carolina and Georgia are presumptively reasonable, but such presumption is not conclusive, and the railroad companies are entitled to show the contrary in a case involving the rates on interstate traffic. Brabham v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 11 I. C. C. 464.

(10e) As Duluth, Minn., has the same coal rates to Hastings as to Superior, Wis., which latter rates are excessive, the railroad commission of Minnesota has ample authority to control the situation, and complainant should first apply to that commission. Hastings Malting Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 11 I. C. C. 675.

(10f) The Supreme Court of the United States held in Wisconsin, Minnesota & Pacific Railroad Company v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115, that an order of the State commission of Minnesota directing a physical connection between two railroads of that State in pursuance of a statute of the State was a valid exercise of authority, and this Commission sees no reason why Congress may not, as it has done, exercise the same authority over a railway handling interstate traffic which the State can exercise with respect to State traffic. McRae Terminal v. Southern Ry. Co. et al. 12 I. C. C. 270.

(10g) Commission not bound by State regulation, but requires strong reasons to interfere. Farmers, Merchants & Shippers Club v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 351.

(10h) No action taken concerning state rates to Kansas City, Mo., where voluntary reduced by railroad to correspond with rates to Kansas City, Kan., reduced by state legislature. Farmers, Merchants & Shippers Club v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co. 12 I. C. C. 351.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(10i) To fit the interstate minimum to each state would result in state regulation of interstate commerce. 1915 Western Rate Advance Case, 35 I. C. C. 497,576

(10j) The power of the state authorities to prescribe and regulate rates for the carriage of freight locally within the state is indisputable, and it is only where the proper application of those rates operates to the disadvantage or prejudice of an interstate shipper that the Commission's authority to remove discrimination should be exercised. Iowa-Dakota Grain Co. v. I. C. R. R., 40 I. C. C., 73, 75.

(10k) An assumption that a state-made rate or system of rates can not be said to cause unjust discrimination unless it is unlawful for another reason, namely, that it is so low as to deprive the carriers of their property without due process of law or to deny them the equal protection of the laws, finds no support in those sections of the Act which define unjust discrimination and undue prejudice, nor can it be justified in practice or on principle. The Commission is frequently called upon to determine whether a relation of rates is unjustly discriminatory where no question is or can be raised as to whether any of the rates involved are confiscatory. The Act gives it no authority to determine whether state-made rates are confiscatory. The position is wholly indefensible that the Commission must inquire into an issue as to which it has no jurisdiction for the purpose of determining a question as to which its jurisdiction is not complete, but exclusive. The Missouri River-Nebraska cases, 40 I. C. C. 201, 254.

(10l) The obligation placed upon the Commission by the law requires it to exercise its best judgment upon the facts placed before it and, to prescribe just and reasonable maximum rates and enter such order as shall prevent or remove undue prejudice to interstate commerce, even tho in some instances such action may incidentally affect the level of intrastate rates. Railroad Commission of La. v. A. H. T. R. Co., 41 I. C. C. 83, 122.

(10m) In a case which merely calls attention to the fact that a state rate is lower than an interstate rate on the same traffic from and to the same points, the Commission has no authority or power to condemn the state rate and take action which would be warrant to carriers to increase it to the level of the applicable interstate rate. It is only in cases where the rates prescribed by state authorities necessarily operate to unduly prefer a state over an interstate shipper, or to otherwise interfere with the proper application of rates prescribed by this Commission, that the authority of the federal law is properly to be exercised. Memphis Merchants' Exchange v. I. C. R. R. Co., 43 I. C. C. 378, 387.

(10n) The jurisdiction of the Commission over intrastate rates terminated with the relinquishment of the carriers from federal control, except under certain circumstances. Western Lime & Cement Co. v. Director General, 58 I. C. C. 508, 509.

(10o) In every case which puts in question intrastate rates the decisive factor is whether or not they affect interstate commerce injuriously to a considerable extent. If they do, they are brought under the Commission's jurisdiction and control, even though the whole rate structure of a state should be involved. Rates, Fares and Charges of N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 59 I. C. C. 290, 292.

(10p) The cost of service is only one of the elements to be considered in determining what would be a proper relationship between intrastate fares. If it does cost more to handle one character of passenger traffic than the other, it would not necessarily follow that there should be a difference in rates. Nebraska Rates, Fares, and Charges, 60 I. C. C. 305, 308.

(10q) Under section 206 (c) of the transportation act, 1920, the Commission has jurisdiction over intrastate shipments moving on and after January 1, 1918 for the period of Federal control. Central Pennsylvania Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 99.

(10r) Where an issue of undue or unreeasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice is not involved in the proceeding, the Commission's jurisdiction to make a finding for the future as to state rates is confined to the period of federal control. D'Arcy Spring Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 129.

(10ra) The fourth section of the interstate commerce act does not apply to intrastate shipments moving during the period of Federal control. Alaska Junk Co. v. Director General as Agent, 68 I. C. C. 616.

(10s) Rates on coal from mines at Floodwood, Ohio, to complainant's plant at that place, during Federal control, found not unreasonable as compared with rates and car earnings produced for the movement of coal and other freight between firms, industries, and team tracks at points on other lines in Ohio and adjacent States. Southern Ohio Power Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 10.

(10t) Combination rate charged on shoddy from Plymouth, Mass., to East Cambridge, Mass., during Federal control, found unreasonable to extent that the factor from South Station, Boston, Mass., to East Cambridge, exceeded lower proportional rate subsequently established. Reparation awarded. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 13.

(10u) Rate on bituminous coal from mines in the Boonville, Ind., district to Huntingburg, Tell City, and Cannelton, Ind., during Federal control, found unreasonable as compared with rates on this traffic from and to points in Ohio and Indiana for comparable distances, and with rates on crushed stone, sand, and gravel between Indiana and Illinois points for comparable distances. Reparation awarded. Cannelton Sewer Pipe Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 27.

(10v) Except under certain circumstances the commission's jurisdiction over intrastate rates terminated on February 29, 1920, the date of the relinquishment of the carriers from Federal control. On that date jurisdiction over such rates passed to the State authorities subject to the limitation that no rates should be reduced prior to September 1, 1920, unless approved by the commission, Following cases in 73 I. C. C.: Cannelton Sewer Pipe Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 27, 28; Chicago Sewer Pipe Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 511; Dee Clay Mfg. Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 557, 558; Indiana Board & Filler Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 601, 602.

(10x) Where no undue prejudice or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce is alleged, intrastate rates are without the commission's jurisdiction. Murfreesboro Board of Trade v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 228, 229.

(10y) The director general was not amenable to rate orders issued by State commissions during Federal control. The applicable rates on intrastate shipments were those on file with appropriate commissions. Walsh Fire Clay Products Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 410, 411.

(10z) Contention that the commission should assume "prima facie that Statemade rates are reasonable" and that therefore the burden is upon the carriers to show the contrary. HELD, contention unsound. Walsh Fire Clay Products Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 410, 412.

(11a) Class rates on saw logs from Vader to Helsing Junction, Wash., during Federal control, found unreasonable as compared with rates on the same traffic between other points in that vicinity for similar distances and to extent they exceeded lower commodity rate subsequently established. Shipper made request for a commodity rate prior to movement, but these shipments could not await its establishment because a holding of the logs would jeapordize shipper's dam and bridge. Furthermore, it has been the uniform practice of carriers in this territory to promptly establish, on request, commodity rates under which logs could move. Reparation awarded. Clear Cedar Shingle Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 632.

(11b) The commission is without jurisdiction to award reparation on intrastate shipments moving on and after March 1, 1920. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 637.

(11c) Rate on crushed rock, sand, and gravel, from Tempe, Ariz., to Cactus, formerly Portland, during Federal control, found not unreasonable as compared with rates on ore between other points in the same State for similar distances. Operating and other conditions affecting the ore movement are more favorable than those surrounding the transportation of the shipments here under consideration. Arizona Packing Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 713.

(11d) With the termination of federal control at 12:01 a. m. March 1, 1920, the jurisdiction of the commission over intrastate rates passed to the state authorities subject to the limitation that no rates should be reduced prior to Sept. 1, 1920, unless approved by the commission. W. P. Fuller & Co. v. S. P. Co., 74 I. C. C., 703.

(11e) The commission has no jurisdiction over shipments originally intended for export but which are subsequently reshipped to another point in the same State and not exported, the entire movement being intrastate. Phillips & Sons Co. v. B. & S. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 381.

(11f) The jurisdiction of the Commission over claims for reparation on intrastate shipments is limited to the period of Federal control, which terminated February 29, 1920. Phillips & Sons Co. v. B. & S. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 382.

(11g) Section 208 (a) of the transportation act, 1920, does not confer jurisdiction upon the commission to award reparation, or to enforce the provisions of the interstate commerce act, on intrastate traffic during the guaranty period. Cannelton Sewer Pipe Co., 73 I. C. C., 27. Case Coal Co. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 391.

(11h) Fact that a lower rate was applicable on intrastate shipments over lines not under Federal control for corresponding distances does not establish unreasonableness of rates over lines under Federal control. Empire Refineries (Inc.) v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 691, 692.

(11i) Complaint attacking intrastate rates on shipments moving subsequent to Federal control and during the guaranty period, dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. With the termination of Federal control at 12:01 a. m., March 1, 1920, jurisdiction over intrastate rates passed to the State authorities, subject only to the limitation that no rates should be reduced prior to September 1, 1920, unless approved by the commission. Fuller & Co. v. S. P. Co., 74 I. C. C. 703.

(11j) The commission has no jurisdiction over intrastate rates in the absence of undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce on the one hand, and interstate or foreign commerce on the other, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce. Mathieson Alkali Works v. C., C. & O. Ry., 77 I. C. C. 150, 153.

(11k) Complaint alleges undue prejudice of intrastate commerce and preference of interstate commerce, which it is urged the commission has power to remove under section 13 of the act. Such prejudice is claimed to result from the application of interstate rates which are lower than the corresponding intrastate rates, but such allegation not proved. Mathieson Alkali Works v. C., C. & O Ry., 77 I. C. C. 150, 153.

(11l) Interstate switching charges assessed on numerous movements from Helena to West Helena, Ark., during Federal control, found illegal. Tariffs under which charges were collected provided that rates therein "will not apply on Arkansas State traffic," and since shipments were not interstate, lower intrastate charges were legally applicable. Reparation awarded. Helena Traffic Bureau v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 197.

(11m) Contention that the commission has no jurisdiction to consider overcharge claims against the director general on intrastate shipments during that part of Federal control prior to General Order No. 28 of the director general, not sustained. Miller v. Director General, 60 I. C. C., 162; Central Pennsylvania Lumber Co. v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 99; Owen Co. v. Director General, 64 I. C. C., 157; Terre Haute, Indianapolis & E. T. Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 661.

(11n) Where rough rice from originating points is shipped to mills in the same State, and the clean product reshipped to points in other States, the transportation charges on the clean rice are, on this traffic, adjusted on basis of through rates from the rough rice originating points to ultimate destinations, and the shipments into the milling points become parts of interstate movements. Lake Charles Rice Milling Co. v. A. & N. Ry. Co., 77 I. C. C. 707, 708.

(11o) Application of intrastate scale on rough rice from Texas originating points to milling points in that State, when milled products moves intrastate, found not to subject millers at Lake Charles to undue prejudice; but application of intrastate scale on such rough rice to Texas mill points when milled product moves interstate, while applying higher interstate scale on rough rice from same originating points to Lake Charles, found unduly prejudicial to latter point in favor of competitive Texas mill points. Lake Charles Rice Milling Co. v. A. & N. Ry. Co., 77 I. C. C. 707, 709.

(11p) Commission is without jurisdiction to award reparation on intrastate shipments which moved during guaranty period, March 1 to September 1, 1920. United Dredging Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co. 78 I. C. C. 365.

(11q) Railroad Commission of Texas provided that when stock cars are furnished for the transportation of watermelons, carloads, between points in Texas, such stock cars, shall, when requested by shippers, be slatted at the expense of the carriers furnishing the same or participating in the haul of the commodity, in order that the cars may be suitable for the transportation and that no transportation charge shall be based on the weight of the material used for the purpose. Carriers petitioned this Commission claiming this rule resulted in undue prejudice to interstate commerce. The charge assessed for this slatting against shippers on interstate traffic is $5 per car. Respondents rest their case upon the theory that the state regulation amounts to an obstruction to or discrimination against interstate commerce as a whole. In unslatted stock cars the melons are frequently rotted and discolored by the elements and are subject to mutilation from the outside. Although the objections to stock cars are not entirely removed by the slatting, such cars are accepted because sufficient ventilated cars are not available. HELD, collection of a charge for slatting interstate cars while collecting none on intrastate movements unduly discriminates against interstate commerce; the charge on interstate traffic unreasonable; and the unjust discrimination should be removed by noncollection of the interstate charge. In the matter of a regulation prescribed by the Railroad Commission of Texas requiring carriers to slat stock cars for transportation of watermelons in Texas, 78 I. C. C. 732.

(11r) Where state rates are not attacked as unduly prejudicial or preferential, or unjustly discriminatory, in their relation to interstate rates, the jurisdiction of the Commission over intrastate rates expired with the termination of federal control. International Harvester Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. 80 I. C. C. 71.

(11s) Except where intrastate rates are assailed as unduly prejudicial or preferential, or unjustly discriminatory, in their relation to interstate rates, jurisdiction of the commission over intrastate rates expired with termination of Federal control. International Harvester Co. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 71.

(11t) Rate on burnt foundry sand from Springfield, Ohio, to St. Bernard and Lockland, Ohio, during Federal control, found unreasonable as compared with rates for comparable movements in same general territory and to extent it exceeded rate from Mechanicsburg, Ohio, a farther point, which rate was subsequently established from Springfield. Reparation awarded. American Radiator Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 77.

(11u) Rates on mine ties from Port Matilda to River Valley, Pa., during Federal control, found unreasonable as compared with lower rate subsequently established and to extent it exceeded aggregate of intermediate rates to and from Butler, Pa. Reparation awarded.

Henderson Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 83.

(11v) Rates on water, in tank-car loads, from Point of Rocks, Rock Springs, and Green River, Wyo., to Superior, Wyo., during Federal control, found unreasonable as compared with rates on same commodity for similar intrastate movements within States of Colorado and Illinois. Reparation awarded. Premier Coal Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 85.

(11w) Jurisdiction of commission over intrastate rates subsequent to Federal control is prescribed by sections 3 and 13 of the act. The commission has no authority to pass upon measure of such rates except where they are shown to be prejudicial to interstate commerce, and long-and-short-haul provision of section 4 of the act does not apply thereto. Producers Refining Co. v. M., K. & T. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 339, 340.

(11xy) No part of commission's duty to pass upon reasonableness of intrastate rates except in so far as they may be unlawfully prejudicial in substantial degree to persons or localities in interstate commerce. Oklahoma Corp. Comm. v. A. R. R., 80 I. C. C. 607, 617.

(11z) Exaction of an unreasonable rate on intrastate traffic is not, as such, prohibited or declared unlawful by the act. Nebraska Rates, Fares, and Charges 81 I. C. C. 290, 292.

(12a) Order of commission requiring establishment of State rates that will remove discrimination against interstate commerce can be altered or set aside only by further order of the commission or by Federal court. Nebraska Rates, Fares and Charges, 81 I. C. C., 290, 292.

(12b) Ordinarily the Commission does not have jurisdiction over intrastate rates in the absence of a showing of substantial disparity which operates as a real discrimination against and obstruction to interstate commerce. Discretion rests with the state authorities to deal with intrastate rates on general levels found by the Commission to be fair to interstate commerce. Lake Dock Coal Case, 89 I. C. C. 170, 200.

(12c) The state cannot justify unreasonably low rates for domestic transportation, considered alone, on the ground that the carrier is earning large profits on its interstate business, and on the other hand, the carrier cannot justify unreasonably high rates on domestic business on the ground that only in that way is it able to meet losses on its interstate business. Dayton-Goose Creek Ry. Co. v. United States, 44 Sup. Ct. 169.

(12d) The fact that the business carried on by a corporation is entirely interstate in character does not render the corporation immune from the ordinary processes of the courts of a state, for the requirements of effective administration of justice are paramount. Davis v. Farmers' Co-op. Equity Co. (1923) 43 Sup. Ct. 556.

(12e) The "proviso" to paragraph 17 §402, of the Transportation Act (41 Stat. 476), which provides as follows: "Provided, however, that nothing in this act shall impair or affect the right of a state, in the exercise of its police power, to require just and reasonable freight and passenger service for intrastate business, except in so far as such requirement is inconsistent with any lawful order of the Commission made under the provisions of this act"—is plain and unambiguous, and, whether construed as an independent enactment or as limitation restraining and limiting the sections preceding it, reserves to the state the right to exercise its police powers to require adequate passenger depots for intrastate passenger service. Chicago, R. I. & P. Co. v. State (Okla., 1923) 217 Pac. 147.

(12f) A state cannot by its legislation interfere with or obstruct foreign or interstate commerce. Real Silk Hosiery Mills, Inc., v. City of Portland, 294 Fed. 587.

(12g) The United States built a railroad for use in the transportation of spruce timber for war purposes only, and later conveyed title to a corporation owned by the government. Such corporation, pending completion of the road granted a permit to a third party, revocable at any time, to use a portion of the road for carrying of passengers and freight. Subsequently it revoked the permit and sold the road to complainant, which bought it for use solely as a private logging road. Oregon Public Service Commission Act (Or. L. §5829) provides that it shall not apply to "logging or other private railroads not doing business as common carriers." HELD, that the temporary use of the railroad by the licensee did not impress the property with a public use, and that the Oregon Public Service Commission was without jurisdiction to require its operation as a common carrier. Pacific Spruce Corporation v. McCoy. 294 Fed. 711.

(12h) Under Const. Cal., art. 13, § 14, imposing an annual tax on railroad properties measured by the gross revenues earned on both intrastate and interstate business, the state, though empowered to make such classification and to place a burden on railroads greater than that placed on other property for the purpose of taxation, was not empowered to make such burden so grossly excessive or disproportionate as to constitute a burden on interstate commerce, in violation of the interstate commerce clause; a tax so oppressive being in effect a tax on interstate commerce. Atchison T. & F. Ry. Co. v. Collins Southern Pac. Co. v. Same. 294 Fed 742.

(12i) "Intrastate commerce" is that commerce which is, during its whole course of transportation, within the jurisdiction of a single state. Yohn v. United States, 280 Fed. 511.

(12j) The authority given by the Transportation Act, amending Interstate Commerce Act, §3, par 2, to require carriers to provide for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, excludes the jurisdiction of the state Public Service Commission to make the same requirements of interstate carriers under the principle that Congress, having delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to deal with the subject-matter, an exercise of like power by the state is thereby superseded. People v. Public Service Commission, (Ind. 1922), 135 N. E. 195.

(12k) When the interstate freight rates put into effect by the Interstate Commerce Commission are materially lower for the same length of haul on the same class of commodities than the intrastate rates made under the orders of the Corporation Commission, this constitutes such a discrimination that it is the duty of the Corporation Commission to remove it by readjusting the rates. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, (Okla. 1922), 296 Pac. 236.

(12l) The state may regulate, but can do nothing which will directly burden or impede, interstate traffic of a railway company, or impair the usefulness of its facilities for such traffic. State v. Public Service Commission, (Mo. 1922), 242 S. W. 938.

(12m) While a state may require adequate local facilities even to the stoppage of interstate trains, yet when local demands are adequately met, the obligation of the railroad is performed, and the stoppage of interstate trains becomes an improper and illegal interference with interstate commerce. State v. Public Service Commission, (Mo. 1922), 242 S. W. 938.

(12n) As respects the power of a state directly to affect, regulate, or burden interstate commerce, "burden" means anything that imposes either a restrictive or onerous load upon such commerce. State of Missouri v. Kansas Natural Gas Co., 282 Fed. 341.

(12o) The power of direct regulation of interstate commerce, whether Congress has entered the field or not, cannot be and is not lodged in the state, though local interests are indirectly affected by such commerce. State of Missouri v. Kansas Natural Gas Co., 282 Fed. 341.

(12p) An intrastate rate on fertilizer material originally granted by a railroad to establish a new industry and which was less than one-half the rate prescribed by the state commission for similar hauls of the same material in the same quantities in other places, some of which are competitors in the market, to the place to which the rate in controversy was granted, is discriminatory, and the orders for its enforcement may be enjoined, regardless of whether it is unremunerative. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Trammell, 287 Fed. 741.

(12q) A carrier which had originally established a rate for transportation of two commodities between designated points which had existed for 20 years, except as affected by the horizontal increases and reductions during government control, and which had acquiesced for more than a year in an order of the state commission continuing that rate in effect, and made no showing that any considerable damage would be suffered by the refusal of a preliminary injunction, is not entitled to a preliminary injunction to restrain the enforcement of that rate by the state commission, where the answer of the Commission averred it was about to formulate a general revision of this and other rates. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Trammel, 287 Fed. 741.

(12r) Under the Georgia Code, empowering the Railroad Commission to prescribe just and reasonable rates, and prohibiting unjust discrimination in rates, the Georgia Commission cannot order an intrastate rate which would discriminate against other intrastate rates, and the fact that the rates ordered was originally established by the railroad to promote a new industry and subsequently withdrawn, does not affect the rule. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v Trammell, 287 Fed. 741.

(12s) The states are free under their powers of local government to legislate so as to affect interstate commerce in a limited degree, where there is no controlling enactment by Congress on the subject. Rivera v. James Stewart & Co., 195 N. Y. S. 841.

(12t) The jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over freight rates for transportation service between points wholly within a state, to prevent discrimination against interstate commerce, does not interfere with the jurisdiction of a state commission over intrastate rates, so long as its orders do not result in such discrimination. Akron & B. Belt R. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, (Ohio, 1922), 138 N. E. 74.

(12u) The order made by the Interstate Commerce Commission on July 29, 1920, in a proceeding known as Ex parte 74, 58 I. C. C. 220, granting a 40 per cent. horizontal increase in freight rates, was not such a definite specific order in its application to service wholly within the state of Ohio as to preclude an inquiry concerning intrastate rates by the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio under the changed conditions existing in September, 1921. Akron & B. Belt R. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, (Ohio 1922), 138 N. E. 74.

(12v) "A state may enact laws which in practice operate to affect commerce among the states—as providing in the legitimate exercise of its police power and general jurisdiction, for the security and comfort of persons and the protection of property; by establishing and regulating channels for commercial facilities; by the passage of inspection laws and laws to restrict the sale of articles injurious to health and morals; by the imposition of taxes upon avocations within its borders not interfering with foreign or interstate commerce or employment, or with business exercised under authority of the Constitution of the United States." Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing District, 120 U. S. 489. 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694. Purchase v. State, (Nebr. 1922), 191 N. W. 677.

(12w) "The power granted to congress, to regulate commerce among the states, being exclusive when the subjects are national in their character, or admit only of one uniform system of regulation, the failure of congress to exercise that power in any case, is an expression of its will that the subject shall be left free from restrictions or impositions upon it by the several states." Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing District, 120 U. S. 489, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694. Purchase v. State, (Nebr. 1922), 191 N. W. 677.

(12x) In all that relates solely and peculiarly to the actual regulation of interstate commerce, the congress, and not the courts, must be applied to for relief from a rule of law which may to some appear to be obnoxious, or to obtain relief by affirmative legislation as the need of the exigency may require. Purchase v. State, (Nebr. 1922), 191 N. W. 677.

(12y) The state through the Public Utilities Commission has the power to regulate the sale of natural gas in this state by fixing a reasonable price therefor, where the gas is produced in Oklahoma, transported through pipe lines into this state, and here sold to distributing companies that in turn sell the gas to the consumers thereof in a large number of cities in this state. State v. Kansas Natural Gas. Co., (Kans. 1922), 208 Pac. 622.

(12z) Interstate Commerce Act, §5, par. 1, subds. 4, 5, as amended by Transportation Act, Feb. 28, 1920, §407, and section 15a, as added by section 422, extending powers and duties of Interstate Commerce Commission, section 1, subd. 3, as amended by section 400, and subdivisions 10, 15, 18-20, as amended by section 402, investing the Commission with powers over the changes in lines, tracks, etc., or railroads engaged largely in interstate commerce, section 1, subds. 21, 22, as amended by section 402, and section 3, subds. 3, 4, as amended by section 405, limiting extension of authority of Commission to railroads wholly within a state not operated as part of the general systems, gives power and authority over the matter of union terminal depot facilities of railroads, largely engaged in interstate commerce, to the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the act the State Railroad Commission has been divested of power over the subject. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission, (Cal. 1922), 211 Pac. 460.

(13a) The right of a state to invoke the supreme law to legislate in the interest of public safety is not contravened by the interstate commerce or transportation acts. City of Durham v. Southern R. Co., (S. C. 1923), 117 S. E. 17.

(13b) The mere fixing of a rate by the Railroad Commission, when it is the same as stipulated in a prior contract between shipper and carrier, does not of itself invalidate such agreement. Alexandria & W. Ry. Co. v. Long Pine Lumber Co., (La. 1922), 93 Sou. 199.

(13c) The state, under its police power, may fix rates, and no contract of private persons can deviate therefrom though made prior to such action by the state; but, so long as such agreements do not conflict with the rates and regulations officially prescribed, and there is no discrimination, the parties may stipulate as their interest may require. Alexandria & W. Ry. Co. v. Long Pine Lumber Co., (La. 1922), 93 Sou. 199.

(13d) The discrimination in the Mississippi Code against persons beginning a new business by which damages are imposed on "all persons liable for privilege taxes who shall fail to procure the license therefor before beginning the business taxed, or who shall fail to renew, during the month in which it is due, the license on a business on which he has heretofore paid a privilege tax," is not unreasonable, and therefore does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution. Robertson v. Southeastern Express Co., (Miss. 1922), 94 Sou. 210.

(13e) The privilege tax imposed on an express company by the state law, is on the intrastate business of the company, and the commerce clause of the federal Constitution (article 1, §8, cl. 3) is not violated when the tax is collected from an express company doing both interstate and intrastate business. Robertson v. Southeastern Express Co., (Miss. 1922), 94 Sou. 210.

(13f) The State Law by which a privilege tax is imposed on each express company of $6 per mile on all first class railroad tracks, and $3 per mile on all second and third class railroad tracks over which the company operates, the classification of the railroads to be made annually by the Railroad Commission, does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution because of the omission therefrom of a provision requiring notice to be given to the companies of the time when the roads will be classified. Robertson v. Southeastern Express Co., (Miss. 1922), 94 Sou. 210.

(13g) Under the Mississippi Code providing that every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and upon the grounds of such other railroad company, with necessary and proper turnouts, sidings, switches, and other conveniences, and to exercise the right of eminent domain for that purpose, as provided in the chapter on that subject, a railroad company seeking to make a junction or connection with another may proceed in accordance with the provisions of the chapter or eminent domain in the Code. Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Jackson & E. Ry. Co., (Miss., 1923), 95 Sou. 733.

(13h) Where two railroads, each getting their charter rights from the state, and lying wholly within the state, and engaged in both intrastate and interstate commerce, be near and contiguous to each other, the state may lawfully authorize or require a connection or junction between them, and may exercise the right of eminent domain to condemn the necessary property, even though such property may be already devoted to a public use, and the exercise of this power is not destroyed or taken away by any act of Congress, conceding, but not deciding, that Congress has the power to assume complete control of such subject under its power to regulate interstate commerce. Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Jackson & E. Ry. Co., (Miss. 1923), 95 Sou. 733.

(13i) In the absence of a federal statute, the status of a person receiving interstate transportation is defined, and the liability of the carrier to him for injuries sustained in the course of such transportation is regulated by the local or state law. Nevill v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co., (Tex. 1922), 244 S. W. 980.

(13j) The Statutes of Missouri, requiring all trains to be regularly stopped at county seats, cannot be strictly applied to interstate trains. State v. Public Service Commission, (Mo. 1923), 249 S. W. 65.

(13k) The failure of Congress to exercise its exclusive power to regulate commerce is an expression of its will that the subject shall be free for all restrictions or impositions upon it by the several states. State v. Public Service Commission, (Mo. 1923), 249 S. W. 65.

(13l) The federal Transportation Act of February 28, 1920, was not intended and does not withdraw from the state commissions having charge of the subject the power to make regulations and provisions for the establishment of stations for interstate travel, but only as relates to terminal stations and facilities where the amount involved is of such magnitude as to impose a burden on the carrier and interstate commerce, nor can it be deemed to be retroactive so as to invalidate for want of authority to make or open for review a final order of a state commission, entered in 1914, requiring the erection of a station on an intrastate road, which, because of financial stress, was not sought to be enforced until after the passage of that act. North Carolina Corporation Com'n. v. Southern Ry. Co. (N. C. 1923) 117 S. E. 563.

(13m) A finding of the State Corporation Commission as to the justness and duly compensatory character of an intrastate freight rate will be sustained by this court, where the finding is supported by substantial and satisfactory evidence. Kinney v. New Mexico Midland Ry. Co. (N. M. 1923), 214 Pac. 754.

(13n) The Fuel Administration Law, authorizing state fuel administrator to supervise and regulate receipts, sale, distribution, etc of fuel, and control allotment, apportionment, and rationing, and adopt and enforce necessary rules and orders, is not invalid, as unlawful delegation of power to make rules and orders. People v. Maynihan, 200 N. Y. S. 434.

(13o) The Fuel Administration Law, so far as it applies to deliveries by dealers after coal had arrived in their yards and was in their possession, related solely to intrastate commerce, and was not an interference with interstate commerce or in conflict with the federal Fuel Law. People v. Moynihan, 200 N. Y. S. 434.

(13p) Notwithstanding the authority as to rates of the Interstate Commerce Commission under Interstate Commerce Act, §§13, 15 (a), as respectively amended and added by Transportation act of 1920, §§416, 422, the state, through the state Commission, under Transportation Act, §208, and its sovereign power, has exclusive power and plenary control of an intrastate rate, after September 1, 1920, when the guarantee period ended, provided the rate fixed by it does not create a discrimination against interstate traffic. Lehigh & N. E. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (Pa. 1923), 121 Atl. 205.

(13q) Within Transportation Act of 1920, §208, providing that all rates which on February 29, 1920, are "in effect" shall continue till changed, etc., the Interstate Commerce Commission, having during the period of federal control sustained a complaint of an intrastate rate, and fixed a 25 cents per ton rate, such 25 cent rate was the one "in effect" when federal control ended; so that a finding by the state Commission that 25 cents was the fair rate after March 1, 1920, did not reduce a rate, but enforced the corrected rate. Lehigh & N. E. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission. (Pa. 1923), 121 Atl. 205.

(13r) Transportation Act of 1920, §208, providing that all rates in effect February 29, 1920, on lines of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act shall continue in force till changed by state or federal authority, respectively; but prior to September 1, 1920 "no such rate * * * shall be reduced * * * unless such reduction * * * is approved by" the Interstate Commerce Commission, does not require prior conditional approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission to enable the state Public Service Commission to entertain a complaint of an intrastate rate during the six months' guarantee period, ending September 1, 1920, but the federal Commission acts as a reviewing body on the determination by the state Commission, and must approve it to make it effective. Lehigh & N. E. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission. (Pa. 1923), 121 Atl. 205.

(13s) Though Congress by the enactment of effective and operative legislation thereby supersedes state laws in conflict therewith, legislation which simply refers a matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission, vesting with it jurisdiction to complete the legislative act, is not an effective assertion of the unquestioned power until the Commission has legally exercised the legislative authority so delegated to it, and though Interstate Commerce Act. §13, cls. 3 and 4, as amended by Transportation Act Feb. 28, 1920, §416, vest in the Commission the power after full hearing to remove all unjust discriminations against interstate commerce created by state statutes, the mere delegation of this power does not operate to immediately supersede all state statutes and destroyed all state power over the subject, in the absence of further action by the Commission. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Commonwealth, (Va. 1923), 118 S. E. 257.

(13t) The federal power to regulate interstate commerce is supreme, and, if a state statute or rule attempts to transcend the limited field in which the state statute or rule is operative, then to that extent it is invalid. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Commonwealth, (Va., 1923), 118 S. W. 257.

(13u) Whatever powers a state may deny to its Public Service Commission, it cannot give them power to do what the laws of the United States forbid, whether the action be called administrative or judicial. Whish v. Public Service Commission, 200 N. Y. S. 282.

(13v) When Congress exercises its exclusive powers over interstate commerce, the states cannot legislate on the subject, and the situation is covered as much by what is not done by Congress or the Interstate Commerce Commission, as by the regulations it has made, and the state has no power to fill what it may regard as a hiatus left by congress and the Interstate Commerce Commission. Whish v. Public Service Commission, 200 N. Y. S. 282.

STATION FACILITIES

See Facilities and Privileges §16½; Passenger Fares and Facilities §13.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The criterion of a place being a public station is the offer and capacity adequately to serve, without discrimination. St. Louis (Cupples Station) Terminal Regulations, 40 I. C. C. 425, 430.

(b) Commission held in a former case that it would not assume authority to outlaw any common carrier by rail at common law, as modified by constitutional or statutory authority, and thus put it out of business or deny its use to the public, so long as it is willing to hold itself out as a common carrier and perform its functions as such, and must hold the same opinion with respect to a necessary instrumentality of that service. St. Louis Terminal Regulations, 40 I. C. C. 425, 431.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

See Claims I; Loss and Damage §13½; Reparation §7.

STATUTES

CASES 1887-1908

(a) An Act being general and uniform in its operation, upon all persons coming within the class to which it belongs, is not special. Cited in Little Rock & F. S. R. Co. v. Hanniford (Sup. Ct. Ark.) 1 I. C. R. 580, 581.

(aa) There is no common law of the United States distinct from the common law of England as adopted by the several States, each for itself, applied as its local law, and subject to such alteration as may be provided by its own statutes. Cited in Smith v. Alabama (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 808.

(b) The Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company as reorganized by the purchasers in 1877 at the sale under mortgage foreclosure, is a lawful corporation of Arkansas, was not the same corporation as that chartered by the Legislature in 1853, but was a new corporation subject to the Constitution and laws in force when it came into existence. Dow v. Beidelman (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 56.

(c) The words "right of way," in a grant to a railroad company, describe the tenure, and not the land, granted. Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Lesueur (Ariz.) 2 I. C. R. 189.

(ca) The fact that statutory regulations of internal commerce are such as to preclude the literal enforcement of preexisting contracts does not affect their validity, or make them, in a constitutional sense, laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Such a consequence is often a necessary result of any considerable change in the general laws, and must be submitted to as such. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 2 I. C. C. 102, 112.

(cb) The Alabama statute disqualifying persons who are color-blind from certain service on railroads, and providing for their examination, and providing a fine upon any company employing any person for such service without a certificate from examiners, is not invalid as a regulation of commerce or as depriving any person of property without due process of law. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v.Alabama (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 238.

(cc) Requiring a railroad company to pay fees for examining persons for certain railroad service does not deprive them of property without due process of law. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 238.

(d) The party to whom or for whose benefit a right or privilege is given by statute may waive or surrender it in whole or in part, if he does not thereby destroy the rights and benefits conferred upon or flowing to another in or from said statute or other legal or equitable source. Northern P. R. Co. v. Raymond (Dak.) 2 I. C. R. 321.

(da) An Act making a railroad commissioners schedule prima facie evidence that the rates fixed thereby are reasonable is not an infringment of the constitutional guaranties of the right to trial by jury and against deprivation of property without due process of law. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey (C. C. S. D. Iowa), 2 I. C. R. 325.

(db) No privileges or immunities of citizens are affected by Iowa Code, §4059, making owners of Texas cattle liable for allowing them to run at large and spread Texas fever. Kimmish v. Ball (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 2 I. C. R. 407.

(e) Congress has express power to exercise exclusive legislation over the District of Columbia; but in creating the District of Columbia a body corporate for municipal purposes, Congress could only authorize it to exercise municipal powers. Stoutenburgh v. Hennick (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 409.

(f) A statute will not be presumed to have been intended by the Legislature to have any extraterritorial force, where such intention would make it unconstitutional. Stanley v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (Mo.) 3 I. C. R. 176.

(g) U. S. Const. 14th amend. §1, declaring that no State shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws," does not prohibit a State from imposing such conditions upon foreign corporations as it may choose, as a condition of their admission within its limits. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 178.

(h) Corporations are not citizens, within the meaning of U. S. Const. art. 4, §2, cl. 1, declaring that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 178.

(i) A law which, as construed by the Supreme Court of the State, allows a railroad commission to establish rates for railroads which are final, without issue made, or inquiry had, as to their reasonableness, and forbids the courts to stay the hands of the commission if the rates established by it are unequal and unreasonable, conflicts with the Constitution of the United States. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. v. State of Minn. 3 I. C. R. 209.

(j) Where no hearing is provided for, no summons or notice to the company, before the commission has found what it is to find and declared what it is to declare, and no opportunity provided for the company to introduce witnesses before the commission there is not the semblance of due process of law. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. v. State of Minn. 3 I. C. R. 209.

(k) Courts must uphold a statute, unless it is so plainly and palpably in conflict with the Constitution as to leave no doubt or hesitation in the judicial mind as to its invalidity. Burlington, C. R & N. R. Co. v. Dey (Iowa) 3 I. C. R. 584.

(l) The justice and policy of statutes are not matters for the consideration of courts. Burlington, Cedar Rapids & N. R. Co. v. Dey 3 I. C. R. 584.

(m) Where a statute is suspectible of conflicting and doubtful construction, that construction should be adopted which supports it in all its parts. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, (Iowa) 3 I. C. R. 584.

(n) There is no uncertainty in a statute prescribing the penalty for unreasonable railroad charges, and declaring that rates fixed by railroad commissioners as the maximum shall be prima facie reasonable, as the State is precluded from denying that the commissioners' rates are reasonable. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey (Iowa) 3 I. C. R. 584.

(na) A statute requiring freight in carload lots to be transferred without unloading unless the unloading is done without charge, and that smaller quantities shall be transferred into the cars of the connecting carrier at cost, which shall be made a part of the joint rate, does not interfere with the constitutional guaranties for the protection of the rights and property of the carriers. Burlington, Cedar Rapids & N. R. Co. v. Dey 3 I. C. R. 584.

(o) The New York law of 1888 regulating the fees for elevating and discharging grain by elevators, fixing maximum charges therefor, and also limiting the charge for trimming or shoveling to the leg of the elevator and for trimming when loaded, to the actual cost thereof, —is a proper exercise of the police power of the state. Bud v. New York (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 45.

(p) The legislature can fix a maximum beyond which any charge would be unreasonable for the use of property in which the public has an interest, but cannot compel the doing of services without reward. Budd v. New York (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 45.

(q) A foreign corporation cannot claim a right to do business in another state, except subject to the conditions imposed by its laws. Horn Silver Mining Co. v. State of New York, 4 I. C. R. 57.

(r) The Legislature may adopt any mode to arrive at the sum which it will exact as a condition of the creation of the corporation or of its continued existence. Horn Silver Mining Co. v. State of New York, 4 I. C. R. 57.

(s) Having the absolute power of excluding the foreign corporation, the state may impose such conditions upon permitting the corporation to do business within its limits as it may judge expedient, such as the payment of a specific license tax, or a sum proportioned to the amount of its capital. Horn Silver Mining Co. v. State of New York, 4 I. C. R. 57.

(sa) The granting of the rights and privileges which constitute the franchises of a corporation, may be accompanied with any such conditions as the Legislature may deem most suitable to the public interests and policy. Horn Silver Mining Co. v. State of New York, 4 I. C. R. 57.

(t) The title of "An Act to Regulate the Planting and Taking of Oysters in the Waters of the State" is sufficient to cover provisions against the taking of oysters by nonresidents, and the transportation out of the state by any person of oysters in shells. State v. Harrub (Ala.) 4 I. C. R. 99.

(ta) A statute denying the right of a corporation of another state to bring an action within the state until it has filed its articles of incorporation therein is inoperative as to an action brought for the purchase price of goods sold within the state by commercial agents or drummers, as this constitutes interstate commerce. Bateman Bros v. Western Star Milling Co. 4 I. C. R. 260.

(u) Investing a railroad commission with authority to make just and reasonable rules and regulations to prevent excessive charges and unjust discriminations and preferences by carriers, the reasonableness and legality of which is reviewable by the courts, is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power. Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 4 I. C. R. 294.

(ua) The word "trade," as defined by this court in the case of Re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89, does not mean interstate commerce, nor was such a meaning within the contemplation of the court at the time the decision was rendered. William C. Phipps v. State of Kansas, 4 I. C. R. 299.

(v) The provision of S. C. Act Dec. 24, 1892, §25, subd. 2, that any servant agent, or employe of a railroad or express company or other carrier, who shall remove any intoxicating liquors from any railroad car, vessel, or other vehicle of transportation, at any place other than the usual and established stations or places of business of such carriers within an incorporated city or town where there is a dispensary, shall be punished,—is not a valid exercise of the police power of the state, since it singles out one class of persons from the whole community for prosecution and punishment in contravention of S. C. Const. art. 1, §12, providing that no person shall be liable to any other punishment or subjected in law to any other restrictions or disqualifications in regard to any personal rights, than such as are laid on others under like circumstances. Re Lanford (C. C. D. S. C.), 4 I. C. R. 437.

(w) A statute must be read in the light of all general laws upon the same subject in force at the time of its passage. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 4, I. C. R. 443.

(x) Words which have acquired a well-understood meaning by judicial interpretation must be presumed to be used in that sense in a subsequent statute, unless the contrary clearly appears. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. (C. C. App. 8th C), 4 I. C. R. 443.

(y) Common-law terms used in an Act of Congress creating an offense without defining the terms may be interpreted by the common law. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. (C. C. App. 8th C.), 4 I. C. R. 443.

(z) A section of a statute prescribing penalties, and another section declaring the effects as evidence of rates fixed by commissioners, may be dropped as invalid without affecting the validity of the remainder of the statute, where it appears that its prime object was the establishment of rules for the operation of railroads and the regulation of their rates, which can be fully accomplished irrespective of the invalid sections. Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 560.

(aa) The fixing and enforcement by a railroad commission of unjust and unreasonable rates for transportation by railroad companies is an unconstitutional denial of the equal protection of the laws. Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 560, 578; Reagan v. Mercantile Trust Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 575, 577.

(bb) Outside of the Interstate Commerce Act there is no law of the United States as a distinct sovereignty, imposing any restraint upon the imposition by a carrier of unreasonable rates. Swift v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (C. C. N. D. III) 4 I. C. R. 633.

(cc) The regulation of the fees for elevating and discharging grain by elevators does not deprive the owner of his property without due process of law, —at least where the charges are not shown to be unreasonable. Budd v. New York (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 45; Brass v. North Dakota, Stoeser (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 670.

(dd) A statute changing a rule of evidence is applicable to a pending action. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones (Ill.) 4, I. C. R. 683.

(ee) Provisions in a statute as to unlawful discrimination in rates will, even if unconstitutional, not make invalid other provisions as to reasonableness of rates. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones (Ill.) 4 I. C. R. 683.

(ff) There is no unconstitutional delegation of power to railroad commissioners by a statute authorizing them to fix reasonable maximum rates of charges for freight and passenger traffic, where their schedule is not final, but is made merely prima facie evidence of the reasonableness of the rates established. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones (Ill.) 4 I. C. R. 683.

(gg) A statute prohibiting more than fair and reasonable rates by a railroad corporation, being merely declaratory of a common-law rule, although penal, does not deprive the company of its property without due process of law, because the statute does not fix any limit of the rates,—especially where a provision is made in the same statute for the fixing of rates by commissioners. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones (Ill.) 4 I. C. R. 683.

(hh) The Minnesota act to regulate the sale and redemption of transportation tickets of common carriers, and to provide punishment for the violation of the same, is not unconstitutional as "class legislation" granting special privileges to carriers. State v. Corbett (Minn.) 4. I. C. R. 694.

(ii) A statute prohibiting the sale of tickets except by licensed agents is not —at least as to tickets purchased after the passage of the Act—void as depriving citizen of his property "without due process of law." State v. Corbett (Minn) 4 I. C. R. 694.

(jj) No delegation of the police power of the state to grant licenses to engage in a business is made by a statute allowing the sale of tickets only by agents licensed by the carrier. State v. Corbett (Minn.) 4 I. C. R. 694.

(kk) The word "owner," as used in the Minnesota act regulating the sale of carriers' tickets, includes all those who operate a railroad or steamboat in the transportation of passengers,—as, for example, lessees, receivers, and the like. State v. Corbett (Minn.) 4 I. C. R. 694.

(ll) The United States government cannot demand that a contract, affecting property upon which it has a lien, and which is valid when made shall be annulled in toto upon the subsequent passage of a statute rendering some of its provisions not involving the others invalid. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 4 I. C. R. 705.

(mm) The prohibition contained in U. S. Const. 14th amend. against discrimination by a state because of race or previous condition of servitude, though securing to citizens certain fundamental rights as against state action, does not secure the joint and common enjoyment of such rights. Anderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (C. C. D. Ky.) 4 I. C. R. 764.

(nn) A statute requiring separate cars or compartments to be furnished white and colored passengers upon railroads is valid as a proper exercise of the police power of the state, when confined to the intrastate commerce of the state, and not applying to interstate commerce. Anderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (C. C. D. Ky.) 4 I. C. R. 764.

(oo) The Kentucky statutes requiring all railroad companies to furnish separate coaches or compartments for colored and white passengers does not violate U. S. Const. 14th amend. prohibiting discrimination by a state because of race or previous condition of servitude, as it prohibits any discrimination in the quality, convenience, or accommodations in the cars and compartments set apart for the different classes of passengers. Anderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (C. C. D. Ky.) 4 I. C. R. 764.

(pp) The Kentucky statute requiring all companies operating railroads within the state to provide separate cars or compartments for white and colored passengers is so broad as to embargo all passengers, including those whose passage commences or ends in other states, and is void as an interference with interstate commerce. Anderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (C. C. D. Ky.) 4 I. C. R. 764.

(qq) A classification of railroads as those which have been in operation for a certain length of time and those which have been recently built and limiting the rates which may be charged on the old roads, is not an arbitrary classification denying such roads the equal protection of the laws, nor does it make the statute invalid as class legislation. Ames v. Union P. R. Co. (C. C. D. Neb.) 4 I. C. R. 835.

(rr) A state statute requiring every person selling nursery stock grown in another state to file with the secretary of state an affidavit and bond of $2,000, and exhibit to every purchaser a certificate from the secretary, is unconstitutional as depriving citizens of other states dealing in a sound article of commerce produced therein, of the valuable privilege and immunity enjoyed by the citizens of the state, that every person shall be presumed honest and innocent of wrong. Re Schechter (C. C. D. Minn.) 4 I. C. R. 849.

(ss) The remedy by injunction against combinations and conspiracies to obstruct or destroy interstate commerce, given by the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, §1, is within the power of Congress. United States v. Elliott, 5 I. C. R. 148.

(tt) Laws 1894, chap. 698, providing that all convict-made goods outside of the state and imported into it shall, before exposure for sale, be marked "Convict Made," violates the provision of the Federal Constitution conferring on Congress the power to regulate commerce between the states. State of New York v. Hawkins, 5 I. C. R. 228.

(uu) Requiring the products of convict labor to be branded or labeled is unconstitutional, if its effect is to restrict the sale of articles in which property rights have already vested. State of New York v. Hawkins, 5 I. C. R. 228.

STOCK PILE

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Defendant transported coal, during Federal control, from mines on its lines to complainant's plant and subsequently furnished cars, power, and crew for intraplant movement over plant tracks from stock pile to point of use. Contention that commission has jurisdiction over charge for intraplant movement under section 206 (c) of the transportation act, 1920, in that service performed should be considered as secondary delivery not separable from line haul, not sustained. Line-haul movement was definitely ended by delivery and unloading upon complainant's stock pile. Grasselli Chemical Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 562, 564.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Carriers cannot make the yards of a certain company their exclusive stock depot at a certain place, there being other stock yards near by charging lower rates. Keith v. Kentucky Cent. R. Co. 1 I. C. R. 316, 601.

(b) Conveyed in Burton stock cars, rates for Burton Stock Car Co. v. Chicago, B. & &. R. Co. 1 I. C. R. 329.

(c) The defendant railroads are not justified by the plea of public convenience, in making the yards of the Covington Stock Yard Company their exclusive live stock depot at Covington, thus enabling such stock yard company to exact payment of those who are not its customers, for the privilege of passing stock to and from the cars, there being yards owned by other persons near to and on the same switch with the Covington Stock Yards, where the public may be suitably served at lower rates than the rates of the Covington Company. Keith v. Kentucky Central R. R. Co. 1 I. C. R. 601.

(d) The proprietors of such other yards have a right to be rivals of the Covington Company, and such of the public as desire to patronize such other yards have the right to do so and to have their stock shipped on equal terms and for like charges as those who patronize the Covington yards. Keith v. Kentucky Central R. R. Co. 1 I. C. R. 601.

(ef) Carriers cannot make the yards of a certain company their exclusive stock depot at a certain place, there being other stock yards near by charging lower rates. Keith v. Kentucky Cent. R. R. Co. 1 I. C. R. 601.

(fa) Complainant alleged unjust discrimination in that defendants compel all cattle shipped by or consigned to complainants to pass to and from the cars through the Covington stock yards and to pay therefor, although complainants have convenient stock yards of their own. HELD, the defendant railroads are not justified by the plea of public convenience, in making the yards of the Covington Stock Yard Company their exclusive livestock depot at Covington, thus enabling such stock yard company to exact payment of those who are not its customers, for the privilege of passing stock to and from the cars, there being yards owned by other persons near to and on the same switch with the Covington Stock Yards, where the public may be suitably served at lower rates than the rates of the Covington Company. The proprietors of such other yards have a right to be rivals of the Covington Company, and such of the public as desire to patronize such other yards have the right to do so and to have their stock shipped on equal terms and for like charges as those who patronize the Covington yards. The legal duty of carriers is not fully discharged by receiving and discharging livestock at a depot, access to which must be purchased. Keith v. Kentucky Central R. R., 1 I. C. C. 601.

(fb) That the yard of a stock-yard company is located in two States, and that the company does business in both, does not make its business interstate so as to prevent its regulation by the state or one of the States. Cotting v. Kans. City Stockyards Co. 7 I. C. C. App XCIX.

(g) Complainant attacked as unjustly discriminatory and unreasonable terminal charge of $2 assessed at Chicago by the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company, not absorbed by the carriers but passed on to the shippers. Livestock delivered to Chicago is necessarily delivered for marketing at the yards of the Union Stock Yards & Transit Company. In reaching its destination, carloads of livestock pass over the tracks of that company, which connect the various lines of the defendants with its yards. For many years the Transit Company has given the use of its tracks for this purpose, and the defendants have performed the service of moving without charge. Beginning June 1, 1894, the stock yards imposed a trackage charge upon each car moving in or out. Thereupon the various defendants agreed to and did impose and collect a terminal charge of $2 per car for the switching of all cars of livestock to the stock yards, in addition to the regular Chicago rate. HELD, that upon the circumstances of this case, the defendants might reimburse themselves for the trackage charge imposed by the Transit Company but that they ought not to exact any compensation for their services which they previously rendered gratuitously, and that the imposition of more than $1 per car as such terminal charge on livestock was in violation of section 1 of the act. Cattle Raisers' Asso. of Texas v. Ft. W. D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513.

(h) Defendant common carriers undertake to carry livestock through different states to the Union Stock Yards in Chicago, and until delivery is made at such yards the livestock is interstate commerce and subject to the act. Cattle Raisers' Asso. of Texas v. Ft. W. & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513, 539.

(i) The defendant, the Union Stock-Yards & Transit Company, having the option under its charter of becoming a common carrier or not, elected to and did become such carrier for dead freight to and from lines of other carriers in the city of Chicago, but it did not so elect to engage in the carriage of live stock between such lines and its stock-yards in Chicago. It imposes a trackage charge on other defendants for the use of its tracks in the transportation of live stock to and from the stock-yards, and such transportation is conducted wholly by such other defendants. HELD, That the Stock-Yards Company is not a common carrier engaged in the transportation of live stock within the meaning of section 1 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, and is therefore not subject to regulation in this proceeding. Cattle Raisers' Association v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513.

(j) Live stock shipped to Chicago is necessarily delivered for marketing at the yards of the Union Stock-Yards & Transit Company. In reaching its destination, carloads of live stock pass over the tracks of that company, which connect the various lines of the defendants with its yards. For many years the Union Stock-Yards & Transit Company has given the use of its tracks for this purpose, and the defendants have performed the service of moving without charge. Beginning June 1, 1894, the stock-yards imposed a trackage charge upon each car moving in or out. Thereupon the various defendants agreed to and did impose and collect a terminal charge of $2 per car for the switching of all cars of live stock to the stock yards in addition to the regular Chicago rate. HELD, that upon the circumstances of this case the defendants might reimburse themselves for the trackage charge imposed by the Union Stock-Yards & Transit Copmany, but that they ought not to exact any compensation for their services which they previously rendered gratuitously, and that the imposition of more than $1 per car as such terminal charge on live stock was in violation of section 1 of the Act to Regulate Commerce. Cattle Raisers' Association v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513.

(k) A corporation authorized by its act of incorporation to construct stock-yards, connect them with the various lines of railway entering the city of Chicago, and either lease such connecting tracks for the transportation of livestock and other freight between the railways and the stockyards, or transport live-stock and other freight over such connecting line itself, which elects to transport dead freight and furnish its own motive power and crews, but imposes a trackage charge on the railroad companies for the transportation of livestock over its track,—is not subject as to such livestock to the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce, which applies only to "common carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property." Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. 7 I. C. C. 513.

(l) Live stock shipped to Chicago with the understanding that it is to be delivered at the Union Stock-Yards in such city is subject to the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce until it is delivered at such yards. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. 7 I. C. C. 513.

(m) The imposition by a stock-yard company of a trackage charge for the use by a railroad companies of tracks leading to its yards, after the free use of such tracks for many years, will authorize the railroad companies to impose a terminal charge for the delivery of the stock, but not in excess of the trackage charge. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. 7 I. C. C. 513.

(ma) Defendants filed petition for rehearing, alleging error in the conclusions set forth in the report and opinion of the Commission, wherein, it was held that a terminal charge of $2.00 per car imposed by defendant carriers at Chicago for delivery of live stock at the Union Stock Yards in that city is unreasonable and unjust and that exaction of more than $1.00 per car for such service is unlawful, under section one of the Act to Regulate Commerce. HELD, Upon hearing of the parties and reconsideration of the record, that there was no error in the original determination; and, further, that the charge complained of and any charge for the terminal service at Chicago in excess of $1.00 per car constitutes undue prejudice to Chicage under section three of the statute. Cattle Raisers' Association v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 555a.

(n) A commission agent who sells cattle at their place of destination, which are sent from another state to be sold, is not engaged in interstate commerce; nor is his agreement with others in the same business, as to the commissions to be charged for such sales, void as a contract in restraint of that commerce. Hopkins v. U. S. 8 I. C. C. App. XVIII.

(o) A by-law of a stock exchange, which regulates the commission to be charged by members of that association for selling live stock, is not a restraint upon interstate commerce. Hopkins v. U. S., 8 I. C. C. App. XVIII.

(p) The business of buying and selling live stock at stock yards in a city by members of a stock exchange as commission merchants is not interstate commerce, although most of the purchases and sales are of live stock sent from other states, and the members of the stock exchange are employed to sell by letter from the owners of the stock in other states, and send agents to other states to solicit business, and advance money to the cattle owners, and pay their drafts and aid them in making the cattle fit for market. Hopkins v. U. S. 8 I. C. C. App. XVIII.

(q) An agreement among persons engaged in the common business, as yard traders, of buying at a city stock yard cattle which come from different states, that they will form an association for the better conduct of their business, and that they will not transact business with other yard traders who are not members, or buying cattle from those who also sell to yard traders who are not members of the association, is not a violation of the act of July 2, 1890, to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies. The court said: We are not called upon to decide whether the defendants are or are not engaged in interstate commerce, because, if it be conceded they are so engaged, the agreement is not one in restraint of that trade, nor is there any combination to monopolize or attempt to monopolize such trade within the meaning of the act. Anderson v. U. S. 8 I. C. C. App. XVIII.

(r) A combination of commission merchants at stock yards, by which they refuse to do business with those who are not members of their association, is not subject to the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, to protect trade and commerce. The court says: The business of defendants is primarily and substantially the buying and selling, in their character as commission merchants, at the stock yards in Kansas city, live stock which has been consigned to some of them for the purpose of sale, and the rendering of an account of the proceeds arising therefrom. The sale or purchase of live stock as commission merchants at Kansas City is the business done, and its character is not altered because the larger proportion of the purchases and sales may be of live stock sent into the state from other states or from the territories. Where the stock came from, or where it may ultimately go after a sale or purchase procured through the services of one of the defendants at the Kansas city stock yards, is not the substantial factor in the case. The character of the business of the defendants must be determined by the facts occurring at that city. Hopkins v. U. S. 8 I. C. C. App. XVIII.

(s) The business of agents in soliciting consignments of cattle to commission merchants in another state for sale is not interstate commerce; and a by-law of a stock exchange restricting the number of solicitors to three does not restrain that commerce. Hopkins v. U. S. 8 I. C. C. App. XVIII.

(t) The fact that a state line runs through stock yards, and that sales may be made of a load of stock in the yards which may be partly in one state and partly in another, does not make the business of selling stock interstate commerce. Hopkins v. U. S. 8 I. C. C. App. XVIII.

(u) The business of commission merchants at certain stockyards, receiving for immediate sale live stock shipped from different states, and, if the market at such yards is not satisfactory, reshipping it to another market, does not cease to be the subject of interstate commerce when the stock is unloaded into the stockyards, and is not a mere local instrumentality in aid of commerce, where such commission merchants by solicitors and advertisements reach out over states and territories and gather stock in for sale and slaughter, and their rules and regulations cover the entire business and extend over the whole field of operation. The court says; "The business of defendants is more than personal services; it is not merely a local instrumentality in aid of commerce. Defendants are active promoters and frequently interested parties in this immense traffic. They reach out over many states and territories by their solicitors and advertisements, and gather in for sale and slaughter millions of sheep and hogs, and their rules and regulations cover the entire business and extend over the whole field of operation." U. S. v. Hoppins, 8 I. C. C. App XXII.

(v) A stock-yards company performing the duties of a mixed traffic, interstate and local, is such an incident to commerce as may be restricted in its charges by state legislation, in the absence of congressional action. Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 8 I. C. C. App. XXXI.

(w) The passing of stock to and from over the state line, in stockyards located upon the boundary between two states, for convenience in feeding or handling, does not of itself impress the traffic with the character of interstate commerce. Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 8 I. C. C. App XXXI.

(x) By its original decision herein the Commission declared that a terminal charge of $2.00 per car on live stock for delivery to the Union Stock Yards in the City of Chicago was unlawful, and further that any such charge exceeding $1.00 per car would be unlawful, and continued the case for proof of damages to injured parties. The decision of the United States Supreme Court upon the petition to enforce the regulating order of the Commission (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., et al., 186 U. S. 320, 46 L. ed. 1182, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824) in general sustained the view of the Commission but dismissed the proceeding on account of a reduction in the through rate which had been made from certain territory not described in the record before it, which reduction amounted to more than the terminal charge and authorized the Commission to take further proceedings to correct any unreasonableness in the rate resulting from the additional terminal charge as to any territory to which such reduction did not apply. The reduction referred to took place in 1896 and the $2.00 terminal charge has been imposed by defendants since June 1, 1894. It follows that as to all shipping territory the defendants have, between June 1, 1894, and the date of the through rate reduction in 1896, unlawfully exacted $1.00 per car on live stock as the terminal charge in Chicago, and that in respect to the territory in which the reduction in through rate did not apply defendants have always since June 1, 1894, collected an excessive charge in Chicago to the amount of $1.00 per car. That branch of the case relating to reparation was properly held open pending determination of the other branch, and the decision of the Supreme Court in the case for enforcement of the regulating order of the Commission constitutes no bar to submission of proof before and action by the Commission upon the question of reparation. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. C., B. & Q. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 83.

(y) No estoppel arises out of the decree of the Supreme Court in this matter with reference to further proceeding and investigation by the Commission as to the legality of the terminal charge for the future. The Commission is not functus officio, for the court expressly states that the Commission still has a duty to perform as to that branch of the proceeding, and the mere use by the Supreme Court in its decree of the word "commencing" with reference to further proceedings is not construed to require the formal institution of an entirely new proceeding. The case will therefore stand re-opened for further investigation and order, with leave to complainant and intervener to show to what territory the through rate reduction of 1896 applied, and if it appears that there was territory to which such reduction did not apply and from which no reduction has been made, defendants will be allowed to show, since conditions may have changed subsequent to the making of the original order, that the through rate from that territory is reasonable and just notwithstanding the addition of the terminal charge of $2.00 per car in Chicago. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 83.

(z) It was conclusively determined by the decision of the United States Supreme Court (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., et al., 186 U. S. 320, 46 L. ed. 1182, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824) that the addition of the $2.00 terminal charge in Chicago on live stock from territory to which the above mentioned reduced through rate applied was not illegal, and it is now thereupon held that any subsequent advance in rates from that territory must be a matter for independent inquiry in a new proceeding. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 83.

(za) Complainant attacked terminal charge of $2 per car assessed by defendants at Chicago, Ill., on livestock for delivery to the Union Stock Yards, as unlawful. In 7 I. C. C. 513, the Commission found this charge to be unreasonable to extent it exceeded $1 per car and awarded reparation. The decision was appealed to the Supreme Court and that body in 186 U. S. 320, found the charge of $2 per car not unlawful, and requested the Commission to take further proceedings in the matter. The case will therefore stand reopened for further investigation and order, with leave to complainant to show to what territory the through rate reduction of 1896 applied, and if it appears that there was territory to which such reduction did not apply and from which no reduction has been made, defendants will be allowed to show, since conditions may have changed subsequent to the making of the original order, that the through rate from that territory is reasonable and just notwithstanding the addition of the terminal charge of $2 per car in Chicago. Cattle Raisers' Asso. of Texas v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 10 I. C. C. 83.

(aa) A railroad company does not violate the Act to Regulate Commerce in making and carrying out an exclusive contract with a stock yards company for the exclusive delivery to that company of live stock in the city of Louisville, although in carrying out such contract it refuses to deliver to another railroad company, for delivery to a competing stock yards, live stock consigned to such competing stock yards. Railroad Commission of Kentucky v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 173.

(bb) Defendant is party to a contract with the Bourbon Stock Yards Company for the exclusive delivery of live stock in the city of Louisville only to the yards of that company, and when livestock coming over its lines is consigned to the Central Stock Yards, a competitor of the Bourbon Yards, at Louisville, defendant refuses to transfer such live stock to the Southern Railway for delivery to the Central Yards. The defendant ought, in fair consideration of all interests, to deliver to the Southern Railway live stock so consigned to the Central Yards, but the question raised for determination is whether the Commission can by its order require this to be done. Decisions of Federal courts cited and applied and HELD: (1) That defendant in making and carrying out its exclusive contract with the Bourbon Stock Yards Company is not acting in violation of the Act to Regulate Commerce; (2) That the Act to Regulate Commerce does not confer upon the Commission authority to make an order affirmatively requiring a railway carrier to deliver carloads of interstate freight to a connecting carrier; (3) That upon the facts of this case it is not unlawful discrimination between commodities for the defendant to deliver carloads of dead freight to the Southern Railway for consignees in Louisville and to refuse delivery of livestock to the Southern Railway at Louisville when consigned to the Central Stock Yards. (4) That the Commission has no regulating authority beyond that conferred by the terms of the Act to Regulate Commerce and its jurisdiction does not extend to enforcing provisions in the Constitution of the State of Kentucky. Railroad Commission of Kentucky v. L. & N. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 173.

(cc) A railroad company does not violate the Act to Regulate Commerce by making and carrying out an exclusive contract with a stock yards company, by which it delivers all live stock transported by it to the yards of such stock company. Railroad Commission of Kentucky v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 173.

(dd) Section seven of the Act to Regulate Commerce is not violated by a railroad company in making and carrying out an exclusive contract with a stock yards company for the exclusive delivery to that company of live stock in the city of Louisville, although in carrying out such contract it refuses to deliver to another railroad company for delivery to a competing stock yards, live stock consigned to such competing stock yards. Railroad Commission of Kentucky v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 173.

(ee) It is not an unlawful discrimination between commodities, for the defendant railroad company to deliver carloads of dead freight to the Southern Railway for consignees in Louisville, and to refuse to deliver livestock to the same railway at Louisville consigned to a particular stock yards, where the defendant railroad company is under a contract with a competing stock yards company to deliver all live stock to such company. Railroad Commission of Kentucky v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 173.

(ff) Excluding the territory covered by the reduction of 1896, which is described in the findings, livestock rates to Chicago participated in by defendants were on May 31, 1894, reasonable compensation for the service performed, including delivery at the Union Stock Yards in Chicago. At all times since that date such rates have been, and now are, sufficiently high to include a delivery at the stock yards as such delivery was made prior to June 1, 1894. While since that time there have been advances and reductions from some points, they have been about equal, averaging probably less than one cent per 100 pounds and the great majority of rates remain the same as they were on May 31, 1894. These scattered reductions, as well as the advances, applied variously, some on cattle, some on sheep and others on hogs. No change in the rate has been made to offset the addition of the terminal charge in Chicago of $2.00 per car, or with any reference to such charge. The imposition of any such terminal charge, except in so far as the cost of delivery in Chicago has been increased by the trackage charge paid by defendants to the Stock Yards Company, since June 1, 1894, is unreasonable. Such increased cost of delivery, that is to say, such trackage charge, is fairly estimated for all the defendants at one dollar per car. Citing and applying Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co., 186 U. S. 320, 46 L. ed. 1182, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, HELD: First: that delivery to the Union Stock Yards prior to June 1, 1894, was included in the rate and was in no sense a gratuity; Second: That outside of the excluded territory, a terminal charge for delivery to the Union Stock Yards in Chicago of one dollar per car is reasonable and defendants' terminal charge of two dollars per car, exacted since June 1, 1894, is unreasonable; Third: That the case be retained for further proceedings in the matter of reparation. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 277.

(gg) Where the livestock rates to Chicago participated in by defendants constitute a reasonable compensation for the services performed, including delivery at the Union Stock Yards in Chicago, the imposition of a terminal charge of $2 per car is unreasonable. Cattle Raisers' Asso. of Texas v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 277.

(hh) Outside the excluded territory a terminal charge for delivery to the Union Stock Yards in Chicago of $1 per car is reasonable. Cattle Raisers' Asso. of Texas v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 277.

(ii) Complainant attacked as unreasonable terminal charge of $2.00 assessed by defendants for delivery of livestock at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago. In 7 I. C. C. 513 the Commission found this charge unreasonable to extent it exceeded $1.00, which was approved by the Supreme Court of United States in 186 U. S. 320. No change was made in the rate to offset the addition of the terminal charge in Chicago or with any reference to such charge. HELD: Reparation should be awarded on shipments moving since the publication of the $2 charge. Cattle Raisers' Asso. of Texas v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 277.

(jj) A railroad company may maintain its livestock depot at a particular point, although it neither builds nor repairs nor insures the stock pens into which the stock is unloaded, and does not hire or control the men who do the unloading; and whether the Union Stock Yards at Chicago have been, in railroad phraseology or in legal definition the depot of defendants is immaterial, for they were, and still are, in fact the point to which the stock is transported and unloaded under the shipping contract of defendants. Cattle Raisers' Asso. of Texas v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 277.

(kk) The present terminal charge for delivery of live stock at the Union Stock Yards in Chicago, amounting to about $2 per car, is unjust and unreasonable; and a reasonable charge would be $1 per car for such terminal services. Cattle Raisers' Asso. of Texas v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 296.

(ll) Complainant attacked the terminal charge of $2 per car imposed by defendants for the delivery of carloads of livestock at the Union Stock Yards at Chicago, Ill. This matter has been before the Commission in one form or another for the last ten years. HELD: The Commission sees no reason for reversing its former opinions, rate attacked unreasonable to extent it exceeded $1 per car. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. C. B. & Q. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 507.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(mm) Complainant is engaged in the city of Baltimore in conducting an abattoir for slaughtering live stock. It owns a side track connecting its plant with the P. B. & W. R. R., a part of the Pa. R. R. This side track has been in existence 20 years and has been used for the delivery of all classes of freight except live stock. In 1891, the Union Stock Yards Co. was organized, which took over the business of the Colverton and Claremont Stock Yard in Baltimore. Prior to that the complainant had established its plant on a piece of land purchased from the Claremont Co. and adjacent thereto. The consolidated company had yards situated about two miles from the yard of complainant. The defendants entered into a contract with the Union Stock Yards whereby they agreed to make "the said stock yards their live stock depot for Baltimore and vicinity and shall deliver at said yard all the live stock which may be transported over their line . . . . destined to the Baltimore market . . ." Defendants claim they had a right to agree to deliver at one stock yards exclusively in Baltimore. Complainant's live stock was unloaded at the Union Stock Yards and then driven through the streets of Baltimore by complainant two miles to their yard, at considerable expense and annoyance. Shipments by complainant and its tenant over the side track amounted to from 50 to 60 carloads a year. If live stock was delivered at its yard complainant estimated it would receive 15 carloads a week. HELD: The refusal of defendants to deliver to the side track of complainant's live stock consigned thereto was unreasonable and a violation of the law. Ordered that such delivery be hereafter made. Baltimore Butchers Live Stock Co. v. P. B. & W. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 124.

(nn) A stock yard company is not a common carrier and if its tariff is part of a scheme devised by shippers to secure under pretense of common carriage allowances otherwise illegal, the tariff should be cancelled Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 33 I. C. C. 92, 98.

(oo) A contract, entered into by a carrier to make a particular stockyards its sole terminal for delivery and receipt of live stock, in common with all other contracts, must be disregarded if in any way it transgresses or conflicts with any provision of the act. Nashville Abatoir,

Hide & Melting Asso. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C. 134, 141.

(pp) As the services of unloading and loading at the Chicago stock yards are part of the transportation of live stock, the collection of separate charges therefor from shippers, in addition to the rates to and from the stockyards, found an unlawful and unreasonable practice. Reparation awarded. Live Stock Loading and Unloading Charges, 58 I. C. C. 164, 167.

(qq) Among the amendments to section 15 of the interstate commerce act enacted in the transportation act, 1920, is one providing that the unloading and reloading services at public stockyards shall be performed without extra charge to the shipper, consignee, or owner. Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce v. Big Four, 60 I. C. C. 67, 75.

(rr) Among the amendments to section 15 of the interstate commerce act enacted in the transportation act, 1920, is one providing that the unloading and reloading services at public stockyards shall be performed without extra charge to the shipper, consignee or owner. Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce v. Big Four, 60 I. C. C. 67, 75.

(ss) Refusal of carriers to unload ordinary live stock from their cars into stock pens adjacent to packing plants of complainants, or to make an allowance for unloading such shipments, while, pursuant to section 15, paragraph (5) of the act, performing the service of loading at point of origin or unloading at destination such live stock shipped from or to public stockyards, without charge in addition to line-haul charges, not shown to violate the act. Omaha Packing Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 66 I. C. C. 44.

(tt) The Commission must assume that Congress legislated on the subject of the duties of common carrier by railroad concerning the receipt and delivery of live stock with full knowledge of the law as declared by the Supreme Court in Covington Stock-Yards Co. v. Keith, 139 U. S. 128, and therefor with the knowledge and purpose that public stockyards would be open to all shippers and consignees as the terminals of the carriers. Omaha Packing Co. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 66 I. C. C. 44, 51.

(tta) Section 15, paragraph (5) of the act, clearly refers to some service distinquishable from that involved in moving cars to or from public stock yards It is the delivery of inbound traffic into suitable pens for which no extra charge shall be made, and no additional charge can lawfully be made on live stock having been received and loaded at the yards. There is no inhibition against assessment of charges for service performed by a common carrier in hauling the loaded cars to or from a point of interchange with another carrier having the line haul. Omaha Live Stock Exc. v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 69 I. C. C. 692.

(uu) Following Omaha Packing Co, 66 I. C. C. 44, charges in addition to line-haul charges, for unloading and reloading en route ordinary live stock destined to private stockyard adjacent to packing plant of complainant, situated at Cactus, Ariz., while unloading and reloading such shipments destined to public stockyards without charge in addition to line-haul rates, found to result in undue prejudice to complainant in favor of competitors whose packing plants are adjacent to public stockyards. Arizona Packing Co. v. A. E. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 223.

(vv) Since the normal course of business at the stockyards is for cattle received by shipments from other states to be sold at the yards either to packers or to buyers, who will ship either the products or the stock itself principally to other states, the sale of the stock as it comes into the yards is a transaction necessary to the uninterriupted flow of interstate commerce, and therefor a part of such commerce, so that the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, authorizing the regulation of such sales, and by title 1, §2, par. (b), providing that a transaction in respect to any article shall be considered to be in interstate commerce if such article is part of that current of commerce usual in the live stock and meat-packing industries, was within the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. Stafford v. Wallace, 42 Sup. Ct. 397.

(ww) In the receipt of live stock by rail and in their delivery by rail for shipment to other states the stockyards are interstate commerce agencies. Stafford v. Wallace, 42 Sup. Ct. 397.

(xx) The various stockyards of the country are public utilities to promote the flow of commerce from the ranges and farms to the consumers, and conduct a business affected by a public use subject to regulation by legislative action. Stafford v. Wallace, 42 Sup. Ct. 397.

(yy) The acts of stockyards and live stock commission men, which Congress would have power to punish as a conspiracy to burden interstate commerce, it has power to prevent by regulation; the reasonable fear by Congress that such acts will probably and more or less constantly be used in conspiracies against interstate commerce serving the same purpose as the intent to obstruct interstate commerce in the conspiracy. Stafford v. Wallace, 42 Sup. Ct. 397.

(zz) Under Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, sec. 316, making applicable to suits for injunction against the orders of the Secretary of Agriculture the same procedure, original and appellate, provided in Act Oct. 22, 1913, for suits for injunction against the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which latter act gives a direct appeal to the Supreme Court from the granting or refusing of an interlocutory injunction, a direct appeal to the Supreme Court may be taken from the refusal of an interlocutory injunction against orders under the Packers and Stockyards Act. Stafford v. Wallace, 42 Sup. Ct. 397.

(3a) If the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 is unconstitutional, prosecutions for the severe penalties imposed by that act for violations of the orders of the Secretary of Agriculture thereunder, before opportunity can be given to test validity, may be enjoined by equity. Stafford v. Wallace, 42 Sup. Ct. 397.

(3b) It was a question for Congress, and not for the courts, to decide the nature of the evils present and threatening in the stockyards industry, and to take such steps by legislation within its power as it deemed proper to remedy them, but the courts in interpreting the Packers and Stockyards Act, in order to determine its validity, can consider the conditions under which Congress acted. Stafford v. Wallace, 42 Sup. Ct. 397.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSIT

See Express Companies §34; Facilities and Privileges, §15.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) A carrier is not compellable by law to give to the merchants of a town on its line the privilege of shipping their goods from the point of purchase to their own locality and again from thence to the place at which the goods may be sold by them at the same rate which would have been charged had there been but one shipment from the point of purchase to the point of ultimate delivery. Crew v. R. & D. R. R. Co., 1 I. C. R. 703.

(b) If, in the cases of shipments under a through bill of lading and a thru rate, the privilege of stoppage in transit at an intermediate point and trying the market there, and, if it be found unsatisfactory, of reshipping on to the point of original destination at the balance of the through rate, be lawful, the granting of it to one locality and denying of it to another under substantially similar circumstances, would be an unjust discrimination against the latter. Commercial Club of Omaha v. C. R. I. & P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 647, 677.

(c) Stopping a commodity in transit for treatment or reconsignment is in the nature of a special privilege which the carrier may concede, but which the shipper, under the present state of the law, cannot demand as a matter of lawful right; but carriers may not unjustly discriminate between markets or individuals in the granting of such privileges. St. Louis Hay & Grain Co. v. Mobile & O. R. Co., et al., 11 I. C. C. 90.

(d) The privilege of stopping hogs in transit shipped from western points to the east in order that they may be sorted and reconsigned under the thru rate from point of origin cannot be enforced against carriers in favor of a single point or shipper in the absence of lawfully established tariffs making such privilege open to the public at large. R. R. Shiel & Company v. I. C. R. R., 12 I. C. C. 211, 214

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) Proposed rule under which shipper is required to execute agreement for stoppage of goods in transit, and where shipper is unknown or irresponsible, the agent must require one or more sureties to sign with him, found justified Such rules indefinite as to number of sureties required, reposes too much arbitrary power in agents to decide who is or is not "responsible," compliance therewith might require considerable time and result in loss of right to stop because of delivery at destination, and, terms of agreement are inconsistent with recogniiton by respondent of any duty to obey the order to stop. Stoppage of Goods in Transit, 66 I. C. C. 423.

(f) Failure of defendants to accord arrangements for trying the market on live stock at East St. Louis, Ill., when originating at southwestern points and destined to St. Louis, Mo., while according such arrangements at other public markets, found not unduly prejudicial. To accord such service at East St. Louis would involve a back haul, while at such other markets the arrangement applies only in connection with traffic destined beyond where the transit point is in direct line of movement between point of origin and final destination. St. Louis Independent Packing Co. v. C. & A. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C. 459, 465.

(a) The business of elevating grain is a business charged with a public interest, and those who carry it on occupy a relation to the community analogous to that of common carriers, and may be controlled by public legislation for the common good. Budd v. New York (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 4 I. C. R. 45.

(b) The imposition by railroad companies of storage charges on some consignees, and not upon others, is prohibited by the Act to Regulate Commerce, §2, the intent of which is to prevent discrimination between individuals. American Warehousemen's Asso. v. Illinois C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 556.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) A storage company at Memphis is not subject to the Commission's jurisdiction. Pine Bluff Traffic Bureau v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 37 I. C. C. 218, 224.

(d) Reasonableness of insurance premiums paid by the carrier for the shippers' account for property stored by the carrier in a public warehouse pending acceptance by consignee is not within the jurisdiction of the Commission. Cottonseed Products Co. v. St. L. S. F. Ry. Co., 53 I. C. C. 574, 577.

(e) Storage of property transported is a transportation service only to the extent that storage is necessarily incidental to transporting such property, and the term has been used in section 1 of the interstate commerce act in that limited sense. CASES 1887-1908

(a) A charge by railroad companies for storage on some consignees, and not on others, is also prohibited by the Act to Regulate Commerce, §3, providing generally against undue preferences between shippers. American Warehousemen's Asso. v. Illinois C. R. R. Co., 7. I. C. C. 556.

(b) The So. Ry. Co., in applying to complainant's interstate traffic at Macon, Ga., the storage rates prescribed by the Georgia Railroad Commission, and the C., N. & L. R. Co., in applying to complainant's interstate traffic at Columbia, S. C., the storage rates prescribed by the South Carolina Railroad Commission, although such storage rates were in excess of the usual public warehouse charges in Macon and Columbia, does not violate the Act to Regulate Commerce. Blackman v. Southern R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 352.

(c) The Southern Railway Company in applying to complainants' interstate traffic at Macon, Ga., the storage rates prescribed by the Georgia railroad commission; and the Columbia, Newberry, & Laurens Railroad Company in applying to complainants' interstate traffic at Columbia, S. C., the storage rates prescribed by the South Carolina railroad commission, did not violate the Act to Regulate Commerce, although such storage rates were in excess of the usual public warehouse charges in Macon and Columbia. Blackman v. Southern R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 352.

(d) Complainant attacked storage charge of defendant on freight while in its freight warehouse at Macon, Ga., as unreasonable in that it exceeded the charge that would have been exacted had the freight been in public warehouse. HELD: Inasmuch as the freight warehouse and public warehouse are not used for similar purposes, and the storage charge was exacted primarily for the expeditious movement of freight, charge attacked not unreasonable, complaint dismissed. Blackman v. Southern Ry. 10 I. C. C. 352.

(e) A railroad freight depot and a public storage warehouse are not used for similar purposes, and the charge for storage in the railroad depot may properly be made higher than the public warehouse charge with the object of compelling the expeditious removal of freight. Blackman v. Southern Ry., 10 I. C. C. 352, 358.

(f) There is nothing to prevent the consignee, should he wish to do so, from removing goods from a depot to a public warehouse, where they would be subject to regular warehouse rates; but this transfer would involve drayage charges. The railways are not in the warehouse business, all their depot space being required for current business, and the storage rules and tariffs are adjusted with the object of securing freedom from blockade. Blackman v. Southern R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 352, 357.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(g) Carriers, voluntarily furnishing storage in cars are entitled to reasonable compensation beyond the cost of service. In Re Demurrage Charges, 25 I. C. C. 314, 324.

(h) While carriers may provide by definite tariff provisions free from undue discrimination, for the advancement of storage or transfer charge, the Commission is without authority to compel them to do so. Western Classification Case, 25 I. C. C. 442, 445.

(i) The storage of commodities outside of cars for the convenience of shippers while markets are being sought is not properly a carrier's function. It would be impossible for the carrier to provide such facilities for all commodities, or even for all shippers of any commodity. Reconsignment and Storage of Lumber and Shingles, 27 I. C. C. 451, 456.

(j) Carriers' storage charges are intended to prevent the accumulation and congestion of freight by inducing prompt removal from the carriers' premises. They are not ordinarily imposed for profit. The charges imposed by public warehouses, therefore afford no fair criterion of the reasonableness of a carrier's charges, nor is the value of the service rendered conclusive. The accomplishment of the purpose intended is the primary consideration. Cleveland Salt Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 34 I. C. C. 638, 639.

(k) Storage charges should be collected monthly as they accrue, and other charges at the time the service is performed. Iron Ore Rate Cases, 41 I. C. C. 181, 210.

(l) A carrier is not entitled to assess storage charges for the time during which it may have been in default in giving notice of a failure of the consignee to accept a shipment and is not entitled to assess charges for the time subsequent to the giving of notice where it had refused to make delivery to consignee except upon payment of charges which it was not entitled to collect. Toch Bros. v. C. of G. Ry., 41 I. C. C. 368, 369.

(m) In order to prevent overcharges and discriminations under the pretext of aditional services, Congress enacted in section 1 that the entire body of such services, many of them, according to the theory of the common law, separable from the carrier's service as carrier, should be included within the single term "transportation" and be subject to the provisions of the Act respecting reasonable rates and the like. And by section 6 no carrier may extend "any privileges or facilities," save as these have been duly specified. But the primary duty of a carrier is to carry. And it is not the duty of a carrier, as such, to furnish storage beyond the reasonable time necessary for unloading or removal. American Paper & Pulp Asso. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 41 I. C. C. 511, 512.

(n) Storage charges should cease on the date the order of the shipper is tendered to the rail carrier, or on the date the ship's permit to load is received by such carrier. It is to be remembered that the shipper must secure the ship captain's permit to load before he orders his shipment to ship side, and in case of through billed shipments the ship's permit to load is given the rail carrier's representative. If there is any delay in delivery to ship side after the receipt of the permit, or the order of the shipper, it is due to the neglect of the rail carrier to complete the transportation its tariffs and rates provide for. Any rule or practice that continues storage charges after the tender to the rail carrier by the shipper of an order to move his shipments to ship side, or after receipt by the rail carrier of the vessel's permit to load, is unreasonable. Export Freight Free Time, 47 I. C. C. 162, 177.

(o) It is no part of the carrier's duty to furnish cars for storage or warehouse purposes. Newman Lumber Co. v. G. & S. I. R. R., 49 I. C. C. 340, 341.

(p) Demurrage and storage charges are not assessed primarily for revenue purposes, but in part, at least, as a penalty to promote release and fullest use of equipment, tracks, and terminal houses, and the measure of such charges may not fairly be determined by the charges made by public warehouses. Barber & Co. v. C. C. C. & St. L. Ry., 51 I. C. C. 194, 196.

(q) Storage entails aditional expense and disadvantages which do not attach to through shipments, including switching, detention of inbound equipment, absorption of outbound switching charges, and expenses of accounting and readjustment of revenues, while carriers render substantially the same service as on local traffic, both inbound and outbound. Northern Potato Traffic Asso. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 58 I. C. C. 360, 364.

(r) Charges imposed by commercial warehouses afford no fair test of the reasonableness of storage charges imposed by common carriers. Kalamazoo Tank & Silo Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 418, 419.

(s) A vessel on which space engaged was commandeered by government while shipments in transit. While efforts was being made to secure space on other vessels, shipments unloaded and stored in order to release equipment. Demurrage and storage charges assessed found not illegal, unreasonable, or unduly prejudicial, as governing tariff did not limit the causes which may contribute to failure of a vessel to make its scheduled sailing. Dodge Bros. v. Director General as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 689.

(t) The right of Storage exists independent of statute and can not be added to or curtailed by anything in the carrier's tariffs. Space Rental Charges on Cotton, 66 I. C. C. 121, 123.

(u) A railroads function is to move traffic. The furnishing of storage is not a primary function. The free time provided for loading, unloading, and reconsignment has been fixed as the reasonable time within which cars should be released and made available for further movement. The shipper has no inherent right to detain a car beyond the free time and thus prevent it from being used for transportation by other shippers. Car shortages have resulted in incalculable loss in the past both to the carriers and the shipping public as a whole, and when it appears that shippers detain cars for purposes other than those necessary for proper transportation the carriers are justified in taking steps to prevent such abuses. American Wholesale Lumber Asso. v. Director General 66 I. C. C. 393, 407.

(v) The furnishing of storage is not a primary function of the railroads. American Wholesale Lumber Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 393, 407.

(w) Storage charges imposed by commercial warehouses affords no fair test of the reasonableness of storage charges imposed by common carriers. Dashields & Co. v. Director General 73 I. C. C. 225, 227.

(x) Storage charges on that portion of shipments of fruits and vegetables taken from cars for display purposes and placed in carriers' Bolton station, Baltimore, Md., found not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful. Tariff provided that "Freight, received for delivery or held to complete a shipment or for forwarding directions, if stored in or on railroad premises, is subject to storage rules." Bolton station is a facility used as an incident to its transportation service, and shipments were stored "in or on railroad premises." Dashields & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 225.

(y) Charges for ground storage on a car demurrage basis have been sustained by the commission in many cases. The underlying principle is that such charges are imposed, not primarily to produce revenue, but to accomplish a specific purpose, such as the prompt removal of the freight from the carrier's premises. If the purpose is reasonable and the charges are no higher than necessary to accomplish it, the charges are reasonable. Kidston & Co. v. D. L. & W. R. R. 74. I. C. C., 135, 139.

(z) Complainant attacked as unreasonable and unjustly discriminatory charges of $1,125 for storing at Chicago, Ill., from August 12, 1920, to Dec. 17, 1921, three automobies from Elkhart, Ind., to Chicago, consigned to itself notify Bush Auto Co. Car was placed for unloading August 2, 1920, notice of arrival sent. On August 11, 1920, the automobiles were unloaded by defendant and stored in a building adjoining its unloading platform. Applicable tariff provided storage rates of 4 cents per 100 pounds for first five days, and $2 per car per day thereafter. The building in which the storage took place was erected especially to care for automobile traffic and the space utilized in storing these cars was needed for current shipments. HELD, charges attacked not unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory, complaint dismissed. Huffman Brothers Motor Co. v. N. Y. C. R. R., 74 I. C. C., 671.

(aa) Railroad ordinarily engaged in the storage of goods only as an incident to transportation and their storage charges are usually so fixed as to afford not only compensation for space used but also an incentive to promote removal of goods from their premises. Huffman Brothers Motor Co. v. N. Y. C. R. R., 74 I. C. C. 671, 672.

(bb) The reasonableness of charges made by railroads for storage can not be measured by the charges made by commercial warehouses. Huffman Brothers Co. v. N. Y. C. R. R., 74 I. C. C., 671, 672.

(cc) Charges for ground storage on a car-demurrage basis have been sustained by the commission in various cases. The underlying principle is that such charges are imposed, not primarily to produce revenue, but to accomplish a specific purpose, such as the prompt removal of the freight from the carriers' premises. If the purpose is reasonable and the charges are no higher than necessary to accomplish it, the charges are reasonable. Kidston & Co. v. D., L. & W. R. R. 74 I. C. C. 139.

(dd) The reasonableness of charges made by railroads for storage can not be measured by the charges made by commercial warehouses. Huffman Bros. Motor Co. v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 672.

(ee) Railroads ordinarily engage in the storage of goods only as an incident to transportation and their storage charges are usually so fixed as to afford not only compensation for space used but also an incentive to prompt removal of goods from their premises. Huffman Bros. Motor Co. v. N. Y. C. R. R. 74 I. C. C. 672.

(ff) Carload shipment unloaded by consignee, at carrier's request, and stored on right of way. Storage charges accrued. HELD, Since tariff provided that "where c. l. freight is unloaded by carrier for purpose of releasing needed equipment, storage charge will be same as would have accrued under car-demurrage rules had freight remained in car," demurrage charges were applicable. Shipment was unloaded by consignee instead of by carrier, but at carrier's request. Reparation awarded. General Petroleum Corp. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 53.

(gg) Carriers may impose such storage charges as will compel the removal of freight from their premises, subject, however, to the limitation that the charges must not be unreasonable or otherwise unlawful. General Petroleum Corporation v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 53, 54.

(hh) Whether or not a sum urged by complainant as reasonable ground-rental charge is adequate, such sum affords no fair test of reasonableness of storage charges imposed by carrier. One element of difference is that in instance of storage on rented ground property would be in custody and at risk of owner. General Petroleum Corp. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 53, 54.

(ii) Shipments delivered by carrier in destination city at station other than that specified in routing instructions. Consignee notified of arrival and shipments subsequently stored in carrier's warehouse. Consignor requested storage in public warehouse but did not surrender order notify bills of lading or secure carrier by idemnity bond until after storage charges accrued, when delivery made to another party designated. HELD: While consignor might have insisted on delivery to station as routed storage charge accrued not because of misdelivery but because of customer's failure to accept. Storage charges assessed pending surrender of order notify bills or indemnity bond by party holding title to goods, not in violation of the act. Vim Motor Truck Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 72.

(jj) It is well settled that the reasonableness of storage charges assessed by a carrier may not fairly be determined by the charges made by public warehouses. Vim Motor Truck Company v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 72, 74.

(kk) Reasonableness of storage charges assessed by a carrier may not fairly be determined by charges made by public warehouses. Vim Motor Truck Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C 72, 74.

(ll) Contention that storage charges were inapplicable in that carrier had not procured disposition orders, in accordance with its practice, after giving notice of arrival, not sustained. Regardless of what practice of delivering carrier may have been with respect to procuring disposition orders, failure to procure such orders in absence of tariff requirement, after notice of arrival given in accordance with governing tariff, does not affect time when storage charges accrue. Charges are governed by applicable tariffs and not by practice of carriers. Quaker Oats Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80, I. C. C. 75.

(mm) A railroad had no right to carry on a storage business, but can only store cars and merchandise as incidental to its duty to transport. Bessemer & L. E. R. Co. v. Ford Collieries Co. (Pa. 1922), 116 Atl. 802.

III. TARIFFS AND CONSTRUCTION.

See Tariffs.

§3. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Upon investigation of alleged unlawful practices of carriers in granting free storage of freights and other specified privileges to shippers. HELD, that charges made by carriers for transportation and terminal services, and all rules and regulations which in any wise change, affect or determine the aggregate compensation paid therefor, are required by the statute to be shown upon their published rate schedules and under such requirements it is the duty of all carriers subject to the act to so publish and thereupon enforce each and every of their charges, rules and regulations concerning the storage of freights, diversion of cars to shippers use, distribution of freight in part lots, reconsignment of freight and all kindred concessions or privilege without due publication thereof in such schedules. That in view of the very general allowance in various forms of some or all of the privileges involved, a general order directed to all carriers subject to the act should be issued. American Warehousemen's Asso. v. I. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 556.

(b) Carriers may be required by the Interstate Commerce Commission, by a general order, to state in their tariffs what free storage facilities will be allowed and the terms and conditions under which they will be granted, under the Act to Regulate Commerce, §1, providing that all charges for storage of property transported shall be reasonable and just, and §6, providing that the schedules printed as aforesaid shall state separately the "terminal charges" and any rules or regulations which "in any wise affects or determine" any part of the aggregate of such rates and charges. American Warehousemen's Asso. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 7 I. C. C. 556.

(c) Carriers are very generally extending privileges of storage to particular shippers without any mention of them in their published tariffs. It seems clear that in such a situation the Commission may, by a general order, require carriers to state in their tariffs what free storage is granted and the terms and conditions under which it will be granted. American Warehousemen's Asso. v. I. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 556, 592.

(d) By section 1 of the law, storage is named as a service in connection with transportation, and the charges therefor are required to be reasonable and just. The schedule of rates required by section 6 of the act to be printed, posted and filed with the Commission should state, among other terminal charges, the rules and regulations, if any, of the carrier in relation to storage. Pennsylvania Millers' State Asso. v. P. & R. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 531, 559.

(e) Storage rates and regulations enforced by common carrier subject to the Act must be published at their stations and filed with this Commission. Blackman, v. Southern Ry., 10 I. C. C. 352, 359.

(f) The Southern Railway Company in applying to complainants' interstate traffic at Macon, Ga., the storage rates prescribed by the Georgia Railroad Commission, and the Columbia, Newberry & Laurens Railroad Company in applying to complainants' interstate traffic at Millers' Asso. v. P. & R. R. Co. 8 I. C. Columbia, S. C., storage rates prescribed by the South Carolina Railroad Commission did not violate the Act to Regulate Commerce, although such storage rates were in excess of the usual public warehouse charges in Macon and Columbia. Blackman v. Southern R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 352.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(g) An exception in a tariff providing that certain commodities may be stored free in case the owners secure permission from the proper officer of the carriers is objectionable inasmuch as it is left to the discretion of the officer as to whether the privilege shall be enjoyed, and the exception should be made more definite by providing that the check of the carrier may designate, without distinction, space for the storage of such commodities, pending shipment thereof to the extent that such space is available. Storage Charges in Central Freight Ass'n Territory, 28 I. C. C. 372, 375.

(h) Off track storage by a carrier at destination in its warehouse or otherwise, is controlled by the tariff in effect at the time such storage begins. Roy & Roy Mill Co. v. B. & M. R. R., 44 I. C. C. 523, 524.

(i) Charges at point short of billed destination found unauthorized and unlawful, as carriers contracted to make delivery specified in bill of lading on through shipments from point of origin to destination. Reparation awarded. Ulary v. P. R. R. Co., 58 I. C. C. 439.

(j) The carrier's liability to the owner is the same when the property remains out of doors as when placed in the freight house, and the Commission does not feel warranted in requiring a carrier to publish rules which give the shipper an alternative of directing whether his property shall be stored on the station platform or right of way, or in the freight house. Dakota Monument Co. v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 101, 104.

(k) Due to a strike of lightermen, carriers refused to accept order for delivery of export shipment to steamship. On day steamer arrived second order was tendered for delivery to another steamship, and was accepted subject to delay. HELD: Storage charges accruing not found unreasonable or unlawful as complainant gave orders for different delivery and carriers would have been without authority to act upon first order even if accepted. Cade (Inc.) v. P. R. R. Co., 60 I. C. C. 151.

(l) Failure of carrier to notify complainant of arrival of a shipment, consigned to itself in care of a warehouse company, in time to comply with tariff requirements necessary to secure the application of joint rate from origin to ultimate destination, resulted in the loss of that privilege. HELD: As complainant made arrangement with warehouse company for receipt and storage of the shipment, he recognized that company as his agent and delivery to the warehouse constituted delivery to complainant. Scattergood & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 155.

(m) On shipments unloaded by consignee or at consignee's request by the carrier, charges under a tariff rule providing for assessment of storage charges on basis of demurrage rules while shipments in cars and storage charges after unloading, found legally applicable. Refund of overcharges directed. Harlem Feed & Grocery Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 652.

(n) Demurrage and storage charges on cars specifically ordered to public delivery tracks but held in storage yard because public delivery tracks occupied, found to have been illegally assessed. Tariffs made no provisions for constructive placement of cars ordered to public delivery tracks and there were no other tracks available to consignee upon which delivery could have been made as contemplated by the tariff rules. Refund directed. Schule's Pure Grape Juice Co. (Inc.) v. Director General, as Agent, 63 I. C. C. 129.

(o) Storage of property transported is a transportation service only to the extent that storage is necessarily incidental to transporting such property, and the term has been used in section 1 of the interstate commerce act in that limited sense. Guaranty Claim of Central Elevater & Warehouse Co., 72 I. C. C., 169, 176.

(p) Tariff rule provided for assessment of storage charges equivalent to demurrage charges on property stored on the ground unless written request is made to have the property unloaded. Charges exacted on such basis for the detention of shipments received at New York, N. Y., and Philadelphia, Pa., for export, found not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful. Shippers failed to make request for unloading as required by the rule, and defendants themselves unloaded the freight. Kidston & Co. v. D., L. & W. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 135.

(q) Tariff provided storage charge of $10 per car for each day that a car is held for reconsignment after expiration of free time. After arrival of shipment at original destination, reconsignment order was given. Subsequently second reconsignment was directed. Contention of carrier that inasmuch as it received second instructions before executing original order, the car was held for the latter reconsignment during the entire period, HELD: Demurrage and penalty charges found inapplicable as detention was occasioned by carrier's failure to promptly comply with original order. Reparation awarded. Central Wisconsin Supply Co. v. C., C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 485.

(r) Complainant attacked storage charges on iron pipe which remained on the carriers premises at Pico, Calif., during the period from Oct. 1, 1919 to Jan. 21, 1920, as unreasonable. Pico is on the L. A. & S. L., about 10 miles east of Los Angeles. Pipe was unloaded the day following arrival at request of carriers agent who sought the prompt release of the car. The storage charges as assessed were applicable to carload freight unloaded in or on railroad premises. HELD, storage charges attacked unreasonable to extent they exceeded those applicable on carload traffic, reparation awarded. General Petroleum Corporation v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 53.

(s) Contention that storage charges were inapplicable in that carrier had not procured disposition orders, in accordance with its practice, after giving notice of arrival, not sustained. Regardless of what practice of delivering carrier may have been with respect to procuring disposition orders, failure to procure such orders in absence of tariff requirements, after notice of arrival given in accordance with governing tariff, does not affect time when storage charges accrue. Charges are governed by applicable tariffs and not by practice of carriers. Quaker Oats Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 75.

(t) Regardless of what the practice of the delivering carrier may have been with respect to procuring disposition orders, the failure to procure such orders in the absence of tariff requirements, after notice of arrival is given in accordance with the governing tariff, does not affect the time when storage charges accrue. In other words, charges are governed by the applicable tariffs and not by the practice of the carriers. Quaker Oats Co. v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 75, 76.

(u) The tariffs and rules of plaintiff railway company filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission provided under head "Storage" that carload shipments of explosives or other dangerous articles should be subject to both demurrage and storage charges, while another rule provided that on less than carload shipments of the more dangerous explosives unloaded in or on railroad premises 25 cents per 100 pounds should be charged for storage for each day of 24 hours in which the articles were held in excess of the free time, while on carload shipments $5 per day, in addition to the regular demurrage charges, should be collected. Less charges were prescribed for the storage of the less dangerous and relatively safe explosives. HELD, that under the rules, the railroad company could, where gasoline was stored in tank cars on siding, collect both demurrage charges and storage; the rule being different as to less than carload lots unloaded on the railroad premises. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. Ry. v. Freedom Oil Works, 247 Fed. 573.

STORAGE IN TRANSIT

See Storage.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Ordinarily, where storage in transit is accorded, the through rate from point of origin to ultimate destination in effect at the time the shipment originated is applied. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 567.

(b) Complaint alleges that certain rules, regulations, and charges applied by defendants on carload shipments of potatoes from Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin to points in western trunk line territory were violative of various provisions of the Act. The shipments were stored in transit at St. Paul, Minneapolis, or Minnesota Transfer and charges were collected at the through rates applicable from points of origin to final destination plus a storage in transit charge of 3c per 100 lbs. In addition, a car rental charge of $5 per car for each movement to and from the storage point was assessed on shipments which moved in refrigerator or other insulated cars during the period from October 15 to April 15, in each year. Where the shipment moved inbound in a box car and outbound in a refrigerator or other insulated car, or vice versa, but one rental charge was attacked as illegal wherever assessed on railroad owned cars on the ground that the tariffs provided for its application only on private cars. The tariffs do not distinguish between rail owned and privately owned cars, but applies alike to both. The tariffs referred to have been used in connection with each other and have been looked to by shippers and carriers for years as authority for the rental charges on potatoes in refrigerator or insulated cars, whether private or railroad ownership, and so far as appears their meaning has not heretofore been questioned. HELD, the rental charge of $5 per car was and is legally applicable on refrigerator or other insulated cars. Complainant also contends that if any rental charge was applicable it was unlawful for defendants to assess it on both movements; that is, into and out of storage. The item naming the rental charge reads: "$5 per car per trip. A trip is one continuous running trip from the time car is loaded to the end of its journey, where it is unloaded and released. The use of the car, either into or out of the storage point, is wholly independent of the subsequent or prior movement, as the case may be. For each separate use of a car the carrier is entitled, under the tariff, to make a separate charge. It is also alleged that the exaction of a car rental charge in addition to the storage in transit charge on shipments of complainants members, while no such rental charge is applied on competitors shipments from Colorado and Utah which are stored in transit and subsequently move to the destination territory here involved, is unjustly discriminatory and unduly prejudicial. It does not appear, however, that the defendant carriers prior to federal control were responsible for the more favorable treatment accorded the Colorado and Idaho shippers or that they could remedy the situation by any reasonable act of their own, and the evidence is not sufficient to warrant a definite conclusion on the question presented during federal control. The reasonableness of the 3c storage in transit charge was also brought in issue. Originaly no charge was made for this storage, when a charge of $2 per car was published. Three years later a rule permitting free stoppage was again published, and the storage period extended from 60 days to six months. That rule remained in effect for one month, when a storage charge of 1.5c per 100 pounds was proposed. That charge was suspended and found justified in 35 I. C. C. 497 and 37 I. C. C. 114. On March 15, 1917, the present charge of 3c was established. A 3c charge is provided by various western lines for transit services on potatoes and onions at Minneapolis and St. Paul, Sioux City, Iowa, Chicago, and Peoria, Ill., and numerous other points. On apples from the north Pacific coast the charge at various storage points is and for some time has been 5c per 100 lbs. HELD, storage in transit charge not unreasonable. Complaint dismissed. Northern Potato Traffic Asso. v. G. N., 58 I. C. C. 360.

(c) Storage in transit entails additional expense and disadvantages which do not attach to through shipments, including switching, detention of inbound equipment, absorption of outbound switching charges in certain instances, and the expense of accounting and readjusting revenues, while the carriers render substantially the same service as on local traffic, both inbound and outbound. Northern Potato Traffic Asso. v. G. N., 58 I. C. C. 360, 364.

(d) Respondents propose to cancel their charge for storage in transit at intermediate points on the P. & R., the C. of N. J., and the N. W., of carload shipments of apples moving in the direction of the Atlantic Seaboard via regularly established routes. The charges now applicable on shipments stored in transit at intermediate points are based on the through rates from points of origin to final destination plus a storing in transit charge of 7c per 100 pounds. Cancelation of the storage charge would result in the application of combination rates to and from the storage points which are higher. The arrangement which respondents seek to cancel is part of the general system of storage in transit in effect on apples in official and western classification territories. The transit provision under suspension was first made effective as food conservation measure. Similar services had been accorded for a number of years by lines in western classification territory to and including Chicago, and by the Erie and New York Central in trunk line territory. The arrangement in question is restricted to apples in boxes, barrels or crates, moving outbound within one year from the date of freight bill on the inbound movement. The average revenue per car under the 7c charge is about $30. No evidence was offered by respondents bearing upon the reasonableness of the combination rates which would result from the proposed cancelation, or to show that the charge of 7c is not a reasonable maximum charge for the service in question. HELD proposed schedules have not been justified, and they should be canceled. Transit rules and regulations on fresh apples, 60 I. C. C. 333.

(e) Proposed increased charge for storage in transit in the eastern and western groups of apples and pears, moving in transcontinental traffic, found not justified. Only justification offered is that the proposed charge should have been increased to basis sought following Increased Rates, 1920, 58 I. C. C. 220, but as the time limitation prescribed in that case had expired prior to the filing and effective date of the suspended schedules, justification of the increase must be based upon other foundations. Storage Charges on Apples and Pears, 64 I. C. C. 627.

(f) Respondents proposed to cancel the storage in transit arrangements at Minnesota Transfer, Minn., and certain other points, on import traffic moving from the Pacific coast ports to points south of the Ohio and Potomac rivers and east of the Mississippi river, leaving in effect on such traffic when stored in transit combination rates higher than the joint import commodity rates applying from the ports to ultimate destinations. In 68 I. C. C. 572, the proposed schedules were not found justified. Respondents petitioned for rehearing. About 60% of the import traffic is stored at Minnesota Transfer. The outbound movement is usually less carload and the less carload rates are applied from the port to final destination. The applicable import commodity rate is blanketed to all points east of the Colorado common points and in connection therewith the transit arrangement would continue to be available except to the southeastern territory here considered. The storage at Minnesota Transfer is of great advantage to transcontinental carriers and also to shippers. Nothing in the record justifies a like consideration of domestic traffic. No evidence was presented by respondents as to the quantum of the combination of carload rates to Minnesota Transfer and less carload rates beyond which would result on this traffic if the proposed schedules were allowed to become effective. HELD, respondents have not justified the cancellation. Storage rules at Minnesota Transfer, 78 I. C. C. 265.

(g) Proposed transit arrangement for storage of cement at Davenport, Iowa, found not justified. Such action would be followed at other important points, and carrier competition would lead to establishment of similar arrangements on such scale as to undermine existing rate structure. There is no substantial demand for transit on this commodity, and, on contrary, a large majority of cement manufacturers and many carriers are opposed to it. Rules for Storing and Stacking Cement, 78 I. C. C. 693.

(h) Complainant attacked defendants' failure to permit a stop in transit on cement silo staves from Peoria, Ill., to Wisconsin destinations, for the purpose of partial unloading, while according such stop on wooden silo staves moving in the same destination territory as unduly prejudicial. Commodity rates are applicable on cement silo staves, minimum 60,000 pounds. Because of this minimum it is desirable to ship enough staves in one car for two silos. The rates to Wisconsin points on wooden silo staves are somewhat higher than on cement staves, but the minimum is one half that on cement staves. Wooden silo staves are permitted to stop carload shipments in transit at points in Wisconsin for partial unloading at a charge of $6.30 per car in addition to the rate. Competition in the scale of cement and wooden staves is very keen in Wisconsin. HELD, refusal to permit partial unloading on cement silo staves is unduly prejudicial. Michigan Silo Company v. C. & N. W. Ry., 88 I. C. C. 467.

(i) Respondent, Rock Island, proposed to establish rules under which cement, in carloads, might be stopped in transit at Davenport, Iowa, stored, sacked, and reshipped within six months at a charge of 2.5c per 100 pounds over the through rate. In 78 I. C. C. 693, the Commission found the suspended schedules not justified. Case was reopened on petition of respondents. Cement generally moves in carloads direct from manufacturer to point of consumption. It accumulates at the plants during the late fall and winter, and moves in much greater volume during the remainder of the year. As compared with through movements, shipments taking transit require two additional services equivalent to terminal service, and involve the incident delay. Twice instead of once empty cars must be provided, and twice instead of once empty cars are returned to the carrier. Considered from an operating standpoint, and without reference to car supply at the time of the two separate movements, transit is wasteful of equipment. The justification for the proposed arrangement is that the shipment is nearer its destination. The gain in time would not be great. It may be that from the standpoint of the larger users of cement this saving would be material, and may determine the source from which his cement should be ordered. But it does not follow that, to respondent and to the shipping public generally, the saving would justify the use for the through transportation of two cars in the separate movements instead of one. Under present conditions the Commission does not believe that the national railway system as a whole, or the western carriers considered collectively can afford to divert to the cement traffic the additional cars, or to give to it the additional transportation service, that transit on that commodity would require. The transit service under consideration would result in little or no operating economy to respondent and in the substantial impairment of its service to shippers, including shippers of cement. HELD, suspended schedules not justified.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where a railroad company granted a right of way to a public service railway company to operate street cars across a plaza giving access to the railroad company's ferries, the public service company could not fence its right of way as a regulation of the plaza in the right of the railroad company, which, while having a right to reasonably regulate the plaza, could not exclude local carriers awaiting passengers from the ferry, when it appears that the fence would have such effect. CASES 1887-1908

(a) While every man has ordinarily the legal right to stop work and quit his employment whenever he chooses to do so, in the absence of a contract obligating him to continue for a definite time, no man has a legal or moral right while continuing in the employment of another to refuse to do the work he is employed and engages to do. (b) Boycotts are unlawful though unaccompanied by violence or intimidation. Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., (C. C. S. D. Ohio) 4 I. C. R. 788.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) Complainants alleged that, due to default by carrier, occasioned by a strike among its freight handlers, at New York, N. Y., complainants were subjected to the payment of unreasonable and discriminatory charges on certain interstate shipments destined to the carrier's piers 28 and 29, New York, but received at Jersey City, N. J., and thence drayed by consignees to their places of business. The placement of shipments having been rendered impossible by the strike, the carriers requested consignees to accept delivery in Jersey City, agreeing to assume the drayage charges to New York. HELD: (1) That the carrier defaulted in its obligation to make delivery at piers 28 and 29, of shipments consigned to New York and (2) that the drayage by consignees from Jersey City to New York was in lieu of a transportation service which should have been rendered by defendant. Reparation to be awarded. Natl. League of Com. Merchs. v. Penn. R. R., 49 I. C. C. 85.

SUBSTITUTION OF TONNAGE

See Facilities and Privileges, §15, §20.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Tariffs permitting privileges in transit should recognize the obvious fact that loss of wheat at the milling, cleaning, or drying point will result and should not permit a shipment from said point of a weight equal to the weight of the raw material shipped into such point, since the local shipper at the transit point may be adding new material to the shipment to defeat the thru rates. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 288.

(b) A local shipper at a point where transit privileges are allowed should not be permitted to ship out from the transit point a shipment equal in weight to that received at the transit point for the purpose of enabling such local shipper to be placed on an equal footing with his competitors at the point of origin and the point of destination. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 289.

(c) Shippers at points enjoying transit privileges on wheat were accustomed to blend different kinds and grades of wheat received from different points of origin and at varying rates and to dispose of a portion of the flour made therefrom in the local market at the transit point. They then shipped out the remainder on the bills of lading which would give them the lowest thru rate from point of origin to point of destination. HELD: The local supply and local disposition should be kept separate from the transit supply and product by the carrier; the billing should be properly canceled for all local disposition; proper and frequent check should be made of grain and product and billing on hand; and billing in excess of grain and product on hand should be canceled, the oldest billing being selected for that purpose. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 290.

(d) The practice by jobbers of sending forward to retailers from transit points mixed carloads of various commodities as transit of solid carloads of such commodities is not unlawful where there is no local supply at the transit point, the billing is cancelled on all tonnage disposed of locally and the tonnage and billing on hand are checked at reasonably frequent intervals, and billing in excess of tonnage on hand is canceled, selecting for such cancelation the oldest billing, but in so far as there may be local supply of any of the commodities sent forward on this transit arrangement, the carrier must look out that substitution of the local supply is not made to complete the deficiency caused by local consumption. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 291, 292.

(e) Where jobbers at transit points in shipping to dealers make up mixed carloads of grain received in part on transit rates and in part on non-transit rates, the shipments represent the average of the various shipments received, and corresponding billing should be canceled by the carrier instead of permitting the entire mixed carload to be charged against a solid carload from which it could not properly be produced. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 292.

(f) Makers of mixed feed milled together at a transit point a number of grains and sometimes cottonseed meal and molasses, producing what was practically a new commodity from various substances, some received upon transit rates and others secured either locally or upon non-transit rates. The cars of the mixture thus produced were forwarded from the transit point in solid cars of grain. HELD: The practice was improper and should be forbidden where there is such a process of manufacture and such a loss of identity of the inbound commodity that the shipment forwarded may be said to be a new creation. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 292.

(g) Certain tariffs provided that non-transit commodities (such as stone, grit, or molasses) might be added to transit commodities (such as grain or seeds) at transit points, and a weight of the mixture equal to the weight of the inbound transit commodities forwarded as product. HELD: The tariff was unlawful in that a less-than-carload lot of the non-transit commodity went forward at a lower rate than the less-than-carload rate properly applicable, and even lower than the carload rate from the transit point proper. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 292.

(h) Mixed feeds and like products must go forward from the transit points in amounts containing at least the carload minimum weights of transit commodities taking the transit rates, and with the proper local rate (either carload or less-than-carload as the weight may be) imposed upon the non-tran- commodites in the mixture. This rule must be followed wherever the non-transit property added is sufficient in amount to form a really calculable portion of the mixture. A like rule must be applied where the dealer desires to include a load of non-transit grain or other commodity in a carload of grain or other property. If the transit portion of the shipment is to move upon the balance of a carload rate is must be of itself not less than the carload minimum in weight, and the non-transit tonnage in the car must be charged with the proper local rate. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 293.

(i) At certain transit points the price of commodities was frequently dependent upon the expense bill for the inbound shipment furnished by the seller, a higher price being paid if such bill was peculiary valuable for outbound shipment. HELD: The additional price paid in consideration of expense bills of a certain character amounted to a purchase of the bills and the practice should be prevented by the carriers. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 293.

(j) Under transit privileges at Memphis, Tenn., the rates for the transportation of cotton to that city were higher than net rates, a refund being given upon proof of shipment of a like weight of cotton via the line of the same carrier. Expense bills for inbound shipments were held by the cotton factors or commission merchants representing the growers. Expense bills for outbound shipments were held by the buyers representing the consumers. No refund could be secured without the presentation of the expense bills for each movement. The result was that many expense bills were sold by the buyers to the factors for an amount equal to one-half of the refund to be gained. Some factors remitted the refund to their principals; some were able to remit only a portion through having to buy out-bound expense bills. Other factors retained the refunds, leaving their principals to pay the gross rates to Memphis. HELD: The entire system was unsatisfactory and should be cured by the installation of a system of flat rates. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 294.

(k) Dealers at certain transit points frequently have billing in hand without having an equivalent amount of the commodity represented by the same. The practice was to retain the billing until a non-transit supply of the commodity could be secured, and then to send the non-transit supply forward upon the transit bill. HELD: The practice was unlawful. To be absolutely lawful the cancellation of billing should be automatic, so that when the commodity represented by the billing is disposed of, either locally or to a non-transit point or to a transit point, the inbound billing covering it should be canceled. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 294.

(l) Outbound shipments from transit points at balances of through rates made before the receipt of the inbound shipments depended upon for the transit privilege are unlawful. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 294.

(m) Billing covering the commodity disposed of should be canceled to prevent substitution of tonnage at transit points. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 294.

(n) The Northwestern transit tariffs provided that upon receipt of grain at the transit point the through rate to the final destination should be paid and that such destination should be indicated. The rates to various milling points between Minneapolis and Chicago were higher than those from Minneapolis to Chicago. Shippers had the grain delivered to the milling point and there paid the Minneapolis to Chicago rate. They were then able to secure oats from a transit point enjoying a different rate and forward them, or forward oats from a non-transit point, or refrain altogether from completing the transit transaction. HELD: The practice was unlawful. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 295.

(o) A tariff providing for the forwarding at a transit point of agricultural implements, vehicles, etc., as the transit of inbound shipment of logs, is improper. In Re Subsitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 296.

(p) The Commission will not undertake to frame a code of transit rules governing privileges at transit points. The traffic officials of the carriers have the duty and responsibility under the law of initiating rates. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 296.

(q) On account of the abuses incident to the present privilege at transit points accorded by carriers, the Commission refuses to suspend its rule of June 25, 1908, providing that while it is not expected the identity of each carload of grain, lumber, etc., can or will be preserved, it is unlawful to substitute at the transit point or forward under the transit rate, tonnage or Commodities that do not move into that point upon that rate. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18. I. C. C. 280, 296.

(r) It is the duty of shippers to submit to all necessary policing of their shipments if they desire to enjoy transit privileges. They may also fairly be required to certify that shipments offered by them are entitled to go forward upon the transit rates. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 297.

(s) Certifications by the shippers do not excuse carriers from determining for themselves and at their peril that shipments carried at other than the regular local rates from the point of shipment are entitled to exceptional or transit rates. They will not be allowed to put in transit privileges either through competition with each other or through the desire to hold local rates up to the highest possible point, without taking entire responsibility for the results of such privileges and the uses made of the same. In Re Substitution of Tonnage at Transit Points, 18 I. C. C. 280, 297.

(t) It is impractical to preserve the identity of inbound and outbound lumber at a yarding-in-transit point. Sondheimer Co. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 606, 608.

(u) The records of the transit house, in so far as they are subject to the tariff rules, are railroad records, as defined in section 20 of the Act, and are subject to the control and inspection of both the carriers and the Commission. The Transit Case, 24 I. C. C. 340, 351.

(v) An order of the Commission relating to the policing of transit privileges was applicable to all tonnage upon which transit privileges were or are claimed, on or after its date. Transit Case, 25 I. C. C. 130, 134.

(w) The only limitation on substitution of tonnage is that one article or commodity cannot be substituted for an entirely different one. The Transit Case, 26 I. C. C. 204, 209.

(x) Considering all the testimony, the Commission believes that the fabricators are correct in their assertion that unless substitution is allowed they will not be able to lawfully take advantage of the fabrication-in-transit service. Under the circumstances of this case, respondents should change their transit rules and regulations so as to specifically provide for substitution of material drawn from the lines of different carriers and different rate territories. They should further provide proper accounting and provisions for the cancellation of inbound billing to cover outbound shipments, local consumption, waste of shrinkage; frequent checking of unfabricated and fabricated material and billing on hand; and the cancellation of billing in excess of the fabricated and unfabricated material on hand, requiring the use of the oldest billing for that purpose. These rules should be made uniform in respondents' tariffs. All of these things should be planned and executed with such deliberation and care as will avoid the creation of other unjust discriminations, and with such a degree of supervision and effective policing that resort to unlawful practices may be impossible. Fabrication-in-Transit Charges, 29 I. C. C. 70, 89.

(y) The Commission considered the reasonableness of regulations requiring shippers of grain at St. Louis, Mo., to surrender expense bills covering inbound shipments to obtain benefit of reshipping rates to central freight association and trunk line territories. There were no joint through rates from local Missouri points to these destinations, and the through rate, made up of the interstate rate to St. Louis plus the rate beyond was higher than the intrastate rate to St. Louis plus the rate beyond. In order to insure allocation of the interstate rate where grain was subsequently shipped out on the reshipping rate, carriers required unloading at St. Louis, and the surrender of expense bills complained of, defendants maintaining that the reshipping rate was a part of a through rate to which the shipper was entitled only where he had paid that part applicable for the haul to St. Louis. There was no commodity rate on the tariff in question, but while there was no class rate on grain to central freight association territory, there was to trunk line territory. HELD: That the regulation was reasonable on shipments to trunk line territory, but shipments to central freight association territory were entitled to move out on the reshipping rate regardless of point of origin or of rate on inbound shipments. Directed that case be reopened and heard with South-Western Missouri Miller's Club v. C. & A. R. R. C., Docket No. 66662, on notice. Merchants Exchange of St. Louis v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 30 I. C. C. 700.

(z) It will be assumed that a carrier will not permit unlawful substitution of grain under a proposed rate any more than under an existing rate. Export Rates on Grain and Grain Products, 31 I. C. C. 617, 621.

(aa) It would be unlawful to require cancellation of inbound billing on shipments made outbound under local rates. Merchants Exchange of St. Louis v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 34 I. C. C. 341, 359.

(bb) Limitation of 12 months upon expense bills to be used with respect to lumber handled in transit at Newport, Tenn., not found unreasonable. Spiegle & Co., v. S. Ry., 34 I. C. C. 448, 450.

(cc) Sorting contemplates a substitution of tonnage. Interstate Packing Co. v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 42 I. C. C. 189, 194.

(dd) The dressing of poultry changes its character precisely as dressed meats are made to differ from live stock. If the character of the inbound commodity was not changed in transit, then with equal force it could be maintained that outbound shipments of lumber manufactured from logs or milled grain products represent in character the inbound raw materials. Transit rights must be specifically authorized by tariff provision; they can not be inferred. Swift & Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 233, 234.

(ee) It is the duty of shippers to aid the carriers in their effort properly and effectually to police transit service. Forked Deer Milling Co. v. I. C. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 573, 574.

(ff) The duty of the inspection bureau to police transit rates arises primarily from the obligation of the carriers to collect the legally published charges and not from any legal obligation to the shipper. Forked Deer Milling Co. v. I. C. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 573, 574.

(gg) The assumption that under a transit tariff, a constant flow of grain in and out of the elevator in contemplated and that a through movement is therefore provided for would require the carriers to furnish during times of car shortage 100 per cent of cars required, to the exclusion of other shippers of traffic originating at Chicago. Armour Grain Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 398, 403.

(hh) While it can not be said that the holding of grain in the elevators was, during the entire time, for the benefit of the shipper, the sending of the grain to the elevator and the unloading therein was for his benefit and on his orders, and but for this method of handling there would have been no interruption of the through transportation, no taking of possession by the shipper and no demurrage would have accrued. The grain having been unloaded into the elevator, the complainants were thereafter in the same position as other shippers from Chicago, and, when the benefit of holding the grain ceased, were no more entitled to immediate movement than were other shippers. Amour Grain Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 398, 403.

(ii) Any mixed feed that contains non-transit commodities in excess of 20 per cent of its total weight is not properly to be considered a grain product. It is a new commodity which is entitled to movement from the transit point only on the specific rates from that point. Atlas Cereal Co. v. C. B. & Q., 59 I. C. C. 702, 703.

(jj) Complainants alleged they were subjected to rates which are illegal, unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory and unduly prejudicial in that they are required in the use of proportional rates to surrender inbound freight bills showing that the grain originated at points beyond the market points, whereas their competitors at Mississippi River crossings are allowed the benefit of outbound rates on the certificate plan which did not require the surrender of freight bills covering inbound grain but simply required a certificate from the shipper that the grain originated beyond. The rate applicable on complainants shipments would be the rate in effect at the time shipments of grain left country point of origin while rates on the grain of its competitors would be the rate in effect at time shipments left the market point. The proportional rate tariffs almost uniformly include joint through rates, and generally speaking, do not require surrender of the inbound freight bills. In some the specific requirement is made, but most of them apply on shipments originating beyond. Many of these tariffs are somewhat definite in terms but they have always been understood as affording opportunity to bring grain in from country stations at the local rate, store it for a period usually not exceeding a year, and then ship it out at the proportional or reshipping rate which was in effect on the date of shipment from the country station, as shown on the inbound freight bill surrendered when the shipment is tendered for transportation outbound. In other words, these proportional rates, except when applied on continuous through shipments, have been treated in exactly the same manner as transit services in connection with joint through rates. It is manifest that movement of grain through Kansas City and Omaha must either be upon through rates, or upon the sums of the local rates to and from those points. Complainants must treat these movements of grain through their markets as through movements or as local movements to and from their markets. There is no middle ground. In order to hold this grain in storage at the markets and then forward it out on the proportional rates they must have tariff authority. To properly police this, it is necessary that inbound billing be surrendered in order to determine whether the rate applicable outbound is the proportional rate or the remainder of the through rate from point of origin to destination. There have been several increases in grain rates during the last five years. In every instance these terminal markets and the interior transit points have made outbound shipments on the basis of the rates in effect at the time of original shipment. They had and used the advantage of the lower rate. Now that the change has been downward, and the earlier rates have been reduced, the same principle applies but the advantage has shifted to the carrier. It is no answer to say that the grain now in storage exceeds that in store at the time the increases were made. The principle remains the same. From St. Louis, Cairo, Memphis, Cincinnati, Louisville and some other competitive grain markets, local rates not conditioned on prior movement, or proportional or reshipping rates conditioned on a prior movement whch is evidenced only by the filng of a certificate, apply to certain points in southwestern Mississippi Valley, southeastern and Carolina territories. There grain can move out of storage at the present lower rates, while the complaining markets must still pay the higher outbound rates which were in effect when the grain left the country station. It is clear that the maintenance by defendants at St. Louis and other markets of different rules, is unduly prejudicial to complainants. There is but one way of determining the date when the shipment originated at the country point, and that is by surrender of inbound freight bills. The certificate plan does not furnish this information and is open to abuse. HELD: The practice of furnishing inbound freight bills as proof of the grain originating beyond in use by complainants is not unreasonable but the requirements under the certificate plan are unduly prejudicial to compainant and those markets should be required to surrender the inbound freight bills in the same manner as now prevails at the Missouri River. Kansas City Board of Trade v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 69 I. C. C. 185.

SUSPENDED RATES

See Advanced Rates §1 (4); Interstate Commerce Commission §11; Long and Short Hauls §15; Tariffs §1½.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Original hearing involved increases in rates which were not justified and existing rates were ordered to be kept in effect for a two-year period. At the expiration of such period the formerly proposed increases do not go into effect automatically, but the increased rates must be lawfully published, and same would then be subject to suspension again. Stonega Coke & Coal Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 39 I. C. C. 523, 535.

(b) Contention that the Commission's suspension power is limited to an increase in rates previously on file and subject to its jurisdiction and that it has no authority to suspend the port-to-port rates, New Orleans to New York, under investigation, is without merit. Cotton from New Orleans, 49 I. C. C. 751, 752.

(c) It is not an answer to say, that the proper tariff notations were not made because the tariffs themselves were suspended. Suspension proceedings would be of little value if carriers could, without changes in tariffs, accomplish what the suspended tariffs proposed to do. Guyton & Harrington Mule Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 546, 550.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION.

See Control and Regulation.

§1. In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Where a corporation which is under no legal obligation to do so, voluntarily contracts to switch cars over its tracks between two or more railroads, for which service it collects a certain switching charge for switching the cars, loaded or empty, but charges no traffic rates on the freight transported, or transferred, in the cars, such corporation, in the performance of such service, assumes none of the responsibilities of a common carrier, but only those of a switchman. In respect to cars or traffic, thus handled, such corporation can only be regarded as a switchman, or transfer company; and it is no more a common carrier of interstate commerce, or traffic, within the provisions of the law, than a city transfer company, which checks a passenger's baggage at the hotel where it is received, and carries it, for an agreed compensation, to the station of the railway, over which it is to be transported into another state. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(b) A corporation which, being under no legal obligation to do so, voluntarily contracts to switch cars over its tracks, between two or more railways, for which service it collects a certain switching charge for switching the cars, loaded or empty, but charges no traffic rates on the freight transported or transferred in the cars in the performance of such service,assumes none of the responsibilities of a common carrier, but only those of a switchman. Ken. & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., (C. C. D. Ky.). 2 I. C. R. 351.

(c) Commission may locate industrial switch. Weleetka Light & Water Co. v. Ft. S. & W. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 503.

(d) Jurisdiction retained pending agreement between parties as to location of switch track. Weleetka Light & Water Co. v. Ft. S. & W. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 503.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) The obvious conclusion to be drawn is that if a switching service were a use of terminal facilities against which an owning carrier was then secured, it is equally a use of such facilities which can now be required in cases coming within the provisions of the amended section 3. Hasting Commercial Club, v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 69 I. C. C. 489, 496.

(f) Paragraph R. Section 3 of the Act applies to the opening of terminals by requiring a switching arrangement as well as by requiring a physical use. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry., 73 I. C. C. 361, 363.

(g) Paragraph (4) of section 3 of the Act applies to the opening of terminals by requiring a switching arrangement as well as by requiring a physical use. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C. 361, 362, 363.

(h) Respondent urges that to require it to maintain its present switching arrangement would be to deny to it the long haul on traffic which it is entitled to receive from connecting lines, in contravention of the provisions of paragraph (4), section 15, of the act. HELD: Schedules proposing to cancel present charges make no distinction between competitive and noncompetitive traffic, and the provisions of the paragraph referred to can not be construed to limit the commission's jurisdiction to prevent a carrier from canceling switching charges which have been in effect for many years, especially in view of the other and more specific provisions of the act. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C. 367, 370, 371.

(i) The provisions of paragraph (4), Practice of the C. R. R. Co. of N. J., construed to limit the Commission's jurisdiction to prevent a carrier from canceling switching charges which have been in effect for many years, especially in view of the other and more specific provisions of the act. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C. 367, 371.

(j) And the effect upon interstate commerce of requiring under state authority that an interstate carrier move purely local freght between private spurs in the same city is so indirect and consequential that it cannot be said to deprive the carrier of rights secured by the commerce clause of the federal constitution. L & N. R. R. Co. v. Hidgon, 34 Sup. Ct. 948; 234 U. S. 592; 58 L. ed. —.

§2. Jurisdiction of Commission.

See Interstate Commerce Commission I; Jurisduction of Commission.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Commission has no power to order the installation of a sidetrack; its function goes to determining questions concerning switch connections with existing sidetracks. Ralston Townsite Co. v. M. P. Ry. Co., 22 I. C. C. 354, 355, 356.

(b) So the Commission has no jurisdiction to order a physical connection where one carrier is not a "lateral branch line." Morris Iron Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 240, 243.

(c) The Commission has authority to require a railroad to construct a spur track to a dock of a steamship company and to determine the terms upon which such connecting track shall be operated. In Re Wharfage Facilities at Pensacola, 27 I. C. C. 252, 260.

(d) The Commission has no authority, in the absence of a showing of discrimination, to require a carrier to absorb the switching charge of another. Du Pont de N. P. Co. v. Penn. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 203, 204.

(e) Whenever a particular delivery service-spotting at some place of unloading within a plant properly may be construed as the equivalent of either of these two services (typical team track delivery or shunting of a car upon a siding of a shipper clear of the main track) and the rendition of such service practical, the Commission may compel a carrier to perform such service with its own equipment as part of its legal obligation as to delivery of carload traffic. As the magnitude of the service becomes greater than the equivalent of team track delivery or simple switching delivery, the demand on the carrier for its performances tends to exceed what may be regarded as a proper delivery service under transportation rates. Whitaker-Glessner Co. v. B. & O., 63 I. C. C. 47, 56.

(f) In view of the parenthetical clause in paragraph (4) of section 15 of the Act, the limitation put upon the commission's authority to establish through routes and joint rates does not apply where the commission finds it to be in the public interest to require one carrier to afford another carrier the use of its terminals. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C. 361, 363.

(g) Respondent urges that to require it to maintain its present switching arrangement would be to deny to it the long haul on traffic which it is entitled to receive from connecting lines in contravention of the provisions of paragraph (4), section 15, of the act. HELD: Schedules proposing to cancel present charges make no distinction between competitive and noncompetitive traffic and the provisions of the paragraph referred to can not be construed as limiting the commission's jurisdiction to prevent a carrier from canceling switching charges which have been in effect for many years, especially in view of the other and more specific provisions of the act. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C. 367, 370, 371.

(h) The provisions of paragraph (4), section 15, of the Act can not be construed to limit the commission's jurisdiction to prevent a carrier from canceling switching charges which have been in effect for many years especially in view of the other and more specific provisions of the act. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C. 367, 371.

(i) The establishment of the switching charge sought might very well result in the short hauling of defendant to many points reached by its own rails. This the Commission is precluded from doing under the provisions of section 15 of the Act. David Lipton's Sons Co. v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 93, 95.

(j) Under paragraph (3), section 3 of the Act which requires that all carriers shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for interchange of traffic between their respective lines, the commission has power to deal with issue of establishment of switch connections between rail carriers and to make affirmative order in premises if warranted by the record. Pittsburgh & West Virginia Ry. Co., v. L. E., A. & W. R. R., 81 I. C. C. 333, 334

(k) Defendant transported coal, during federal control, from mines on its line to complainant's plant, and subsequently furnished cars, power, and crews for intraplant movement over plant tracks from stock pile to point of use. Contention that commission has jurisdiction over charge for intraplant movement under section 206 (c) of Transportation Act, 1920, in that service performed should be considered as secondary delivery not separable from line haul, not sustained. Line-haul movement was definitely ended by delivery and unloading upon complainant's stock pile. Grasselli Chemical Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 562, 564.

(l) The question whether the switching of carload freight by a carrier on industrial spur track is an additional service for which it is entitled to make a charge over and above the line-haul rate, or is merely a substituted service in lieu of a substantially similar terminal service included in the line-haul rate, but not rendered, is a question of fact to be determined according to the actual conditions of operation, and manifestly one upon which it is the province of the Commission to pass. Interstate Com. Com. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 34 Sup. Ct. 814, 818; 58 L. ed. —; 234 U. S. —.

(m) The power of the Commission does not extend to ordering switch connectons wherever it sees fit, but is limited to a certain class of lines among which are those dependent upon and incident to the main line—feeders, such as may be built from mines or forests to bring coal, ore or lumber to the main line for shipment, and does not apply to independent roads parallel to or competing with steam roads and working on a different plan. U. S. v. B. & O. S. W. R. R. Co., 33 Sup. Ct. 5, 6; 226 U. S. 14.

(n) The findings of the Commission that certain industrial spur tracks in a certain city constitute a part of a carrier's terminals, and that under the conditions there exisiting the receipt and delivery of goods on such spurs was a like service as compared with the receipt and delivery of goods at team tracks and freight sheds, are conclusions of fact which, if based upon the evidence, are not open to review. Interstate Com. Com. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co. 34 Sup. Ct. 814, 819; 58 L. ed. —; 234 U. S. —.

(o) Track connections between different carriers are not within exception from Interstate Commerce Commission's jurisdiction. People ex rel. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission of New York, Second Dist. 233 N. Y. 133, 135 N. E. 195.

II. ABSORPTION OF SWITCHING.

See Absorption of Charges §3.

§3. In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Complainant attacked a switching charge on coal at Kansas City, as unreasonable. In the transportation of coal by defendant to Kansas City, consignees desire delivery on the lines of other carriers which assess switching charge of $3 per car. At one time defendant absorbed said switching charge in its transportation charge, later discontinued the practice, and subsequently resumed it. Complainants contend that inasmuch as defendant indulged in the practice and after discontinuance resumed it that it has committed itself to the unreasonableness of requiring shippers to at any time pay said switching charge and therefore reparation is asked for switching charges paid during the period when defendant required that such charges should be paid by shippers. The unreasonableness of the charge of $3 per car for the service performed is not attacked, and no substantial showing is made as to the difference in commercial conditions which may have obtained at the different times. HELD: To support the contention of complainants in these cases would be to say that transportation charges must in every instance remain at a fixed figure or be reduced by the carrier at the peril of being called to respond in damages on all charges that have before that time been collected under the rates so reduced. It is admitted that no discrimination as between shippers was indulged in in the application of the tariff charges and no showing is made that the tariff charges were unjust or unlawful. Complaint dismissed. J. H. Leonard v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 492, 493.

(bc) Reparation for switching charges for delivery of coal at Kansas City in lines of other carriers, paid during interval when carrier discontinued its practice of absorbing said switching charge and its transportation charge, denied, the reasonableness of the charge of $3 per car not being attacked, and no substantial showing being made as to the difference in commercial conditions which may have obtained at the different times Leonard v. C. M. & St. P. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 492.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) In cases where traffic moves from the same points of origin, and the switching charge is absorbed in the one case and not in the other, there is a violation of section 2, as the existence of competition in the one case and not in the other does not constitute a substantial dissimilarity of circumstances and conditions. Richmond Chamber of Commerce v. S. A. L. Ry. Co., 30 I. C. C. 552, 558.

(e) By the amended act carriers may be compelled to make connection with spur tracks built by shippers or with a lateral line of railroad and to operate such switch tracks at a reasonable compensation therefor. Second Industrial Railways Case, 34 I. C. C. 596, 602.

(f) The absorption of switching charges is not in contravention of law. Columbia Gold Min. Co. v. O. W. R. R. & Nav. Co., 35 I. C. C. 42, 43

(g) Where the delivery service within a switching district is substantially the same in either instance, the line-haul carrier is receiving a greater compensation from one shipper than from another for a like service when it absorbs the switching charges of one switching line and not those of another. Richmond Cham. of Com. v. S. A. L. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 455, 466.

(h) The practice of certain carriers serving Richmond of absorbing switching charges only when the switching line competes with the line-haul carrier, while refusing to absorb such charges when the switching line does not compete with the line-haul carrier, constitutes undue discrimination within section 2 when the switching service is substantially similar. Richmond Chamber of Commerce v. S. A. L. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 455, 461, 467.

(i) It does not appear that coal and coke are competitive with other traffic moving into Richmond, and the absorption of switching charges upon certain traffic and not upon other traffic is not in itself unduly discriminatory. Richmond Chamber of Commerce v. S. A. L. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 455, 467.

(j) The practice of southern lines of absorbing switching charges only when the switching line actually competes with the line-haul carrier on traffic to or from industries at Richmond under substantially similar circumstances and conditions as defined in section 2 is unlawful. Richmond Chamber of Commerce v. S. A. L. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 455, 467.

(k) When the absorption of a switching charge subsequently to January 1, 1910, was the voluntary act of the carrier, and its cancellation had the effect of increasing the transportation charges, the burden of proof is upon the carrier to justify such increased charges. Consolidation Coal Co. v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 60 I. C. C. 763, 767.

(l) If carriers absorb switching charges for one shipper, they must do the like for all other similarly situated and entitled to like treatment. Ridge Coal Mining Co. v. M. P. R. R. Co., 62 I. C. C. 259, 262.

(m) In the absence of unjust discrimination or undue prejudice a carrier can not be compelled to absorb the switching charges of a connecting line. Hunt Helm Ferris & Co. v. C. & N. W. Ry., 68 I. C. C. 283, 284.

(n) In a proceeding to determine the propriety of switching charges by carriers, the Commission must consider them as though they were charged for by the railroad rendering the service and paid for by the shippers. Reciprocal Switching at Kansas City, Mo.-Kas., 68 I. C. C. 591, 596.

(o) Proposal of the A. T. & S. F. to cancel the switching charges between its team tracks at Argentine, Kans., and connecting lines at Kansas City, Mo.-Kans., leaving in effect higher local rates, found not justified. Present arrangement is clearly practicable and is shown to be in the public interest; carrier has not shown that its ability to handle its own business is substantially impaired by the existing arrangement, nor that charges therefor are not compensatory; and the circumstances are somewhat analogous to those where the commission has declined to permit carriers to maintain a prohibitive charge for hauling traffic from connecting lines to their own team tracks. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C. 367.

(p) Proposed nonabsorption by the Kansas City Southern of the switching charges on traffic to and from the power house of the Kansas City Rys. Co. at Second and Locust Streets, Kansas City, Mo., found justified. The extension of the freight business of the Kansas City Rys. Co., actual and prospective, did not change the intraplant nature of operations performed by it at its power house, which service is in excess of the Kansas City Southern's legal obligation with respect to delivery. Nonabsorption of Switching Charges, 73 I. C. C. 376.

(q) Findings in previous reports, 58 I. C. C. 92, and 62 I. C. C. 226, affirmed. Practice of the C. R. R. Co. of N. J., in absorbing charges of the East Jersey R. R. and Term. Co. on traffic to and from independent industries served by, and reached only over the rails of the terminal company, while refusing to absorb charges on such traffic of complainant, who controls that company, not shown discriminatory or unduly prejudicial. Circumstances and conditions are similar in so far as the line haul is concerned, but a differentiation is apparent when the Commission examines the facts with regard to the traffic after the line haul or the greater part thereof is completed. Tide Water Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 528.

(r) The commission may not enter an order requiring the absorption of switching charges unless it is found that the nonabsorption results in a violation of the Act. To determine this question it must be found that the circumstances and conditions affecting the service at the point where such absorption is refused are substantially similar to those affecting the service at other points with which comparison is made. Tide Water Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 528, 529.

(s) Increased through rates on traffic to and from points on the Northampton & Bath R. R., resulting from the cancellation by trunk-line carriers of the joint rates, under which the switching charges of the N. & B. were absorbed, found to have been justified as to cement and not unreasonable, but as to other traffic found unjust and unreasonable to extent they exceeded rates to and from the junctions. Reparation awarded. Atlas Portland Cement Co. v. N. & B. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C. 687.

(t) Respondent proposed to cancel a tariff rule providing for the absorption of switching charges of the Pennsylvania for the movement from Croxton, N. J. to certain industries on that line at Jersey City, N. J., in connection with interstate shipments. The proposed cancellation would increase the total charges about $55 per car. No one appeared for the respondent and no evidence was offered in support of the increased charges. HELD: Suspended schedules not justified. Absorption of Charges between Croxton and Jersey City, N. J., 74 I. C. C. 329.

(u) Complainant attacked refusal of the D. L. & W., and L. V., and B. R. & P., to absorb switching charges of Erie at Buffalo, N. Y., on transit grain as unduly prejudicial. Original report, 55 I. C. C. 587. HELD: Reparation awarded based on original report. Globe Elevator Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C. 591.

(v) Where a carrier holds itself out to carry traffic to and from a certain point, it must reach that point either over its own facilities or through those of others; where two carriers join in the publication of joint rates and establish through rates via junctions where their rails do not meet, there is a holding out to the public of intermediate carriage between their respective lines which must be protected. The general practice is for the intermediate switching road to file a tariff naming its switching charge, and this charge is absorbed by one or other of the line haul carriers under appropriate tariff provisions. Intermediate Switching Charges at Peoria, Ill., 77 I. C. C. 43, 47.

(w) Absorption of switching charge which results in lower total transportation charges from more distant point to point where property is delivered than total charge from or to an intermediate point. HELD: While constituting violation of fourth section of act, such departure protected by commission's general fourth section order No. 5 of March 20, 1911. Conf. Ruling 304 (d). Montrose Oil Refining Co. v. St. L. S. F. Ry. Co., 78 I. C. C. 572, 573.

(x) Upon further hearing, former report, 62 I. C. C. 705, finding failure of defendants to provide for absorption of charges for inter-changing inbound traffic at Downington, and provide charges for inter-changing outbound traffic, not unreasonable, discriminatory, or unduly prejudicial, affirmed. Failure to provide for interchange of outbound traffic is not shown to prejudice Downington, in comparison with Coatesville, Pa., and other points where such arrangements are maintained, and to require such interchange would compel carriers to short haul themselves. Miller Paper Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 314.

(y) Failure of carriers to absorb switching charges on grain and products accorded transit at Detroit, Mich., while providing for absorption of such charges at Buffalo, N. Y., and Chicago, Ill., found not unreasonable or unduly prejudicial to Detroit, due to dissimilarity of conditions prevailing at Buffalo and Chicago, notably the greater volume of traffic. Aggregate through rates resulting therefrom found not unreasonable. Detroit Board of Trade v. W. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 717.

(z) Allegation that carrier has violated section 6 of the act through assessing and collecting without tariff authority switching charges on transit grain, predicated upon failure to state in tariff naming transit provisions the charges in connection therewith, not sustained. Tariff carrying rates of carrier contains general provision that switching charges at any point will be added to through rate unless provision is made for absorption. This is in accordance with requirements of rule 10 (a) of Tariff Circular 18-A. Detroit Board of Trade v. W. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 717, 723.

(aa) Charge for movement within Kansas City, Kans., switching district was published in tariff naming line-haul rates, and was added to Kansas City rates in constructing charge on complainant's shipments. Tariffs of line-haul carriers provided for absorption of switching charges at Kansas City. HELD: Service rendered rather than class of tariff in which charge for intradistrict movement was published determines character of such charge. Charges assessed found illegal to extent they exceeded rates to Kansas City and reparation awarded. Butcher v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 359.

(bb) Fact that charge for switching service is published in tariff naming line-haul rates, and in amount per net ton rather than a charge per car, makes it none the less a switching charge and subject to absorption rules of line-haul carriers. Butcher v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 359, 360.

(cc) Switching charges may be absorbed on some commodities and not on others if this difference in treatment does not place an undue burden on other traffic. Detroit Board of Trade v. W. Ry., 88 I. C. C. 413, 415.

(dd) A carrier has the right to absorb switching charges on traffic from competitive points and to refuse to absorb similar charges on traffic from noncompetitive points. Detroit Board of Trade v. W. Ry., 88 I. C. C. 413, 415.

(ee) The practice of three carriers as to traffic from points south of Richmond, whereby each absorbed, for shipments from competitive points only, switching charges to industries in Richmond on the lines of such carriers and similarly located with regard to the interchange tracks of the three carriers, but refused to absorb the switching charge on deliveries to similarly located industries on noncompetitive lines. HELD: A violation of Interstate Commerce Act, §2, being a like and contemporaneous service of a like kind of traffic under similar circumstances and conditions. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., et al. v. United States, et al., 41 Sup. Ct. 24.

III. DISCRIMINATION AND REASONABLENESS OF CHARGES.

See Discrimination; Reasonableness of Rates.

§4. In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Defendant's railroad connects at Janesville, Wisc., with the C. M. & St. P. Ry. Complainant is a merchant doing business at that point and having coal yards on the line of the latter road, but receiving shipments from points on the line of the defendant road, and his financal responsibility is not questioned in this proceeding. Carriers operating in that section of the country are members of a car service association, which has established a rule requiring the payment of demurrage charges when cars are retained by shippers more than 48 hours after receiving notice that such cars are in position to unload, and the rule is set forth by the carriers in their bills of lading. HELD: That the action of defendant in refusing, after payment of freight and offer of customary switching charges, to switch two carloads of coal to the connecting line for delivery at the coal yard of complainant on such line unless he promised in advance to pay any demurrage charges that might be made regardless of whether they were just or legally enforcible, was unreasonable notwithstanding complainant had previously refused to pay demurrage charges on other cars switched to his siding, which he had failed to unload within the time prescribed by the rule, and defendant by retaining the coal in its possession and demanding such promise from complainant as a condition precedent to the performance of its duty as a common carrier subjected the complainant to unlawful prejudice and disadvantage. Complainant is entitled to reparation for injuries sustained in consequence of such refusal and neglect of defendant. Macloon v. C. & N. W. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 711.

(b) The custom of railroads to furnish switch tracks for the use of certain of its customers upon which freight is delivered free of charge, does not justify free delivery by carts to all parts of one city and a refusal of like service for other cities under substantially similar conditions; nor does a prohibition of the delivery by carts require a prohibition of the tracks. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 722.

(b) No such undue preference or unjust discrimination as would warrant an order of relief or for reparation is shown under complainant's claim that he was subjected to an unreasonable disadvantage by refusing him a private switch and providing his competitor in the coal business with one, thereby compelling him to unload coal at an inconvenient point near the outskirts of the town, where it appeared that complainant really desired to use a passing siding of defendant for the purpose of unloading his coal. Parks v. Cincinnati & M. Valley R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 47.

(c) Discrimination in supplying with private switch, and denying like facility to complainant. Parks v. Cincinnati & M. Valley R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 47.

(d) Defendant's tracks in Providence, R. I., are so located that competitors of complainant occupying places of business abutting on its Canal Street Yard are able to unload carloads of fresh meat directly into their warehouses; and the privilege of unloading meat in that yard was formerly accorded to complainant, whose store house is across the canal and about 300 feet from the railroad; but such privilege to complainant was recently withdrawn. Denial of such privilege entails the hauling of complainant's meat from another yard about half a mile distant, and damages his business from $20 to $100 per car. HELD: That complainant is thereby subjected to undue prejudice. Miner v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 422.

(da) An unlawful discrimination is made between complainant and other more favored shippers, which amounts to undue and unreasonable preference by defendant, where defendant declines to permit a side-track connection between its line and a switch or side track to complainant's coal mine in the Fairmont District of West Virginia, for the purpose of receiving interstate shipments of coal from its mine, while at the same time it provides and maintains side track connections for other mines in that district from which large quantities of coal are shipped to interstate destinations, and controls, through ownership of capital stock, large coal mining enterprises in the Fairmont District. Red Rock Fuel Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 438.

(e) The enactment of Congress in section three of the Act that the carriers affected thereby shall not subject persons, localities or description of traffic to undue prejudice or unreasonable disadvantage, or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to persons, localities or kinds of traffic in any respect whatsoever applies to discrimination in facilities or instrumentalities of shipment or carriage, and while the Commission has no authority to order a carrier to put in side track connections, or to prescribe the terms or conditions relating to the construction of such connections, its jurisdiction does extend to any case of wrongful prejudice resulting from discrimination in the provision of such facilities or instrumentalities of shipment or carriage, including side track connections. Red Rock Fuel Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 11 I. C. C. 438, 451.

(f) Right of carrier to dictate as to business conducted from and along a siding connected with its lines denied, except in so far as may be reasonable with regard to commodities the transportation of which are attended by such risk and danger to life and property. Barden & Swartout v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 103.

(g) The Commission does not think that a carrier can reserve to itself, or exercise, the right to determine as to what commodities shall or shall not be moved over a switch connection and dealt in by a dealer who is located upon a siding which is connected with carrier's line by such switch, except in so far as is necessary and proper to afford protection to life and property against the handling or storage of dangerous commodities, such as explosives or highly inflammable liquids. Barden & Swartout v. L. V. R. R., 12 I. C. C. 194, 195.

(h) Complainant attacked as unreasonable switching charges collected at Kansas City on shipments of grain. After the arrival, and usually after sale, of grain transported in carloads by defendant to Kansas City, owners direct delivery to points on the lines of other carriers which assess a switching charge which defendants collects for and pays to said carriers. Complainant contended that defendants published rate on grain to Kansas City includes delivery at any point in Kansas City desired by shipper, whether on the line of defendant or on the lines of any other carrier. HELD: The Act in specific terms provides that a common carrier shall not be required to give the use of its tracks to another carrier engaged in like business; that in the absence of tariff provisions to the contrary, the transportation rate shown in a carrier's tariff on a certain commodity to a given point is understood to include delivery only to industries or unloading points located upon its own rails; that if consignee or owner of shipment desires delivery to point located on the line of another carrier he must pay the lawful charge for such service. Complaint dismissed. Laning Harris Coal & Grain Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 479.

(i) After the arrival, and usually after sale, of grain transported in carloads by defendant to Kansas City, owners direct delivery to points on the lines by other carriers who assess a switching charge which defendant collects for and pays to said other carriers. Complainant alleges that defendant's published rate on grain to Kansas City includes delivery at any point in Kansas City desired by shipper, whether on the line of defendant or on the lines of any other carrier, and that the switching charge is therefore unlawful and unreasonable. HELD, That the act in specific terms provides that a common carrier shall not be required to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business; that in the absence of tariff provisions to the contrary, the transportation rate shown in a carrier's tariff on a certain commodity to a given point is understood to include delivery only to industries or unloading points located upon its own rails; that if consignee or owner of shipment desires delivery to point located on the line of another carrier he must pay the lawful charge for such service. Complaint dismissed. Laning-Harris Coal & Grain Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co. 12 I. C. C. 479.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(j) General statements on the part of the representative of a railroad testifying on its behalf, that it is felt by the company that the cost of conducting its terminals has so materially increased that it must have more revenue to put the road on a basis justifying the cost incurred in performing the switching service in question, furnishes no justification for an advance in switching charges. Detroit Switching charges, 28 I. C. C. 494, 497.

(k) Section 2 is primarily directed against discrimination between shippers located in the same community. It is aimed to put all shippers within a switching district upon a substantial equality. It provides that where a carrier receives from any person a greater compensation for any service rendered in the transportation of passengers or property than it receives from any other person for doing for him a "like contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and condition, such common carrier shalll be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination," a discrimination which is prohibited and declared to be unlawful. Under this section it is settled that the competition of rival carriers as such does not constitute substantially dissimilar circumstances to justify a difference in treatment. Richmond Chamber of Commerce v. S. A. L. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 455, 464.

(l) Where industries are situated within the switching district of the same city and are substantially equidistant from the respective interchange tracks, the service which the line-haul carrier renders is like service within section 2. Richmond Chamber of Commerce v. S. A. L. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 455, 466.

(m) In determining the amount of the switching charge it is proper to consider the value of the service rendered and the facilities used, and the circumstance that the terminal carrier has been deprived of the line haul. The charge properly may be adequate for the terminal service considered by itself, but its actual or possble absorption by a competing line furnishes no criterion of what is a reasonable charge. In a proceeding to determine the propriety of switching charges absorbed by carriers, the Commission must consider them as though they were to be charged for by the railroad rendering the service, and paid for by the shipper. Switching Absorptions, 47 I. C. C. 583, 587.

(n) A carrier is not excused from its legal duty of placing complainants upon an equality of rates and an equality of service with their similarly circumstanced competitors by its own voluntary act of constructing and maintaining switch tracks serving such competitors' plants. Westport Stone Co. v. C. C. C. & St. L Ry., 48 I. C. C. 637, 639.

(o) Carriers are within their rights in establishing reasonable territorial limits for the operation of their switching engines and giving industries within those limits the benefit of any resulting economies. Charges to points without the switching limits may not only be higher for the greater distance, but for the different character of service, where more expensive. Such charges should not, however, exceed what is sufficient properly to recompense the carrier for the service rendered. New Bedford Board of Commerce v. Director General, 55 I. C. C. 320, 323.

(p) One carrier having elected to open its terminals to another carrier at class rates and perform the switching service must expect to perform such service at a charge which is reasonable. Thatcher Manufacturing Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 244, 246.

(q) Charges for service of delivery from one carrier to another should not exceed the line-haul rate by more than 2 cents per 100 pounds. Thatcher Mfg. Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 244, 247.

(r) There is no requirement of law that the rate shall be the same to all points of delivery in the same district, even when the district is all embraced within the municipal limits of one city instead of comprising two separate municipalities. St. Louis Chamber of Commerce v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 57 I. C. C. 639, 647, 648.

(s) In making a general separation of the expenses chargeable to interchange and interior plant switching the engine hour will usually be found a safer guide than number of cars handled. Illinois Northern Ry., 61 I. C. C. 629, 633, 634.

(t) Shipments delivered to complainant's private siding by P. & R. were switched by the Pennsylvania to another private siding, both within the switching limits of Williamsport, Pa., for which latter service the Pennsylvania assessed a class rate. Lower switching charge in effect but tariff provided that "this charge not applicable from or to tracks of connecting line." Contention that complainant's private siding should be considered an interchange track of the carriers held not sustained, and since shipments were switched from a private siding and not from tracks of a connecting carrier, lower switching charge legally applicable. Refund of overcharges directed. Central Pennsylvania Lumber Co. v. Director General as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 99.

(u) Where the question in issue is whether a charge was just and reasonable, it is immaterial, so far as this question is concerned, whether the service be designated a line haul or switching movement if the charge was on file with the Commission as a legal charge. Swift & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 63 I. C. C. 389, 390.

(v) The burden of proof rests upon carriers to justify proposed increased through charges resulting from a reduction in the amount of switching charges they will absorb even though they need not have increased the amount of such absorption by more than a certain per cent under Increased Rates, 1920, 58 I. C. C., 220. Absorption of Switching Charges at Toledo, Ohio, 64 I. C. C. 8, 9.

(w) Shipments were handled under regular billing, in trains subject to orders of train dispatchers. Movements performed necessitated the crossing of one or more river bridges and considerable switching and back hauling. Point involved is not shown in governing tariffs as a point within the switching limits and rate from and to that point is published as a transportation charge, HELD: Service found to be a line haul and not a switching movement. Hilb & Bauer v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 279, 280.

(x) Because of accumulation of barges alongside vessel, delivery from car float to vessel could not be made. Cars were floated to float bridge adjacent to pier and thence moved along tracks and out upon the pier for delivery, for which service a class rate was assessed. HELD: Extra movement to float bridge and beyond amounted to a reconsignment. Charges assessed found unreasonable to extent they exceeded those provided in a local switching tariff for similar movements to cold storage warehouses, plus a reconsignment charge. Reparation awarded. Armour & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 760.

(xa) Carriers whose rails do not connect at interchange points may join in the establishment of through routes and joint rates, and may employ a switching line to effect transfer of traffic between their rails. The extent to which each shall partcipate in compensating the switching line under such an arrangement between the employing carriers. In the absence of agreement to the contrary, it would not seem unfair that the expense should be shared equally. Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. Co. v. P. & P. U. Ry. Co. 68 I. C. C. 412, 417.

(y) Complainant attacked rates charged on lumber and forest products, carloads, between industries on different lines in Washington, D. C., as unreasonable and unduly prejudicial. Complainants only grievance is in respect of rates between the delivery yards in Washington of the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore & Ohio. Complainant sometimes has occasion to transfer cars from the delivery yard of one road to that of the other, rate charged being joint sixth class rate of 12.5c governed by official classification. HELD, rate attacked unjust and unreasonable to extent it exceeded 8c per 100 pounds, reparation awarded. W. A. Wimsatt v. B. & O. R. R. 69 I. C. C. 554.

(z) Rates on coal from various producing regions to the Chicago switching district, higher to some deliveries than to Chicago itself found not unreasonable or unduly prejudicial, but rates to points just beyond the district, based on the combinations to and from Chicago, found unduly prejudicial to extent they exceeded the rates to Chicago by certain differentials. Relationship of rates prescribed. Chicago Coal Merchants Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 161.

(aa) Proposal of the A., T. & S. F. to cancel the switching charges between its team tracks at Argentine, Kans., and connecting lines at Kansas City, Mo.-Kans., leaving in effect higher local rates, found not justified. Present arrangement is clearly practicable and is shown to be in the public interest; carrier has not shown that its ability to handle its own business is substantially impaired by the existing arrangement nor that charges therefor are not compensatory; and the circumstances are somewhat analogous to those where the commission has declined to permit carriers to maintain a prohibitive charge for haulng traffic from connecting lines to their own team tracks. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C., 367.

(bb) Respondent urges that to require it to maintain its present switching arrangement would be to deny to it the long haul on traffic which it is entitled to receive from connecting lines, in contravention of the provision of paragraph (4), section 15, of the act. HELD, schedules proposing to cancel present charges make no distinction between competitive and noncompetitive traffic, and the provisions of the paragraph referred to can not be construed as limiting the commission's jurisdiction to prevent a carrier from canceling switching charges which have been in effect for many years, especially in view of the other and more specific provisions of the act. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C., 367, 371.

(cc) Contention that transportation service was a switching movement and that increases in switching charges were not contemplated by General Order No. 28 of the director general. HELD, whether or not charges assessed were authorized by that order, the fact is that they were published and were the applicable charges, and it is immaterial, so far as the issue of their justness and reasonableness is concerned, whether the movement be designated a switching or line-haul service. Minnesota Steel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 571, 573.

(dd) Charges of $5 per car, plus 1 cent per 100 pounds, assessed on stone from complainant's quarry near Mankato, Minn., to its plant at that point, during Federal control, found unreasonable to extent they exceeded charge of $6 per car subsequently established. Such $6 charge also was made applicable from a quarry where complainant now obtains its stone, involving a longer haul and greater transportation service. Reparation awarded. Carney Cement Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 735.

(ee) In 61 I. C. C., 646, the Commission found that the M. & St. L., and R. T. C. Co., of Minneapolis had not justified proposed increased charges for switching interstate carload shipments at Minneapolis, St. Louis Park and Hopkins, Minn., but found reasonable and just charges for these services. HELD, upon further consideration respondents have justified a charge at Minneapolis of $6 per car for switching all commodities except grain and grain products, between industries on respondent's lines and interchange tracks with connecting carriers. Switching and Absorption at Minneapolis, 74 I. C. C., 116.

(ff) Where cost studies appear to be the result of an earnest endeavor to determine the cost of a switching service they are entitled to some weight in arriving at a reasonable charge. Switching and Absorption at Minneapolis, 74 I. C. C. 116.

(gg) Cost is only one of the elements to be considered in arriving at reasonable charge. Charges at other points where the transportation conditions are substantially similar may serve as a guide. Switching & Absorption at Minneapolis, 74 I. C. C. 116, 119.

(hh) Switching charges on shipments delivered to and received from complainant's packing plant at Cactus, Ariz., while delivering to competitive plants at Phoenix without addition to line-haul rates, found not unreasonable, discriminatory, or unduly prejudicial. There are no other industries at Cactus nor is there an established switching yard at that point, and deliveries to complainant's plant are made by road-haul engines. Services rendered at Cactus are essentially dissimilar from those rendered within the switching limits of Phoenix. Arizona Packing Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 387.

(ii) Contention that a carrier's team tracks are its private terminals for the accommodation of its traffic and the shippers it serves, and their use may not be required for the traffic of foreign lines, HELD: Where carrier permits the use of such tracks and performs the switching service out of which a complaint arises, the commission may determine whether or not the switching charge was unreasonable. Oakes Co. v. M. St. P. & S. S. Ry. Co., 77 I. C. C. 95.

(jj) Fact that connecting rail lines furnish cars to a switching line while the Mississippi-Warrior River barge line does not furnish cars is not a justification for rail carriers assessing higher switching charges on the barge line's traffic. U. S. War Dept. v. A. & S. Ry., 77 I. C. C. 360, 361.

(kk) If the average switching service performed on traffic received from or delivered to the Mississippi-Warrior River barge line is more expensive than the average switching service performed on traffic received from or delivered to rail lines, corresponding higher switching charges in the former case are justified. U. S. War Dept. v. A. & S. Ry. 77 I. C. C. 361.

(ll) Fact that short-haul movement from point within a switching district to a point without is analogus to switching service within the district, is not controlling in determining whether or not line haul charges collected are illegal. Western Meat Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 77, 79.

(mm) Bills of lading are mere incidents of service which in no wise determine its character as line haul or switching. Western Meat Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 77, 80.

(nn) When assessment of a switching charge in connection with transit results in greater aggregate compensation to carrier than sum of intermediate rates, it can not be considered that section 4 has thereby been violated, for services performed are not the same in the two instances. Transit involves an additional service on part of carrier for which separate charge may be made; the switching charge is an additional expense incident to transit service.

Switching Charges on Grain 80 I. C. C. 720, 721.

(oo) Whether a particular movement should be treated as a line haul or switching service is not dependent upon the manner of publishing the charges but rather upon the nature of the service itself. Absorption of charges between Croxton and Jersey City, N. J., 81 I. C. C. 181, 183.

(pp) Reasonableness of charge during Federal control for use of motive power, cars, and crew in intraplant movement over plant track found not within commission's jurisdiction under section 206 (c) of transportation act, 1920. Such intrastate transactions were no more within purview of that act, than they would now be if a State line were crossed in a similar intraplant movement. Furnishing of cars, locomotive, and crew did not make act performed a service of common carriage merely because owner was a common carrier. Movement was part of operation of complainant's plant, which defendant was under no legal duty to perform, and charge therefor was matter of contract. Grasselli Chemical Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 562.

(qq) Proposed designation of track on which warehouses of protestant is located, at Perry, Fla., as "house, team or dray tracks," to deny protestant right to continue to have its interstate c. l. traffic switched by respondent from or to its warehouse when such shipments are from or to a connecting carrier found not justified. Siding was originally constructed for exclusive use of protestant and south portion has been so used for approximately 18 years. Real reason for proposed change is to compel protestant to route its shipments over line of respondent. Switching at Perry, Fla., 83 I. C. C. 23.

(rr) Proposed increased charge for switching ferry cars in the Boston, Mass., district to level of c. l. switching charge, found not justified. While service rendered in switching ferry cars and c. l. shipments between same points can hardly be differentiated, there is no line-haul revenue incident to movement under c. l. switching charge proposed while ferry-car movements are in all instances incident to line-haul movement over respondent's line. Proposed charge also compares unfavorably with ferry-car charges at various other New England points. Switching Charges on Ferry Cars, 83 I. C. C. 68.

(ss) Fact that charge for switching service is published in tariff naming line-haul rates, and in amount per net ton rather than as charge per car, makes it none the less a switching charge and subject to absorption rules of line-haul carriers. Butcher v. Director General, as Agent, 83 I. C. C. 359, 360.

(tt) An order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, requiring that certain railroad companies which had entered into an agreement for a reciprocal switching should cease to maintain a practice whereby they refused to switch interstate competitive traffic to and from the tracks of another road on the same terms as interstate noncompetitive traffic, while interchanging both kinds of traffic, on the same terms with each other, and that they should establish rates for such other road, which should not be different from those maintained with respect to similar shipments from their respective tracks, is not invalid as requiring the parties to the switching agreement to give the use of their tracks and terminal facilities to the third road within the proviso of Interstate Commerce Act, §3, that common carriers shall not be required to give the use of their tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States, 227 Fed. 258, 259, 271.

§4½. Contracts for Sidetracks.

See Sidetracks; Trackage Contracts.

(a) No such undue preference or unjust discrimination as would warrant an order of relief or for reparation is shown under complainant's claim that he was subjected to an unreasonable disadvantage by refusing him a private switch and providing his competitor in the coal business with one, thereby compelling him to unload coal at an inconvenient point near the outskirts of the town, where it appeared that complainant really desired to use a passing siding of defendant for the purpose of unloading his coal. Parks v. Cincinnati & M. Valley R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 47.

(aa) Complainant made application under section 1 for an order requiring the defendant to construct and maintain a switch track connecting its main line at Weleetka, Ind. T. At the hearing defendant definitely offered to construct such part of the switch track as the complainant might wish it to construct. After this connection is completed defendant is willing to repay the cost to the complainant by making it a definite allowance of $2 for each car placed upon the switch track by the defendant, excluding however, such cars as may be switched there by defendant from the lines of competing carriers in Weleetka. HELD, a switch track should be connected. Weleetka Light & Water Co. v. Ft. S. & W. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 503.

(b) While settlements for advancement made by shippers for the construction of switch tracks may be based on the number of carload shipments, repayments must not be made out of the rate, but out of availabe funds at the end of definite intervals. A copy of such contracts ought to be filed with the Commission, and when the transaction is completed a verified statement of it by a responsible officer of the company ought also to be filed here. Weleetka Light & Water Co. v. Ft. S. & W. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 503.

(c) The practice of carriers of repaying advancements made by shippers for the constructions of switch tracks by making an allowance of a definite amount on each carload of freight shipped to or from their manufacturing plants is disapproved on the ground that it presents too much the appearance of a purchase of property by the carrier with transportation, this being contrary to law. While settlements may be based on the number of carload shipments, repayments must not be made out of the rate but out of available funds at the end of definite intervals. A copy of such contracts ought to be filed with the Commission and when the transaction is completed a verified statement of it by a responsible officer of the company ought also to be filed here. Weleetka Light & Water Company v. Ft. S. & W. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 503, 505.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) Complainant alleges that defendants have severally made numerous leases for the use of railroad property and contracts for the construction, maintenance and use of industrial sidetracks containing clauses limiting their liability for loss and damage caused by fire from locomotives operating over such tracks. These liability clauses are attacked as unjust, unreasonable ,unduly prejudicial and otherwise unlawful. As a result of negotiations there was submitted to the Commission by complainant and defendant the proposal that certain liability clauses be approved. The Commission at that time inclined to the view that it was without jurisdiction, under Section 1 of the act. The liability clauses complained of do not involve the question of rates, nor the matter of facilities to be furnished by the railroad carrier for the transportation of property under its obligation as a common carrier. It does not follow as a matter of law that the present practices of defendant are unduly prejudicial because they are not uniformly the same in all parts of the country and as to all shippers. HELD, the Commission has no jurisdiction and complaint dismissed. National Industrial Traffic League v. A. & R., 61 I. C. C. 120.

§5. Incidental Services.

See Additional Charges and Services; Refrigeration §3; Special Rates and Services; Spotting; Tap Lines §4.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The additional cost of receiving or delivering carload freight on industrial tracks does not necessarily imply that the service is accessorial for which an addition may be made to the line-haul rate, or that it is other than a mere substitute for teamtrack receipts and deliveries. If cost of service were a controlling test of whether in a given case an additional service has been performed for which increased compensation may be exacted, it is evident that the terminal charge should vary as between different points in the same switching district, or even as between deliveries at the same point at different times. The fact that in switching district all carload freight is not received or delivered at the same point and in the same manner presupposes variations in the cost of service and other minor differences incident to diverse circumstances and operating conditions. Boardman & Co. v. S. P. Co., 37 I. C. C. 81, 84.

(b) So long as charge is published for placing shipments at points of unloading on private industry tracks, carriers must, upon demand, perform the service, but it does not necessarily follow that they would be under any common-carrier obligation to do the switching if no charge were published. Carriers perform services voluntarily or under stress of competition which are not within their duty as common carriers, and which they can not be required to perform in the absence of undue prejudice or unjust discrimination. Whitaker-Glessner Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 47, 54, 55.

(c) Allowances to large industries have developed until in many instances they are little better than undue preferences, and represent service which the Commission would ab initio long hesitate to direct a carrier to render in effecting delivery of c. l. freight. They are frequently compelled by the fear of loss of large tonnage, deplete unnecessarily the revenues of carriers and thus tend to shift the burden of paying for such expensive deliveries from the shoulders of the recipients to other shippers who receive only average delivery service. United States Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 677, 684.

(d) Circumstances entitled to primary consideration as to whether spotting is a duty required of carriers under their line-haul rates are the extent of the service involved in a typical team-track delivery, and the extent of the service rendered in the typical switching of a car upon the siding of a shipper clear of the main track—the substitute for team-track delivery. Garey Mfg. Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 59 I. C. C. 640, 643.

(e) Refusal of defendants to perform interchange switching in complainant's plant at New Boston, Ohio, beyond the interchange tracks or to grant in lieu thereof an allowance in money found not unjustly discriminatory or unduly prejudicial to complainant in favor of its competitors for whom such service is performed, as conditions at the respective plants are substantially dissimilar. Whitaker-Glessner Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 63 I. C. C. 47.

(f) On a web of interlacing plant tracks, dominated by the shipper, the carriers would not have that control over the instrumentalities of carriage which correspond with common-carrier liability for loss of or damage to the thing carried. Whitaker-Glessner Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 63 I. C. C. 47, 53.

(g) So long as a charge is published for placing shipments at points of unloading on private industry tracks, carriers must, upon demand, perform the service, but it does not necessarily follow that they would be under any common-carrier obligation to do the switching if no charge were published. Carriers perform services voluntarily or under stress of competition which are not within their duty as common carriers, and which they can not be required to perform in the absence of undue prejudice or unjust discrimination. Whitaker-Glessner Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 47, 54, 55.

(h) The Commission can require carriers to perform interchange switching if found to be a reasonable transportation service incident to the line haul, but it can not compel them to act as a unit, or to do the work at the convenience and to the satisfaction of shippers. It can not order carriers to make an allowance and whether a shipper shall receive an allowance in lieu of such switching service is optional with the carriers. whitaker-Glessner Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 63 I. C. C. 47, 56.

(i) Proposed restriction by the Southern Ry. Co., of its receipt of coal from the L. & N. R. R. Co., to its Decatur street interchange tracks in Atlanta, Ga., on traffic consigned to industries and distributors on the Southern's belt line, found not justified. Present method appears to operate satisfactorily, and, from an economic standpoint is preferable to forcing this traffic to move the long distance around the belt line. Interchange Switching at Atlanta, 63 I. C. C. 258.

(j) Increased charges resulting from the refusal of trunk line carriers to pay an allowance to complainant or its industrial line for terminal switching and spotting to and from its plant at Pittsburgh, Pa., while performing like services without additional charge for other industries in the same district, found to have resulted in unreasonable charges but not in undue prejudice by reason of uncertainty as to whether competitors were similarly circumstanced as to operating conditions. Reparation awarded from earliest date within the period of the statute of limitations down to the date when such allowances were again restored. Oliver Iron & Steel Co. v. P. &. L. E. R. R. Co., 64 I. C. C. 447.

§6. Reciprocal Switching.
See Reciprocal Switching.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where a carrier has entered into a reciprocal switching arrangement, it must accept shipments for delivery to the extent of its capacity. Crescent Coal & Mining Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 559, 565.

(b) The ideal condition in a great city would be where all lines reciprocally absorbed switching charges, so that the rate carries with it a delivery to any point within the city limits. But it is always difficult to draw the line which bounds the district within which switching charges shall be absorbed. The industry or locality located without the district feels itself discriminated against when compelled to pay an additional charge. And the expense of making deliveries in a great city is very considerable. While the reciprocal absorption of switching charges may, and usually does, substantially offset itself between different carriers so that the actual money payment from one to the other is small, still the cost of the service must be borne by someone. Where the rate which the shipper pays to his industry is fixed without any reference to the terminal cost it is evident that he may receive an unfair advantage as compared with the industry located at some point where the expense of the terminal delivery is very much less. Thus industries located at great terminals like Detroit or Chicago may receive a greater service in proportion to what they pay than do their competitors located at country points. The tendency of this is to concentrate business, whereas it might be better on many accounts if it could be more generally diffused. Detroit Switching Charges, 28 I. C. C. 494, 496.

(c) Reciprocal switching arrangements under which all carload freight, both competitive and noncompetitive, is switched between all lines at uniform switching charges, place all the railroads entering a city in competition for the business of every shipper, and thus afford the best possible service to the public. Financial Relations, Etc., L. & N. R. R. Co., 33 I. C. C. 168, 201.

(d) Carriers should endeavor to conduct their switching operations for other carriers without loss, and charges for their services based on cost are preferable to nominal charges based on so-called reciprocity in service. But a cost basis can not fairly be adopted at one point on its lines where connecting line switching is done provided, of course, that injury results. Substantial injury resulting from such a course would clearly constitute undue prejudice. Nashville Switching, 40 I. C. C., 474, 481.

(e) A reciprocal switching arrangement between certain carriers does not justify their refusal to absorb the switching charges of another carrier, notwithstanding the smaller volume of traffic of the latter, if in fact unjust discrimination or undue prejudice is shown to result. National Spring & Wire Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 60 I. C. C. 564, 565.

(f) The fact that interchange switching rates are or are not reciprocal, is unimportant, as the so-called reciprocity theory of establishing switching charges has been condemned by the Commission. Reciprocal Switching at Kansas City, Mo.-Kans., 68 I. C. C. 591, 596.

(g) The fact that the interchange facilities are inadequate for convenient operation is not of itself a defense if through routes are shown to be necessary or desirable in the public interest Facilities for interchange exist, and if inadequate, they may be made adequate to quate, they may be made adequate to perform the service which the law requires. York Mfrs. Ass'n. v. P. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C. 40, 50.

(h) Practice of the Pennsylvania R. R. and the Western Maryland Ry. of each extending to the other the use of its tracks to effect terminal receipt and delivery of freight at industries within a limited zone in York, Pa., while refusing to extend such use at other industries simlarly located within the city but without the zone, found to result in undue prejudice. York Mfrs. Asso. v. P. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 40, 50.

(i) Arrangements sought whereby the Kansas City Southern would be required to interchange traffic with its competitor, the Southern Pacific, at Port Arthur, Tex., legally possible only through a condemnation of the terminals of the K. C. S. for use by the S. P., which has access thereto provided the traffic moves via Beaumont, Tex. HELD, prayer equivalent to establishment of a through route and joint rate embracing less than the full length of the K. C. S. and it should not be required to afford such facilities to other roads. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry., 73 I. C. C., 361.

(j) In original report, 61 I. C. C., 646, proposed increased interchange switching charges of the M. & St. L. R. R. and the Railway Transfer Co., at Minneapolis, Minn., were found not justified, and reasonable charges were prescribed. Upon further hearing, based upon cost studies, charges higher than those prescribed found justified and former report modified accordingly. Switching and Absorption at Minneapolis 74 I. C. C. 116.

(k) Reciprocity is a factor extraneous to the service and so indefinite, uncertain and speculative, as well as variable, that it is not entitled to weight as a reason for differentiating in switching charges. U. S. War Department v. A. & S. Ry., 77 I. C. C. 317, 360.

(l) Carriers should endeavor to conduct their switching operations for other carriers without loss, and charges for their services based on cost are preferable to normal charges based on so-called reciprocity in services. But a cost basis can not fairly be adopted at one point on a carriers lines, while a nominal charge basis is retained at all other points on its lines where connecting line switching is done, provided, of course, that injury results. Substantial injury resulting from such a course would clearly constitute undue prejudice. U. S. War Department v. A. & S. Ry. 77 I. C. C. 317, 360.

(m) Reciprocal switching charges are made without regard to the cost of the service and therefore may not be an accurate measure of a reasonable charge for a particular switching service. Oakes Co. v. M., St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 77 I. C. C. 93, 95.

(n) Reciprocal switching charges are assessed upon traffic received from or delivered to rail lines, while higher industrial switching charges are assessed on traffic from or to the Mississippi-Warrior River barge line. HELD: Reciprocity is a factor extraneous to the service and so "indefinite, uncertain, and speculative," as well as variable, that it is not entitled to weight as a reason for a differential in the charges, and the element of reciprocity, as between the rail carriers, found not to justify the difference. U. S. War Dept. v. A. & S. Ry., 77 I. C. C. 317, 360.

(o) Defendant's refusal to switch interstate traffic from complainant's plant in Philadelphia, Pa., to Richmond Junction, in the same city, for interchange with P. & R., or to establish charge therefor, found not in contravention of the act. Present interchange facilities are ample, and through routes and joint rates thereover not shown unreasonable. Facilities at Richmond Junction are limited, and establishment of switching charge sought might result in short-hauling of defendant to points reached by its own rails. Lupton's Sons Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 93.

(p) Complainant alleged refusal of defendants, N. Y. C., and Erie and International Ry. to effect interchange of carload freight among themselves at a point in the vicinity of the intersection of Mill Street by Transit road in Lockport, N. Y., to establish switching charges for application between such point and industrial and team track deliveries in that city, and to reciprocally absorb such charges of the respective carriers, is unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory and unduly prejudicial. The major portion of the city, called upper town is situated upon an elevation, about 100 feet above the balance of the city called lower town. The Central serves both upper and lower town. There is no switch or physical connection between the International and the Central in upper town, and there is no request for such connection. The complaint asks for the interchange of traffic between these carriers at their present switch connection at Mill Street and Transit Road in lower town. Each carrier serves only industries reached by its own rails or by rails over which it has trackage rights. No competition exists between industries in lower town on the one hand and upper town on the other. Traffic and operating difficulties which would have to be encountered in effecting interchange between defendants at lower town of traffic to or from upper town, have no parallel at the other Niagara frontier points. At present carload traffic originating on the tracks of one carrier in upper town and destined to the other carrier in upper town is moved to North Tonawanda and there switched to the other carrier for haul back to Lockport, necessitating a movement of about 15 miles each way, for which defendants charge the line haul rates. Through routes and joint rates have been established between upper town and lower town and practically all points from or to which there is any substantial movement, and defendants have agreed to establish through routes and joint rates wherever there appears a reasonable demand for service under such rates. The Commission is not convinced upon this record that a requirement for interchange of traffic from or to upper town at the designated point in lower town would necessarily be in the public interest. The difficulties of operation which this traffic would have to encounter if such a requirement were made leads the Commission to the view that if interchange of this traffic is to be made at points other than North Tonawanda, as at present, it should be arranged at a point in upper town. HELD: Refusal to effect interchange of carload traffic from or to upper town, Lockport, at the point designated in lower town, not unreasonable or otherwise unlawful, complaint dismissed. Lockport Board of Commerce v. N. Y. C. R. R. 80 I. C. C. 144.

(q) Carriers brought suit to enjoin the order of the commission providing for reciprocal switching between the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Western Maryland at York, Pa. Three railroads serve York, the Pennsylvania, the Pennsylvania, and Western Maryland. York is divided into two zones by the carriers. In one, the inner zone, the Pennsylvania and Western Maryland interchange freight. The Western Maryland is not allowed to interchange freight with the Pennsylvania outside the zone but must turn its traffic over to the Pennsylvania at a junction point nineteen miles from York. The facts are briefly stated in the opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission. "There are about 300 industries of various kinds at York. More than 100 have spur tracks connecting them with one or more carriers. There are 17 industries within the zone; of these 8 connect with the Western Maryland, 7 with the Pennsylvania and 2 with both lines. East and west of the zone, where the railroads diverge, are 8 industries, with industry tracks leading to both the Pennsylvania and Western Maryland. Also outside the zone 46 industries are reached exclusively by the various lines of the Pennsylvania, 27 by the Maryland & Pennsylvania, and 5 by the Western Maryland. During an average month the inbound and outbound traffic on the Pennsylvania and that handled in connection with the Maryland & Pennsylvania amounted to 107,613 tons and that of the Western Maryland to 23,427 tons. If reciprocal switching was established, 86,000 tons of this traffic now controlled by the Pennsylvania would be open to the competition of the Western Maryland, and 6,696 controlled by the latter would be open to the competition of the Pennsylvania." The Interstate Commerce Commission found that discrimination was practiced against the Western Maryland and ordered that it be removed without specifying by what means it should be removed. The commission found it was not in the public interest to require the use of the terminal facilities of the main line of the Pennsylvania at York and therefore the court held that under this finding, the commission could not order the practice existing between the carrier within the zone extended to the industries outside of the zone, and that therefor, the only way in which the undue discrimination could be removed was by abolishing the reciprocal switching within the zone. HELD that the industries located outside the zone suffer from a disadvantage of location which they have no right to call upon the carriers to overcome, and that the order of the commission should be enjoined. Penn. R. Co. v. U. S. 295 Fed. 523.

(r) Reciprocal switching arrangements between a carrier and three of four connecting lines, involving an exchange of traffic which varies greatly in amount, do not remove the discriminatory character, under the Act, of the practice of the first carrier to refuse to interchange carload freight with the fourth connecting line within the switching limits of a city, while performing such services in connection with the other connecting carriers within such switching limits. Pennsylvania Co. v. United States, 35 Sup. Ct. 370, 374; 236 U. S. 351; 59 L. ed. 616.

(s) The use of the tracks or terminal facilities of one carrier is not given to another carrier, contrary to the provisions of the Act, by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission requiring a carrier to desist from its practice of refusing to interchange carload freight with one connecting carrier within the switching limits of a city, while performing such service in connection with other connecting carriers within such switching limits, such order giving the connecting carrier no right to run its cars over the terminals of the first carrier, or to use or occupy that carrier's stations or depots for purposes of its own, and containing no requirement that the connecting carrier be permitted to store its cars in the other carrier's yards, or make use of the carrier's freight houses or other facilities. Pennsylvania Co. v. United States, 35 Sup. Ct. 370, 374; 236 U. S. 351; 59 L. ed. 616.

(t) The property of one carrier is not appropriated without compensation to the use of another carrier, contrary to U. S. Const., 5th Amend., by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made under the supposed authority of the Interstate Commerce Act, requiring the first carrier to desist from its practice of refusing to interchange carload freight with one connecting carrier within the switching limits of a city, while performing such service in connection with other connecting carriers within such switching limits. Pennsylvania Co. v. United States, 35 Sup. Ct. 370, 376, 236 U. S. 351, 59 L. ed. 616.

(u) So long as two railway carriers furnish switching service to each other in their yards in a certain city on all business and to a third carrer on all except coal and competitive business, they may be compelled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the equal facilities requirement of the Act respecting interchange of traffic, to discontinue such discrimination against such third carrier, and to switch for it as they do for each other, since the carriers, having opened their yards for most purposes, cannot claim the protection of the proviso to that section that it shall not be construed as requiring any carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States, 35 Sup. Ct. 696, 697, 700. 238 U. S. 1; 59 L. ed. 1177.

(v) The property of two railway carriers which are furnishing switching service to each other in their yards in a certain city on all business, and to a third carrier on all except coal and competitive business, is not taken without due process of law by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made under the authority of the equal facilities requirement of the Act respecting the interchange of traffic, commanding them to discontinue such discrimination against the other carrier, and to switch for it as they do for each other. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States, 35 Sup. Ct. 696, 697, 700; 238 U. C. 1; 59 L. ed. 1177.

(w) Where three carriers were furnishing switching service at a terminal point to each other on all business and a fourth carrier on all business except coal and competitive business, an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission requiring the first mentioned carriers to refrain from discriminating against the fourth carrier so long as they exchange all business with each other is valid. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States 35 Sup. Ct. 696, 702; 238 U. S. 1; 59 L. ed. 1177.

(x) An arrangement whereby the entire switching service of each of two railroad companies over tracks separately or jointly owned by them is performed jointly by both operating as joint principals through a terminal association maintained by them as their joint agent, each switching for both itself and the other railroad, the charge therefor based on actual cost being made against the road having the transportation haul is a reciprocal switching arrangement, and constitutes a facility for the interchange of traffic between the lines of two railroads within the Interstate Commerce Act, providing that every common carrier shall, according to respective power, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates between such connecting lines; and hence the railroads doing such switching must afford equal facilities to all other lines for like interchange of traffic without discrimination. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States, 227 Fed. 258, 269.

(y) The duty of carriers to enter into reasonable reciprocal shipping arrangements can not be evaded by the device of some of the carriers employing a joint agency such as a terminal company to do such switching and refusing to do switching for other companies since the controlling test of the Act in imposing the obligation to make such arrangement lies in the work done rather than the particular device employed or the names applied to those engaged in it. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States, 227 Fed. 258, 269.

(z) Where the entire switching service of two railroad companies was performed jointly by both operating as joint principals through a terminal association as joint agent and the physical conditions surrounding the interchange of traffic between such roads were not substantially different from those surrounding the interchange of traffic between the lines and those of another road not a member of the Terminals Association, and the cost of the former being the same whether the traffic was competitive or not, the refusal of such roads to switch competitive traffic to and from the third road on the same terms as the noncompetitive traffic, while interchanging both kinds of traffic on the same terms with each other, constituted an "unjust discrimination" under the Interstate Commerce Act, §3, requiring every common carrier to afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic to connecting lines without discrimination, regardless of the fact that joint terminals have been constructed by the two members of the association at great expense and are maintained by them. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States, 227 Fed. 258, 259, 270.

§7. Right to Connection.

See Electric Lines VIII.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) An unlawful discrimination is made between complainant and other more favored shippers, which amount to undue and unreasonable preference by defendant of itself, where defendant declines to permit a sidetrack connection between its line and a switch or side track to complainant's coal mine in the Fairmont District of West Virginia, for the purpose of receiving interstate shipments of coal from its mine, while at the same time it provides and maintains side track connections for other mines in that district from which large quantities of coal are shipped to interstate destinations, and controls, through ownership of capital stock, large coal-mining enterprises in the Fairmont District. Red Rock Fuel Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 11 I. C. C. 438.

(b) In order for the Commission to have jurisdiction to order switch connection it is necessary that written application to the carrier therefor be made subsequent to the date upon which the amendment of June 29, 1906, giving jurisdiction in such cases, became effective. Barden & Swarthout v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 193.

(c) Complainants petition the Commission to require defendant to provide a switch connection to a proposed industrial siding on complainants' property in the city of Geneva, N. Y. A verbal understanding was had between complainants and defendant in 1904 for the construction of said siding and switch. Complainants refused to sign an agreement containing a stipulation that coal business should never be carried on in connection with the siding and switch, and defendant refused to make the switch connection. Complainants brought suit in court, proper service was not had, and case was abandoned. After the Act to Regulate Commerce was amended, complaint was filed with the Commission praying for an order for switch connection and for reparation on account of estimated business losses. HELD, That the Commission does not recognize the right of a carrier to dictate as to the business which will be conducted from and along a siding which is connected with its lines, excepting so far as may be reasonable with regard to commodities the transportation and storage of which is attended by much risk and danger to life and property. It is also HELD, That prior to the enactment of the amendments to the Act to Regulate Commerce, which were approved June 29, 1906, this Commission was not empowered to order such switch connection; that amendment, approved June 29, 1906, specifically requires complainants to make written applications upon the carrier for the desired switch connection; that in order for the Commission to have jurisdiction of the question it is necessary that such written application be made subsequent to the date upon which said amendment became effective. No such application has been made in this case since 1904, and the case is therefore dismissed because of lack of jurisdiction. Barden & Swarthout v. Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. 12 I. C. C. 194.

(d) Upon application for order for installation of side track from defendant's lines at Sioux Falls, S. D., to complainant's nearby coal sheds, it appearing at the hearing that defendant is willing to install such side track upon payment of actual costs thereof, and agreement by complainant that it may be removed when a proposed new station building is undertaken, no order made, but case retained awaiting action of parties. Nield v. C. St. P. M. & O. Ry. Co. 12 I. C. C. 202.

(e) Complainant, owning a railroad, about 1 mile long, from a point near the Southern Railway in McRae, Ga., to a point near the Seaboard Air Line, alleges that such railways decline to make with it physical connections at its termini: HELD, upon the facts and circumstances of the case, that as such connections are practicable, can be made without hazard to the public, and the complainant's prospective business is sufficient to justify the connections, defendants should give complainant the physical connections asked for, but they should be made at the expense of complainant. Definite order withheld pending action of defendants and taking of further testimony. McRae Terminal v. Southern Ry. Co. et al. 12 I. C. C. 270.

(f) While having the right to control the location of switch tracks to private industries in accordance with the evidence, the Commission is disposed, in recognition of the risk that arises from such interruptions of through rails, to leave the location of such tracks largely to the discretion and wisdom of the carrier. Weleetka Light & Water Co. v. Ft. S. & W. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 503, 505.

(g) Complainant, MacRae Terminal Company, applied for a physical connection with defendants. In 12 I. C. C. 270, the Commission expressed the opinion that such a connection should be ordered with both defendants, Southern Ry. and S. A. L. HELD, on account of the physical characteristics of the land and amount of traffic involved, the Commission reverses its former finding to the extent that no connection need be made with the Southern but may properly be with the S. A. L. MacRae Terminal Co. v. Southern Ry., 12 I. C. C. 545.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(h) An electric line is entitled to a switch connection with a steam road. Cincinnati & Columbus Traction Co. v. B. & O. S. W. R. R. Co., 20 I. C. C. 486, 494.

(i) Switch connections can be ordered by the Commission under section 1, only with a lateral branch line or with a private sidetrack. St. Louis, Springfield & Peoria R. R. v. P. & P. U. Ry. Co., 26 I. C. C. 226, 230.

(j) Under Section 1 the Commission has no authority to require a railroad to construct a private sidetrack and that its authority is limited to requiring a carrier to make a switch connection with a private sidetrack. National Industrial Traffic League v. A. & R., 61 I. C. C. 120, 121.

(k) In an action for damages due to refusal of carrier to construct a siding and switch connection at Complainant's mine while granting the same to complainant's vendee. HELD: Damages may not properly be predicated upon the difference between the price at which the mine was sold and the price it would have brought if equipped with a siding, for the reason that the sale of the mine was not the proximate result of the carrier's unlawful conduct. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 185, 186.

(l) Shipper must construct his sidetrack before the carrier is obliged to grant him a switch connection. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 187.

(m) Paragraph 9, section 1 of the act, makes it the duty of common carriers to construct, maintain, and operate, upon reasonable terms, switch connections with private side tracks which may be constructed to connect with their rails by shippers tendering interstate traffic for transportation, where such connection is reasonably practicable, can be put in with safety, and will furnish sufficient business to justify its construction and maintenance. Upon failure of the carriers to install and operate such a switch connection upon the shipper's written application, the Commission may make an order for it to comply with the provisions of section 1. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 187.

(n) Without deciding that term "transportation" in section 1 is broad enough to cover a siding and switch connection, paragraph 9 of section 1 makes it the duty of common carriers to construct, maintain, and operate switch connections with private sidetracks, but the shipper must construct his sidetrack before the carrier is obliged to grant him the switch connection. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 187.

(o) There is no duty on the part of a common carrer subject to the act to provide tracks off its lands to effect connection with an industry. Certain-Teed Products Corporation v. C. R. I. & P. Ry., 68 I. C. C. 260, 262.

(p) Paragraph 9 of section 1 makes it the duty of a common carrier under stated circumstances to construct, maintain, and operate, upon reasonable terms, switch connections with private side tracks which may be constructed to connect with its rails by shippers tendering interstate commerce. But this duty does not arise until the shipper has provided the side track. Certain-Teed Products Corporation v. C. R. I. & P. Ry., 68 I. C. C. 260, 263.

(q) If an industry desires a connection with a trunk line, the duty develops upon it to make arrangements for the procuring of a spur. Certain-Teed Corporation v. C. R. I. & P. Ry., 68 I. C. C. 260, 263.

(r) Authority of Interstate Commerce Commission to compel interstate carrier to make track connections is exclusive.—People ex rel. New York Cen. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 233 N. Y. 133, 135 N. E. 195.

(s) Under the Act as amended June 29, 1906, authorizing the Commission to order a main line to establish in proper cases a switch connection with a branch line, the application can only be made by a shipper and not by a carrier. I. C. C. v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co., 216 U. S. 531, 537, 30 Sup. Ct. 415, 54 L. ed. 605.

(t) A road is a lateral branch road within the meaning of section 1 of the Act as amended June 29, 1906, requiring the installation of a switch connection, when it is tributary to and dependent upon another for an outlet; where it is essentially a feeder, contributing traffic and capable of exchanging such traffic with the other road. It is not such where it is in effect an independent and competing line. Nor is this any less the case because it may not compete as to a portion of the territory involved. The question is to be determined according to the relation which the branch line bears to the railroad with which a switch connection is asked. This relation is one of road to road, and not of shippers or territory. A road does not have the character of a branch or lateral road as to some shippers in that territory, and not have it as to others. B. & O. S. W. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 195 Fed. 962, 967.

(u) The words "lateral branch line railroad," as used in the amendment to the Act of June 18, 1910, respecting the ordering by the Commission of switching conditions, does not refer to what the applicant railroad may become or be made by order of the Commission, but to what it already is when it applies. U. S. v. B. & O. S. W. R. R. Co., 33 Sup. Ct. 5, 6; 226 U. S. 14.

§7½. Switching for Other Carriers.

See Supra §6; Reciprocal Switching.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) York, Pa., is served by the Pennsylvania, Western Maryland and Maryland & Pennsylvania. The first two do not interchange at York car load traffic destined to or originating within that city, but interchange such traffic at Hanover, Pa., about 19.5 miles from York, and at other connecting points. Complainant alleged that the Western Maryland and Pennsylvania each use the tracks of the other to receive or deliver freight at industries within a limited zone within the city; that the Pa., and M. & P., interchange traffic at York on the basis of the York rates; that certain traffic passing thru York is there interchanged between the Penn. and W. M.; that defendants interchange traffic under reciprocal arrangements with each other and with other carriers at cities near York; that defendants refuse to render similar service to all shippers at York; and that defendants practices and rates resulting therefrom are unduly prejudicial to York and certain shippers therein. The W. M., expressed willingness to provide its just proportion of adequate interchange facilities, to enter into a switching arrangement with the Pennsylvania on a reciprocal basis, and also to absorb the charges of the M. & P. Pennsylvania assumed the burden of the defense. There are two points of physical connection between the Pennsylvania and the W. & M., short switch tracks which connect the lines within the zone. No tracks have been constructed with a view to use in interchanging traffic between the two lines. The interchange tracks of the Pennsylvania are adequate but not extensive. There is no continuity of rails between the M. & P., and W. M., except over the Pennsylvania. In practice, receipt and delivery of traffic is now limited to industries located between Codorus Creek and West Market Street. The carrier which performs the line haul effects terminal receipt and delivery at industries within the zone. Although the tracks continue side by side for some distance west of Market Street, such industries are construed to be beyond the agreement. Each carrier has in the past refused to extend the arrangement to include industries without the zone, or to handle in any manner, except via Hanover or other junction points, traffic on which the other carrier has received the line haul. Under the agreement between the carriers they accord the industries within the zone all advantages which would accrue to them if there were interchange at York with mutual absorption of switching charges. All shippers within the zone can utilize the services of both the W. M., and Pennsylvania, and equally with other shippers on the Pennsylvania the service of the M. & P. Where shippers without the zone do not dray, they are practically in the same position as if located on these lines in cities 39 miles apart, but with the added disadvantage that failure to route or errors by shippers or carriers may subject them to inconvenience and expense. From the standpoint of carriage, the situation of industries inside and outside the zone is substantially similar. They apparently form parts of one business community. The advantage of the shippers within the zone results from the contract of the carriers and not from a controlling transportation difference. In this case to require the Pennsylvania to afford use of its terminal facilities by another carrier would be tantamount in practical effect to requiring a division between such carriers of traffic naturally tributary to that line. The loss to the Pennsylvania and the gain to the Western Maryland would each be considerable. There is no showing that the shippers are so inadequately served at present that the Commission is warranted, from the standpoint of the public interest, in depriving the carrier first on the ground of an important volume of the traffic originating along its line, by the direct and affirmative exercise of the power to require the Pennsylvania to share its terminal facilities with the W. M., and it is therefore unnecessary to decide as to the practicability of such an arrangement. HELD, it has not been shown to be in the public interest to require the use of the terminal facilities or main line tracks of the Pennsylvania at York by the Western Maryland. HELD, further, the practice of the Pennsylvania and the W. M., of extending the use of their tracks to each other for the purpose of terminal receipt and delivery of freight at industries in York within the zone described, is unduly preferential of shippers within the zone and subjects shippers on their line without the zone to undue prejudice and disadvantage. HELD, further, practice of the Pennsylvania in interchanging traffic with the M. & P., and switching traffic to and from its junction while refusing to interchange with the W. M., is not unduly prejudicial to the W. M. York Mfrs. Assn. v. P. R. R. Co. 73 I. C. C. 40.

(b) In 68 I. C. C. 412, the commission investigated the intermediate switching charges at Peoria and Pekin, Ill., assessed by the Peoria and Pekin Union Ry. Respondent, by schedules filed, proposed to remove the discrimination and prejudice by the establishment of charges for intermediate service on traffic to and from the Burlington and Rock Island, and proposed changes in the charges formerly proposed on traffic to and from the Peoria Railway Terminal. Since the date of its creation, respondent has materially enlarged its facilities, and now owns 26.9 miles of main line, 116.5 miles of siding and yard tracks, 39 locomotives and 11 passenger and 234 freight cars. Respondent entered into contracts with all lines reaching Peoria which are still existent, except with complainant the M. & St. L., which expired March 31, 1921. As to through traffic interchanged between tenants, excepting the Northwestern, respondent generally performs no hauling service, except such as is incidental to breaking up and making up trains in the East Peoria yard. For this service respondent charges $2.40 per car, reduced from $2.70 on Oct. 3, 1922, this charge being absorbed by the line haul carriers. Respondent receives no greater amount from an individual tenant on a car interchanged with a nontenant than it receives on a car interchanged with another tenant. Should the proposed tariffs become effective, where there are no joint rates and the combination rates break on Peoria, the charges will accrue against the traffic. The resulting increase in rates has not been justified, and this furnishes one ground for requiring the cancellation of the proposed schedules. The unbroken construction put upon the interchange services of respondent as well by its proprietors and tenants as by the respondent itself from Feb. 1, 1881, until midsummer of 1921, is consistent only with the assumption that respondent in respect of these interchange services was exclusively an agent of its tenant lines and not a common carrier. Clearly, the extent to which and the time during which the respondent acts as an agency and the extent and the time as to which it acts as a common carrier can not depend on its mere say so. HELD, the tariffs can not be accepted and the commission will institute on its own motion an investigation to the end that lawful, just, reasonable and nonprejudicial practices, rates, and charges, and divisions thereof, be established. Intermediate Switching Charges at Peoria, Ill., 77 I. C. C., 43.

§8. Validity of Regulations.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The operation of a private sidetrack by a carrier is a different matter from the operation by it of the connection. If the prerequisite statutory conditions exist the connection must be made whether desired by the carrier or not, but in undertaking a service on a spur track off of its own right of way, the carrier may attach reasonable conditions to the undertaking, and a condition requiring the owner of the spur track to indemnify it against liability for fire while operating on the spur track is not unreasonable. CASES 1887-1908

(a) Reparation awarded for switching charges on coal at Kansas City paid during interval when switching charges were not absorbed in transportation charges. Leonard v. C. M. & St. P. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 492.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(aa) In an action for damages due to refusal of carrier to construct a siding and switch connection at complainant's mine while granting the same to complainant's vendee, HELD: Damages may not properly be predicated upon the difference between the price at which the mine was sold and the price it would have brought if equipped with a siding, for the reason that the sale of the mine was not the proximate result of the carrier's unlawful conduct. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 185, 186.

(b) In determining the amount of damages for loss of profits resulting from failure of carrier to construct a siding and switch connection, the Commission is restricted to shipments that would have moved in interstate commerce. Schlicher v. Director General, 62 I. C. C. 181, 186.

(ba) Where the commission prescribes for the future a system of switching charges based upon a theory essentially different from that which has hitherto been followed, involving a somewhat radical reconstruction of methods and practices which have at least had the sanction of long-standing custom and which the commission has recognized as tentative and experimental, it is not prepared to say that the charges which have prevailed in the past have been unreasonable to the extent that they exceeded those found reasonable for the future. Boston Wool-Trade Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 69 I. C. C. 309.

(c) Subsequent to movement tariff filed providing for absorption of switching charges. This is the same as a voluntary reduction in rates and no award of reparation can be made on these facts alone. Laclede-Christy Clay Products Co. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. A-105.

§9a. Secondary Switching.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) By "secondary" switching is meant the additional switching service sometimes incident to reconsignments within switching limits after a car has been placed for delivery, and the movement of partially loaded cars to other locations for completion of loading or unloading. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 282, 286, 287.

§9½. Switching Reclaims.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The payment of switching reclaims to industrial lines may result in preferences and advantages to proprietary industries. Undue preference of the shipper who happens to own an industrial road cannot be sanctioned in any guise. Birmingham Southern Ry. Co. v. Director General, 61 I. C. C. 551, 555.

§10. Tariffs and Publication.

See Tariffs.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Under the provisions of section 6 of the Act all terminal privileges and facilities extended to shippers must be specifically authorized by tariff and can not be inferred. Rule 10 of Tariff Circular 18-A requires that if the charges of a switching or terminal road are to be absorbed by a connecting line the tariff of the connecting road must specifically state that its rate includes such terminal service and that the connecting road will absorb such charges of the switching road as are published and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commisson. This rule further provides that if the switching road's charges are to be added to the charges of a connecting road the tariff of such connecting road must clearly state that the shipments are subject to switching charges named in tariffs on file with the Commission. Moore Stave Company v. Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Co. 41 I. C. C. 472, 473.

(b) The collection at transit point of switching charges of a belt line which delivered shipments to complainant for storage and to outbound carriers for movement to final destination, and which were in addition to the through rate and transit charges, found illegal. Shipments which move from a point of origin to final destination under transit arrangements are regarded as moving under a single continuous contract of carriage. Reparation awarded. Capital Warehouse Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 683.

(c) P. & P. U., is not shown as intermediate concurring carrier in tariffs naming joint rates via Peoria, or in many instances as an originating or delivering carrier in tariffs of the tenant lines naming rates to and from Peoria. But this has no particular significance as tariff regulations do not require the concurrence of purely intermediate or terminal switching lines in tariffs of this class. Minnepalos & St. Louis R. R. Co., v. P. & P. Ry., 68 I. C. C., 412, 416.

(d) Shipments were billed to Providence, R. I. Complainant's plant located within corporate limits of Providence, but carriers assessed additional charges for the movement from Providence to its plant contending that such plant located within the switching limits of Auburn, R. I., to which shipments should have been billed. HELD, as switching limits of Providence and Auburn not described, and industries located within the respective stations not shown in the tariffs, charges for movement from Providence to complainant's siding illegally assessed. Providence rate found legally applicable and reparation awarded. Atlantic Refining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 143.

(f) Cars switched from dock to carrier's scale, for weighing, and returned to dock, separate switching charges to and from scale being assessed by carrier without tariff authority. HELD: Charges collected found unreasonable to extent they exceeded single switching charge which would have been applicable under tariff had cars been removed after weighing to any point in zone other than point of origin. Reparation awarded. Mitsui & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C., 489.

(g) Cars switched from dock to carrier's scale, for weighing, and returned to dock. Switching tariff provided rates for "intraplant" and "intraterminal" switching. HELD: Movement was not "intraplant" switching within definition of tariff, and was not "from one track to another," within definition of "intraterminal" switching, which contemplates movement from one plant or industry to different plant or industry. Scale track was not point of actual or constructive delivery, and mere fact that cars were stopped at scale for weighing makes that point no more a destination or "another track" than would be any point along route at which, for operating reasons, cars might be momentarily stopped. Movement herein involved was not covered by tariff. Mitsui & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 489.

(e) Allegation that carrier has violated section 6 of the act through assessing and collecting without tariff authority switching charges on transit grain, predicated upon failure to state in tariff naming transit provisions the charges in connection therewith, not sustained. Tariff carrying rates of carrier contains general provision that switching charges at any point will be added to through rate unless provision is made for absorption. This is in accordance with requirements of rule 10 (a) of Tariff Circular 18-A. Detroit Board of Trade v. W. Ry. Co. 80 I. C. C. 723.

§11. Team Tracks and Side Tracks.

See Sidetracks; Sidings and Spur Tracks.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) While retaining the right to control the location of switch tracks to private industries in accordance with the evidence, the Commission is disposed, in recognition of the risk that arises from such interruptions of through rails, to leave the location of such tracks largely to the discretion and wisdom of the carrier. Weleetka Light & Water Co. v. Ft. S. & W. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 503.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) There is a difference between industrial and team tracks. The former are for handling of carload freight to and from such plants. The cost of construction is usually borne in part by the owners of the plants. Carload freight is switched there, regardless of whether the carrier performing the switching service participated in the line haul. Shippers have no part in the construction or maintenance of team track. They are analagous to freight depots in that they bear the same relation to carload freight that the depot does to less-than-carload freight. R. R. Com. of Arkansas v. St. L. I. M. & S. R. Co., 24 I. C. C. 292, 294.

(c) Switching to an industrial track is a service for which a regular tariff charge is frequently made by carriers, and is over tracks or spurs as to which the cost of construction is generally borne in part by owners of the plants to which they extend. Team-track delivery is a service rendered by carriers in receiving and delivering carload freight in connection with their own line business, and is over tracks owned by the carriers. It is a service for which no separate tariff charge is provided and which is analogous to freight-depot service for less-than-carload freight. Railroad Commission of Arkansas v. St. L. I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 24 I. C. C. 293, 295.

(d) "Commercial" stations are analogous to private sidings. Rates in Chicago Switching District, 34 I. C. C., 234, 236.

(e) The shipper whose warehouse is located adjoining a public team track pays no rental for use of the track and no part of cost of maintaining it, but he must pay the spotting charge; and if his warehouse or platform is on defendant's land or encroaches on the defendant's right of way he must pay a rental that is nominal except where land values are high. R. R. Com'rs. of Fla. v. F. E. C. Ry. Co., 42 I. C. C. 616, 619.

(f) The closing clause of section 3 does not mean that a carrier, if adequately paid therefor, may deny to the shipping public the use of its team tracks on strictly noncompetitive traffic to be received from or delivered to a connecting line at its terminals. To deny such service would, against public convenience, leave rail communications between widely separated sections of the same industrial centers within reach of only such shippers as are fortunate enough to secure exclusive control over industry tracks or private sidings. The statute, however, vesting the administrative body with power to determine the question of reasonableness, lays a duty upon the carriers to furnish team-track and other terminal services only to an extent that is fully responsive to the reasonable requirements of the public; and this duty is neither subordinate to nor modified by the closing clause of section 3, which is intended only to protect the carriers against the use of their terminals by others engaged in like business. Tulsa Traffic Asso. v. St. L. S. F. Ry., 49 I. C. C. 644, 647.

(g) Perhaps the most common form of delivery is the setting of a car on team tracks of the carrier, where it may be conveniently unloaded, usually by the consignee. Another common form and substitute for team-track delivery is the switching of a car to the private siding of a consignee whose place of business is contiguous to the trunk line, clear of the main tracks. United States Cast Iron Pipe and Foundry Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 677, 682.

(h) In testing the extent of a carrier's legal obligation as to delivery of c. l. freight, the extent of the service involved in a typical team-track delivery or in the typical shunting of a car upon a siding of a shipper clear of the main track—the substitute for team-track delivery—are entitled to primary consideration. United States Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 677, 683.

(i) Wherever a delivery service properly may be construed as the equivalent of team track or simple switching delivery, and the rendition of such service is practical the Commission may compel a carrier to perform such service with its own equipment as part of its legal obligation as to delivery of c. l. traffic. As the magnitude of the service becomes greater than the equivalent of team-track or simple switching delivery the demand on the carrier for it's performance tends to exceed what may be regarded as a proper delivery service under transportation rates. United States Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 677, 683.

(j) Shipments delivered to complainant's private siding by P. & R. were switched by the Pennsylvania to another siding, both within the switching limits of Williamsport, Pa., for which latter service the Pennsylvania assessed a class rate. Lower switching charge in effect but tariff provided that 'this charge not applicable from or to tracks of connecting line." Contention that complainant's private siding should be considered an interchange track of the carriers held not sustained, and since shipments were switched from a private siding and not from tracks of a connecting carrier, lower switching charge legally applicable. Refund of overcharges directed. Central Pennsylvania Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 99.

(k) Respondent, South Georgia Ry., proposed to amend its switching and absorption tariff by designating the track on which the warehouse of the Perry Grocery Company at Perry, Fla., is located as "house, team or dray tracks". Respondents tariff provides for assessment of a switching charge of $2.25 per car on all carload traffic destined to, or originating at, warehouses or industries located on its rails, within switching limits, which traffic has been or will be transported by connecting lines, and also for the absorption of a like charge on traffic transported by it in either direction, when destined to or originating at warehouses or industries located on connecting lines within switching limits. The above rules do not apply on traffic to or from dray or team tracks. For a number of years protestants warehouse has been treated by respondent as not being on dray or team tracks. The track not only serves protestants warehouse but the northern portion is used as a house or team track by respondent. It would appear that the real reason for the proposed change is to compel protestant to route its shipments over the line of respondent. HELD, proposed schedules not justified. Switching at Perry, Fla., 83 I. C. C. 23.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) In a proceeding to determine the reasonableness of switching charges, it is immaterial that proceedings were instituted solely from complainant's desire to recover charges which have accrued through an intermediate carrier's failure to observe consignee's instructions as to delivery. Bottsford & Barrett v. P. R. R. Co., 29 I. C. C. 469, 671.

(b) A general finding by the Commission with respect to switching rates in a certain city, is no justification for proposed increased rates in a particular case, which increased rates the law requires the respondent to show are just and reasonable. Switching at Baltimore, 30 I. C. C. 581, 584.

(c) Where interest and taxes are borne by the tenant lines, those items can not be disregarded in determining the reasonableness of the switching charges.

R. R. Comm. of La. v. A. H. T. Ry. Co., 48 I. C. C. 312, 580.

(d) Carrier that performs a switching service, the entire charge for which is absorbed by the line-haul carrier, is not a necessary party to a proceeding involving the reasonableness of the rate under which the absorption is made. Finding in DuPont de Nemours Powder Co. Case, 43 I. C. C. 227, reversed. DuPont de Nemours Powder Co. v. P. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 203.

(e) Switching charges differ from line haul rates in that they are ordinarily not graded in accordance with either the value of the commodity moved or the distance of movement. Boston Wool Trade Association v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 282, 294.

(f) It is evident that a policy with respect to switching charges which adds to flexibility and convenience in the use of the transportation facilities serving an industrial center will also create conditions favorable to its growth and prosperity. Boston Wool Trade Association v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 282, 295.

(g) Switching costs can probably be ascertained with approximate accuracy only through a system of accounts designed for the purpose and maintained over a considerable period of time. Boston Wool Trade Association v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 282, 299.

(h) The Commission has already expressed the opinion that there is little reason for grading switching charges as line haul rates are graded, in accord with distance hauled or the value of the commodity transported. Boston Wool Trade Association v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 282, 301.

(i) A stated rate per car will spread the burden of switching costs, on the whole, more equitably than a stated rate per ton. Boston Wool Trade Association v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 282, 304.

(j) In making a general separation of the expense chargeable to interchange and interior plant switching the engine hour will usually be found a safer guide than cars handled. Moshassuck Valley R. R. Co. v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R., 69 I. C. C. 368, 373.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Increased charges for switching at Kansas City, Mo.-Kans., proposed by the St. Louis-San Francisco Ry., Missouri Pacific R. R., and Kansas City Southern Ry., found not justified. Cost studies submitted by carriers were based upon a formula agreed upon after conference, but the volume of business during the test period was subnormal and a considerable portion of the costs included in the studies is more or less constant and varies but little with the volume of business. Furthermore, operating costs should be coming down, and certain road-haul rates have been reduced. Reciprocal Switching at Kansas City, 68 I. C. C. 591.

(b) The work of making and breaking up trains and the arrangement of cars in a train in station order are road and not switching services. Reciprocal Switching at Kansas City, 68 I. C. C. 600.

(c) Engine hour basis found to be a safer guide than number of cars handled for making a separation of cost of interchange and plant switching. Aluminum Co. v. M. T. R. R. Co., 69 I. C. C. 119, 123.

(d) It is obviously dangerous to predicate conclusions as to cost of switching upon cost figures for short test periods which may or may not reflect average conditions. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 69 I. C. C. 282, 298.

(e) It costs substantially less to deliver a car received in line-haul movement to a connecting carrier than it does to deliver it at a private siding. The movement from the break-up yard to the point of connection is usually simple as compared with the movement to the siding, and in the former case the expense of moving out the empty car is also saved. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. Director General as Agent, 69 I. C. C. 300.

(f) The most expensive switching operation is undoubtedly the so-called intraterminal movement, where a car is switched from a point of origin to another point of destination in the switching district, the movement being complete in itself as distinguished from a movement to or from a connecting line. Such movement is usually complicated and also requires the switching in of the empty car for loading and a similar switching out after unloading. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 69 I. C. C. 300.

V. SWITCHING DISTRICTS.

§13. In general.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Carriers are within their rights in establishing reasonable territorial limits for the operation of their switching engines and in giving industries within those limits the benefit of any resulting economies. New Bedford Board of Commerce v. Director General, 55 I. C. C. 320, 322.

(b) A contention that assessment of switching charges in addition to line-haul rate against shippers taking delivery on public team tracks, and absorption of such charges in the case of industries served by private tracks results in undue prejudice. HELD, rate adjustment within Chicago district is exceedingly complex and ordinary prudence dictates that the Commission should not prescribe a change in this adjustment or require a reduction in any specific rate therein, except after careful examination of all the facts, both as regards the rate itself and also its relation to the general adjustment. Silica Sand Producers Asso. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 63 I. C. C. 217, 219.

(c) Where a carrier held itself out to perform switching deliveries at a city, and did not in its tariff limit or describe the district in which the switching was to be performed, the logical interpretation of the tariff is that such deliveries were to be made anywhere on its lines within the city and not merely to some undefined section or portion of the city. Koenig Coal Co. v. H. V. Ry. Co., 63 I. C. C. 392.

(d) It does not necessarily follow from the failure of a carrier to name any switching boundaries in a tariff which subsequently became effective that the boundaries named in the former tariff were not intended. It might be as forcefully argued to the contrary that by the tariff which subsequently became effective carrier did not intend to abandon the switching limits as theretofore designated and extend its switching district to coincide with the incorporated limits of the city. Koenig Coal Co. v. H. V. Ry. Co., 63 I. C. C. 392, 394.

(e) The limits of Chicago switching district, determined under the Lowery tariffs many years ago as the result of prolonged conference and negotiation between carriers and shippers should not be reconstructed by the Commission on the record in the instant case. Illinois Birck Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 64 I. C. C. 273, 278.

(f) Charges on shipments reconsigned from Angora to Pascal and Fifty-second Street, within the corporate limits of Philadelphia, Pa., assessed under a tariff rule which provided that cars placed and reforwarded without being unloaded, to points outside switching limits would be subject to rate from point of reshipments plus reconsignment charges, found unreasonable to extent they exceeded charges based upon a rule which provided that such shipments forwarded to points within switching limits would not be subject to reconsignment charges but would be subject to switching or local rate in addition to rate from point of origin to billed destination. Reparation awarded. Newton Coal Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 33.

(g) The commission has recognized the advantages accruing to the public as well as to the carriers from the establishment of switching districts, but the proximity of points just beyond such districts can not be ignored when the question of through rates to the latter points comes up for consideration. This is particularly true when there is a substantial competition between the points within and without the districts. Chicago Coal Merchants Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 161, 172, 173.

(h) Rates on coal and limestone from Missabe Junction, Minn., to Steelton, Minn., both within the corporate limits of Duluth, Minn., as increased by the Director General under General Order No. 28, and subsequently reduced pursuant to a freight-rate authority, found not unreasonable as compared with rates prescribed in other cases between other points for similar distances. Minnesota Steel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 571.

(i) Shipments were billed to Providence, R. I. Complainant's plant located within corporate limits of Providence, but carriers assessed additional charges for movement from Providence to its plant, contending that such plant was located within the switch limits of Auburn, R. I., to which shipments should have been billed. HELD, as switching limits of Providence and Auburn not described, and industries located within the respective stations not shown in the tariffs, charges for movement from Providence to complainant's siding illegally assessed. Providence rate found legally applicable and reparation awarded. Atlantic Refining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 143.

(j) Complainant attacked switching charges on numerous carloads from Helena to West Helena, Ark., as illegal. West Helena is at the end of a spur track of the M. P., which leaves the main line at a point within the yard limits of Helena. The distance between the two points, is 7 miles. Charged at $5, $6.50, $7 or $9 per car, depending on the commodity and the date of movement applicable on interstate traffic. The intrastate distance tariff named $4 per car prior to June 25, 1918 and $5 thereafter. The switching limits at Helena were not defined in the tariffs. However, it is not essential to the application of switching rates that this be done. West Helena is within the Helena yard limits and has always been treated as within the Helena switching district. The movement clearly was a switching service within the switching limits of Helena. HELD, charges attacked illegal to extent they exceeded $4 prior to June 25, 1918 and $5 thereafter, reparation awarded. Helena Traffic Bureau v. Director General, 77 I. C. C. 197.

(k) Where tariffs do not define the switching limits, such limits must be determined by the area within which the carriers actually render switching service. Helena Traffic Bureau v. Director General, 77 I. C. C. 197, 198.

(l) It is not essential to the application of switching rates that switching limits be defined in tariffs. Where tariffs do not define the switching limits, such limit must be determined by the area within which carriers actually render switching service. Helena Traffic Bureau v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 197, 198.

(m) The line marking limits of a switching district must, of course, be drawn somewhere, but where it should be drawn must depend on each case upon facts developed, including extent of industrial district, relative mileages and transportation conditions, and commercial competition. Sand from Points in Kansas, 78 I. C. C. 687, 691, 692.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) A policy with respect to switching charges which adds to flexibility and convenience in the use of the transportation facilities serving an industrial center will also create conditions favorable to its growth and prosperity. The determination of the reasonable limits of a switching district presents difficulties, and it may be that in some cases such districts have been unduly enlarged and extended. §1. Definition of tap line.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Logging roads, or tap lines, to which the defendant grants allowances from its published rates, are not common carriers, but such tap lines are the private properties of mill owners, and the allowances are therefore unlawful. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. I. C. R. R., 10 I. C. C. 506, 545.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(aa) A tap line to be entitled to share in the division of joint rates, must be a common carrier, and not a mere plant facility. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. S. H. Bolinger & Co., 279 Fed. 564.

(b) Originally it was usual to refer to all the rails used in a lumber mill operation as a "Logging Road," but since the practice of making allowances to the lumber companies west of the Mississippi River has crept in, the rails leading from the mill to or through the timber, and usually to a logging camp or company town, have come to be known as the main line or "tap line". The spurs rediating into the forest from the point or from other points along the main line are now usually referred to as the "logging road." The Tap-Line Case, 23 I. C. C. 277, 285.

§1½. Suspension.

See Suspension of Rates.

§2. Jurisdiction of Commission.

See Interstate Commerce Commission I; Jurisdiction of Commission.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The commission has power to prevent abuses of industrial lines in division of through rates. McRae Terminal R. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 270.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(aa) Because the conclusion is reached that a tap line railroad is a common carrier and therefore entitled to participate in joint rates, it does not follow that divisions of joint rates may be made with it at the will of the carriers and without the power of the Commission to control the same. Industrial Railways Case, 32 I. C. C. 129, 131.

(b) The division of through rates between trunk line railways and tap lines as prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission is not necessarily arbitrary because, while classifying all service rendered by the tap lines for distances up to three miles from junction points as switching, and allowing for this a division of $2 and $3 a car, allowances for all distances above three miles are based upon mileage. O'Keefe v. United States, 36 Sup. Ct. 313, 316.

(c) In view of the rates voluntarily fixed by a terminal railway, a finding by the Commission that an absorption by a trunk line of the terminal railway's charges to the extent of $4.50 per car was unlawful as tending to give a preference or rebate to its controlling stockholder, which was also the largest shipper, held not subject to attack as being so unreasonably low as to deprive the terminal railway of its property without compensation. Manufacturers' Ry. Co. v. United States, 38 Sup. Ct. 383.

(d) Under the Interstate Commerce Act, §15, providing that a shipper render a service connected with the transportation can receive, only a just allowance therefor, and authorizing the Commission to determine a reasonable charge as the maximum to be paid by the carrier for the services rendered, the amount which a lumber company is entitled to receive from a carrier for services in switching cars from its mill to the carrier's main line and in weighing them is a question within the jurisdiction of the Commission, and on which its determination is conclusive, unless set aside on direct attack. Finkbine Lumber Co. v. Gulf & S. I. R. Co., 269 Fed. 933.

§3. Test of Status.

(1) In general.

See Allowances §10; §11; Common Carrier §1; Transportation I.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Whether a tap line is a common carrier cannot be determined by mere ownership. Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 277, 292.

(b) In deciding whether industrial railways may enter into joint rate arrangements with trunk lines, it must be determined with respect to each of the lines, first, whether the instrumentality performing the service is a bona fide common carrier; second, whether the service which it performs between the point of interchange with the trunk line and point of placement on the line of the industrial road is plant service or public transportation; third, whether a charge should be made for such service in addition to the line-haul rate applicable to or from. In determining these questions there is to be considered the large economic problem whether part of the money paid to the trunk line carriers for public transportation service is to be used to defray the expense of particular shippers in conveying their traffic to and from the terminals of the trunk line carrier. Second Industrial Railways Case, 34 I. C. C. 596, 600.

(c) Tap lines, when incorporated under state authority as common carriers and holding themselves out to the public as common carriers, are not devices to secure unlawful advantages for the proprietary lumber companies, but in fact and in law sustain the relation of common carriers toward the public. Davis Bros. Lumber Co. v. C. R. I. & P. R. R., 46 I. C. C. 501, 504.

(d) In determining whether a railroad company is a common carrier, evidence concerning fences surrounding the plants of a car company and a large part of such railroad company's tracks material only in so far as it bears upon the good faith of the offer to carry for the public and the ability of the public to accept such offer. P. A. & McK. R. R. R. Co. v. Director General, 57 I. C. C. 1. 4.

(e) It does not necessarily follow that all railroads complying with the laws and regulations governing common carriers become common carriers by virtue of such compliance alone, although it may be not without significance. Wyandotte Terminal Ry. 62 I. C. C. 1, 5.

(f) It is the right of the public to use a roads facilities and to demand service of it rather than the extent of its business which is the real criterion determinative of its character. Sun Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 11, 14.

(g) It is the right of the public to demand and use the carrier, rather than the extent of the tonnage it carries, that is the real criterion of whether it is a common carrier. Divisions of the Brimstone Railroad & Canal Co., 68 I. C. C. 375, 386.

(h) The fact that the same corporation indirectly controls two of the roads and owns the larger portion of the ore shipped over them demands a strict interpretation of any standard of reasonableness which is adopted, although the right of the roads to earn a fair return upon the property devoted to public use is not questioned. Adriatic Mining Co. v. C. & N. W. Ry., 78 I. C. C. 611, 619.

§3 (2). Effect of Incorporation.

See Common Carrier §1.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The mere fact of incorporation can not transform a plant facility into a common carrier, and while the extent to which the public uses the facilities of a railroad is not controlling, there must be some appreciable use of the railroad by the public or else the holding out to carry for all is merely an empty form. In the matter of the Inland Railway Company, 78 I. C. C. 59, 64.

§4. When plant facility.

See Infra §6; Allowances §12; §12 (2); Common Carrier; Transportation I.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) With few exceptions, the tap lines in the lumbering regions in the southwest are purely plant facilities. Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 277, 297.

(b) Where the industrial line acts only in the capacity of a plant facility and not a common carrier, the trunk lines need not, in the absence of unjust discrimination, make any allowance so long as they are ready to perform the switching wherever by custom and general usage the line-haul rate covers that service. Therefore an allowance in excess of the cost to the trunk line of switching to and from the plant would be unlawful. By granting more the trunk lines would in that measure be depleting their revenues. The allowance is further limited in that it may not exceed the reasonable cost to the industry of performing the service. C. W. P. & S. R. R. Case, 37 I. C. C. 408, 414.

(c) Where access to certain plant railways by the public may be obtained only through the permission of the controlling industry, the holding out is not genuine. National Tube Co. v. B. & O. & O. R. R. 50 I. C. C. 489, 492.

(d) That the plant is surrounded by a fence, is of no special or controlling importance; without a fence it would still be a plant. National Tube Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 489, 492.

(e) It is questionable, even if the proprietary industry permit ingress to its plant and the use of its plant property and facilities for public transportation purposes, whether the industrial railway's facilities could be considered as being reasonably accessible to the public, where its tracks and facilities within the plant inclosure were arranged and laid out for the benefit and to meet the requirements of the industry; and the record conclusively shows that the industrial railway is operated for the convenience of the industry and not in any degree for the convenience of the public. Natl. Tube Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 489, 493.

(ea) Complainant contended it should receive compensation out of the through interstate rates for switching service performed by it. Complainant owns and operates a railroad, trackage 7,060 feet, not separately incorporated, under authority of its general charter. The hold tracks are used as interchange tracks, and are directly connected with the Belt Line at Indianapolis, Ind., over which all of the trunk lines having terminals at Indianapolis are reached. Inbound cars are delivered by the belt line on the hold tracks within the plant enclosure, and outbound cars are taken by it from the same tracks. The service performed by complainant consists of switching with its own locomotive and crew, loaded and unloaded cars from and to the hold tracks to and from convenient points of placement, the average haul being about 300 feet. At Plant B complainant maintains four or five tracks but does not operate a locomotive. Spotting of cars at that plant in connection with through interstate shipments is performed by the connecting carrier without charge in addition to the line haul rate. HELD, complainant operates its plant tracks as a plant facility and is not a common carrier under the act; and the trunk lines need not, in the absence of unjust discrimination or undue prejudice, make any allowance to complainant for services performed by it in connection with the transportation of through interstate shipments. American Hominy Co., 63 I. C. C. 319.

(f) The Commission investigated concerning rates, rules and practices of the Inland Railway Company handling salt from Saltair, Utah., and other points on the line to interstate destinations. The water from Great Salt Lake is pumped to a settling pond south of the Inland tracks. It remains there until the brine reaches a density of about 25% salt. It is then run into so-called investing ponds, north and south of the tracks in the vicinity of Crystal. The water is drained off, the salt is plowed and gathered into piles each containing from 600 to 800 tons. This crude salt constitutes the supply for the salt company. Some is shipped out in bulk as roasting stock or crude stock, and the rest is put through a milling process at the salt works and shipped as ice cream, No. 2, table No. 1, or dairy salt, or in compressed blocks. The line from Salt Lake City to Saltair Beach is known as the Salt Lake Garfield & Western. Prior to 1907 the Garfield performed all switching at the ponds and at the refinery. In 1907 the salt company built tracks connecting its refinery with the salt ponds, and the Garfield used these in hauling the crude salt to the refinery. For its services the Garfield received out of the joint rates a division of 5c per 100 pounds to Salt Lake City, but nothing was paid the salt company for the use of its tracks. In 1910 the salt company purchased an oil burning locomotive and performed its own switching between the ponds and the refinery. For its services the salt company received 50% of the revenue accruing to the Garfield, not covered by tariff provision. The Inland was incorporated in March 1916 and it acquired the railway tracks, right of way, rolling stock and other railway property of the stock company. The cars are used exclusively in the handling of the salt from the ponds to the refinery. It handles no mail, express, or passenger business and does not handle less carload business. Such shipments consigned to the salt company are unloaded from cars of the Garfield at Saltair Junction. The Inland serves no shippers other than the salt company. While it holds itself out as a common carrier, the record shows that since it began operations the only traffic it has handled in addition to that of the salt company consisted of two cars of junk shipped by two employees of the salt company. The Inland publishes no tariffs of its own but concurs and is shown as a participating carrier in other lines traffic. No shipping order, bill of lading or waybill is issued for the movement from the ponds to the refinery. While the control of the Inland by the salt company is not direct, the facts strongly support the conclusion that the Inland and the salt company represent but one enterprise and that operation of the Inland is in the exclusive interest of the salt company. The separate incorporation of the Inland obviously did not change the status of the operations theretofore conducted by the salt company. HELD, the Inland Ry. Company is not a common carrier, but a plant facility of the salt company, is not entitled to a division of joint rates, but it is not unlawful for the Garfield to pay it reasonable allowance for performing as its agent any portion of the transportation service beyond Saltair Junction customarily included in the interstate line haul rates which they do not elect to do for themselves. §5. Scope of tap line investigation.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Complainant alleged that because of orders in 23 I. C. C. 277, 31 I. C. C. 490 and supplemental orders of April 7, 1919, and Sept. 8, 1920, defendants have failed and refused to allow it reasonable and just divisions of the joint rates on the lumber traffic originating on its line. The question is not whether the present divisions are fair, but whether there have been such changes in the circumstances and conditions surrounding the ownership, control, and operation of complainant as would warrant the Commission in finding that there is no longer reason, in the public interest, for imposing limitations upon the divisions which it may receive out of the joint lumber rates. Complainants line extends from Prescott, Ark., to Highland, Ark., 33 miles, connecting with the M. P., at Prescott and with M. D. & G., at Tokio 4 miles from Highland. Including Prescott and Tokio there are 10 stations on the line with total population of 7,000. At the time of decisions in The Tap Line Cases, supra, complainant and the Ozan Lumber Company were owned and controlled by the same interests. Now the holders of a majority of the stock of the lumber company hold all the outstanding stock of the railroad. Territory which complainant serves with its own rails is now devoted largely to agricultural pursuits. It is evident that while the particular timber owned by the lumber company in 1912 has been cut, it has secured other timber which complainant transports from the forest to mill. There still exists substantial community of interest between complainant and the Ozan-Graysonia Lumber Company and complete control of the former by the majority stockholders of the latter. HELD, it is clearly the Commissions duty to retain full control over complainants divisions of joint rates on lumber, complaint dismissed. Prescott & Northwestern R. R. Co. v. M. P. R. R., 68 I. C. C. 487.

(b) The Commission has consistently refused to release any tap line from the application of the orders in the Tap Line case in the absence of complete separation of such tap line from the control of any lumber company in active operation and service by it. Prescott & Northwestern R. R. v. M. P. R. R., 68 I. C. C. 487, 490.

(c) Upon further hearing, petition of Natchez, Columbia & Mobile R. R. Co., seeking release from application of the commission's orders in The Tap Line case, 31 I. C. C., 490, denied. The commission has consistently refused to release any tap line from the application of such orders in the absence of complete bona fide separation of the interests controlling the railroad company from the interests controlling the lumber company, and there has been no such separation in the instant case. The principles announced in the original Tap Line case, 23 I. C. C., 277, still apply. Natchez, Columbia & Mobile R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 123.

II. POWERS AND DUTIES.

§6. When Common Carriers.

See Supra §4; Common Carriers §7½; Industrial Railroads.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) A railroad chartered by the State of Tennessee owns a short road wholly in that State, but never owned any rolling stock nor operated its road. The road was used and operated as a means of conducting interstate traffic in coal by companies owning connecting interstate roads. HELD, 1. That the short road is one of the facilities and instrumentalities of interstate commerce, and, as such, is subject to the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce. 2. In respect to ownership, corporate control, the authority or means of its construction. 3. As one of the "instrumentalities of shipment or carriage" it must be accessible to all interstate shippers on equal and reasonable terms. The public cannot be deprived of this right by the separate or joint action of defendants. 4. The traffic in question is interstate traffic. The companies conducting it use this short road as a facility to such traffic. They cannot be permitted to use it for purposes of discrimination between mine owners on its line. 5. The claim for pecuniary damages presents a case at common law, in which defendants are entitled to a jury trial. Heck v. Tennessee, Va., & Ga. R. Co., 1 I. C. R. 775.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) If there is a holding out as a common carrier for hire, and if there is an ostensible and actual movement of traffic for the public for hire, the status of a common carrier exists, whether the holding out is by a company or by an individual. But such a holding out and the existence of an actual traffic is not conclusive in all cases. Where the holding out is in furtherance of a plan to secure unlawful advantages and the alleged carrier is able to pick up some traffic that is incidental to that purpose it must be regarded simply as a cloak or device to effect unlawful results. The Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 277, 292.

(c) A tap line recognized as a common carrier by the Commission must itself recognize its obligations as such by conforming its accounting method to the requirements of the Commission, by filing annual reports and lawful tariffs, by obeying the hours of service law and the safety-appliance acts so far as they are applicable, and otherwise fulfilling the obligations and duties imposed by the Act on carriers engaged in interstate commerce. Any omission of its duty in this regard will be regarded as tending to show that the claim of the tap line to be a common carrier is a mere device to justify allowances or divisions. The Tap-line Case, 23. I. C. C. 277, 295.

(d) No tap line that is, in fact, a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce may haul the logs to the mill of the proprietary company free of charge. A free service is inherently unlawful. Nor may a trunk line set up a milling-in-transit privilege with a common carrier tap line by which the lumber rate is extended back through the mill point to the tree in the forest, unless it pursues the same course with respect to forests on its own line as such practice would otherwise grant an unlawful preference. The Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 277, 297, 298.

(e) If an industrial railway is a common carrier, it is entitled to all rights and subject to all limitations provided in the Act. Industrial Railways Case. 32 I. C. C. 129, 133.

(f) Trunk lines are not obliged to absorb the switching charges of common-carrier industrial lines. The Commission may, however, require carriers to remove unjust discrimination occasioned by the absorption of switching charges in certain instances and not in others, under like circumstances and conditions. The Commission may also where the facts justify such a course, require trunk lines to establish joint rates with connecting industrial lines lower than the combination on the junction point of the trunk line and the industrial line and may fix the divisions to be accorded the industrial line. C. W. P. & S. R. R. Case, 37 I. C. C. 408, 415.

(g) Mere fact of financial or corporate relationship between an industry and a common-carrier industrial railroad does not alone justify a trunk line in according the controlling industry less favorable treatment than that given independent industries served by the industrial railroad. Tidewater Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 226, 227.

(h) Former report 62 I. C. C. 1, the Wyandotte Terminal Railroad Company was found not to be a common carrier subject to the act. rehearing held. It files tariffs with the Commission, now owns 2.35 miles of main and spur tracks on the Wyandotte divisions and 4.53 miles of main and spur tracks on the Ford division. There is no physical connection except through the rails of the terminal at Wyandotte or Ford, Mich., between the D. T. & I. or the Shore Line, which uses the Ironton tracks, and the M. C. In order to effect interchange between these lines, it is necessary that an overhead switching service be performed by the Terminal. For this service the Terminal assessed its published rates. The Terminal maintains the only public team track in Ford, which has a poplation of about 4,000. No less car load freight is handled. HELD, Wyandotte Terminal Railroad Company is a common carrier subject to the act and may lawfully receive divisions or absorptions of its switching charges. Wyandotte Terminal Railroad Company, 68 I. C. C. 346.

(i) Natchez Columbia & Mobile R. R., was a party to the original Tap Line case, 23 I. C. C., 27, and in 31 I. C. C., 490, the commission found petitioner to be a common carrier, prescribed the maximum absorptions and divisions that might be paid by trunk lines to such connecting carriers out of their joint interstate rates on lumber and forest products. This proceeding was reopened on application that it be dismissed as a party to The Tap Line case and be relieved from the force and effect of the orders therein. The question raised is not that of the reasonableness of the present divisions, but whether there have been such changes in the circumstances and conditions surrounding the ownership, control and operation of petitioner as would warrant the commission in finding that reasons no longer exist, in the public interest, for imposing obligations upon the divisions that it may receive out of joint interstate rates on lumber and forest products. The petitioner is operated in all respects as a regular railroad. It maintains physical connection and interchanges traffic on interline way bills with the I. C., at Norfield and the N. O. G. N., at Tilton. Exclusive of logs, which comprise the major portion of the freight, 74 per cent of its tonnage is traffic of the Denkmann Lumber Co. and 26 per cent is that of the general public. Forest products, however, constitute from 96 per cent to 98 per cent of its total freight tonnage. Release from The Tap Line case has been granted only in those instances where there has been shown a complete and bona fide separation of interests in this case. HELD, petition must be denied. Natchez Columbia & Mobile R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C., 123.

(j) Upon petition of the South San Francisco Belt Ry., proceedings were had for the purpose of determining whether it should be excluded from the findings in the original report in Reduced Rates, 1922, 68 I. C. C. 676. Petitioner connects with the S. P., at South San Francisco, maintains 3.08 miles of tracks, its longest haul being 1.4 miles average about 1 mile. Practically all its service consists of switching carload freight between its interchange with the S. P., and the South San Francisco Union Stock Yards and six other industries located on petitioners tracks. Its only source of revenue is its charges for switching. Up to December 1920 its charge was $2.50 per car, subsequently it became $3.50 per car, this charge being usually absorbed by the trunk line carriers. No protest or objection has been made by any industry located on petitioners tracks, or by the carriers which absorb petitioners switching charges, to the granting of its petition. HELD, it should be excluded from the report shown. Reduced Rates, 1922, 77 I. C. C. 675.

§6½. Amount of Allowances.

See Allowances; Common Carriers §7½; Divisions.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Investigation by the Commission as to divisions allowed to the Hutchison & Arkansas River R. R. This carrier owns between four and five thousand feet of railway siding adjoining one of several plants belonging to the Hutchison-Kansas Salt Co., in Hutchison, Kas. This railroad company does not own any equipment or rolling stock nor is it in Three railway companies entering any way engaged as a common carrier. Hutchison made joint tariffs with the H. & A. R. R., which, on salt shipped to Missouri River points, gave the latter 25% of the rate, but not exceeding 50c per ton. The H. & A. R. R., is controlled by officers of the Salt Company and the earnings of the railroad company are subject to that control. Since this division was allowed to the H. & A. R. R., the Salt Company has sold salt at Missouri River points at prices with which the independent salt mills in Hutchison could not compete. The declared purpose of making this joint rate with the H. & A., was to enable the salt manufacturers to meet competition from other quarters, and the division of the joint rate to the H. & A. R. R., could not have that effect unless it inured to the benefit of the salt producer. HELD, this granting the division of the rate to this socalled railroad is a mere subterfuge to give a concession in the rate, and is therefore unlawful. In the matter of the transportation of salt from Hutchinson, Kas. 10 I. C. C. 1.

(b) Defendants publish a certain rate on lumber from stations upon their lines which must be strictly observed and charged to all shippers alike, and they are not entitled, under the act, to grant a division of the rate to the owner of a lumber mill as compensation to him for the cost of bringing his logs to the mill by steam railroad, horses railroad, wagon or any other means of conveyance. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. V. S. & P. R. R., 10 I. C. C. 193, 204.

(c) The transportation of the log to the mill by one line and the transportation of the lumber from the mill by another line may, under the circumstances of this case, be treated as in the nature of a through shipment from the point where the log is received to the point where the lumber is finally delivered, and the carrier of the lumber may by joint arrangement with the log carrier make such allowance towards the cost of moving the log as would be fairly involved in moving the lumber from the point where the log is received for carriage, provided always that the carrier of the log is a common carrier by rail; but this holding extends the application of the principle of milling in transit to the extreme limit. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. V. S. & P. R. R., 10 I. C. C. 194, 215.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) The mere quantitative relationship between the outside and company tonnage hauled by an industrial road, in the absence of divisions in the through rate, can in itself decide little as to the reasonableness of proposed divisions to be paid to the industrial road out of through rates. The real question is whether or not the proposed tariffs, by reason of these divisions, will discriminate unjustly in favor of the industry owning the road. Joint Rates with Birmingham Southern R. R. Co., 32 I. C. C. 110, 121.

(e) In deciding as to the reasonableness of divisions to be paid to the industrial road out of through rates, it is not proper to consider only the "added cost of doing business," meaning that portion of the haulage expense, as distinct from the terminal expense, which fluctuates with the volume of the traffic, making no allowance for taxes, interest or operating expenses. If the industrial road is to be compensated at all for certain services, it should be compensated for all costs reasonably apportionable to such services, and not merely for the added expenses that would be saved if the service were not performed. Its position as a common carrier entitles it to this. Joint Rates with Birmingham Southern R. R. Co., 32 I. C. C. 110, 121.

(f) In arriving at the amount which trunk lines may allow common-carrier industrial lines for switching the following considerations should prevail: In so far as the industrial line serves the plant in interplant switching and other purely plant service the cost of such service and the investment in facilities used exclusively to perform that service must be excluded in calculating the cost of the switching service to and from the trunk lines. The investment in facilities used both for plant service and interchange switching can only be included in the proportion that they are used in interchange switching. Interior plant switching or any other service differing radically in nature from the general work of switching cars between industries and connections should be segregated as to investment and operating costs of the industrial line so far as this may be feasible. The engine hour will usually be found a safer guide than cars handled for making this general separation. For interior plant switching the industry benefited should be charged with the allocated capital and operating costs. The remaining operating and capital costs measure the maximum which may be received net for other switching, 'either in the form of switching charges or allowances, there being a minimum charge for the shortest switching and a somewhat higher charge for the longer distance switching. From its entire business the industrial line should not earn more than a fair return on the property devoted to the public use, less reserve for accrued depreciation and including material and supplies in the investment. No abnormal divisions or allowances may in any case be made, for it is evident that, by paying or permitting more to be paid than would be just and reasonable for any service performed by the industrial line, the trunk lines may be giving the controlling industry a rebate. C. W. P. & S. R. R. Case, 37 I. C. C. 408, 415, 416.

(g) To cover cases where an industrial line is permitted to operate over the tracks of connecting lines in effecting an interchange of traffic the following general rule may be laid down, namely, that in so far as the division or allowance accorded the industrial line covers the operation over the tracks of the trunk line it may not exceed the operating and investment cost to the trunk line, had it performed the same service, by more than the proportionate share which that particular traffic should bear of the compensation paid by the industrial line for the use of the tracks. This rule must be observed whether the industrial line be a mere plant facility or a common carrier, and in switching to and from independent industries as well as to and from the proprietary industry. Where the only service over the leased track is interchange switching with the trunk line from which the tracks are leased, the trackage charges or rental paid to the trunk line should not be eliminated, and the allowance accorded should not exceed what it would have cost the trunk line to perform the same service. C. W. P. & S. R. R. Co. Case, 37 I. C. C. 408, 417.

(h) For interchange switching with the trunk line which owns the tracks the industrial line may not receive more than it would have cost the trunk line to perform the same service. If the trunk lines were to accord a higher division for the service performed over their own tracks than indicated above they would be depleting their revenues in order to enable the shipper to avail himself of the more convenient and perhaps extensive service which an industrial line can give. The implication is not intended, however, that the divisions accorded the industrial lines must necessarily equal what it would have cost the trunk line to perform the service, plus the compensation paid for the use of its tracks. The divisions should be further limited by the principles applicable where the operation is over the tracks of the industrial line. One reason for permitting an industrial line to switch over the tracks of connecting trunk lines may be that it is able to perform the service for less than it would have cost the trunk line to perform the same service. Wherever that is the case the division or allowance accorded should not exceed the operating cost of the industrial line plus interest upon whatever investment it devotes to the service in the proportion that such investment is used in interchange switching plus the proportionate share which that particular traffic should bear of the compensation paid by the industrial line for the use of the tracks. This rule should in all cases be followed in determining the proper division or allowance to be accorded for interchange switching over leased tracks with trunk lines other than the one which owns the tracks used in performing the service. C. W. P. & S. R. R. Co., Case, 37 I. C. C. 408, 418.

(i) A reasonable allowance, if voluntarily made by the carrier, would be the cost of the service to the industry, or not greater than the approximate cost of that service to the carrier; and any greater allowance would savor of a rebate. Buffalo Union Furnace Co. v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 44 I. C. C. 267, 270.

(j) Divisions received by tap lines out of the through rate should have a proper relation to the service which they perform. N. O. & N. Ry., v. Illinois Central, 55 I. C. C. 113, 116.

(k) The law neither provides nor contemplates that short lines shall receive compensation out of line-haul rates that will yield a return upon the value of the carrier property. They are certainly not entitled to such return from that source upon the value of facilities which are not used by or open to the public generally. Wyandotte Southern Ry. Co., 61 I. C. C. 756, 760.

(l) In 57 I. C. C. 1, the Commission found complainant, Pittsburg Allegheny & McKees Rocks R. R. Co., was a common carrier and entitled to divisions of joint rates or absorption of its switching rates by roads having the line haul. Interested parties failed to agree upon divisions, and supplemental complaint was filed requesting that divisions be fixed by the Commission. Complainant is owned by the Pressed Steel Car Co., and connects at Allegheny with the Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio, and at McKees Rock with the P. & L. E., and P. C. & Y. Defendant Pennsylvania lines provide by tariff for the application of the Pittsburgh district rates to the Shoen Works not on their rails but reached by complainants line, without complainants concurrence and without provision for full absorption of complainants switching charge. On the one hand, the Pennsylvania lines are bound to protect their published application of those rates until appropriately changed. On the other hand, the switching charge for the intervening service having been established by tariff, complainant is bound to collect it in full. HELD, the application of the district rates to the Shoen Works over complainants line without concurrence by complainant or proper absorption provisions is contrary to the tariff rules and unlawful. It must be discontinued, and, whatever the way in which this may be accomplished, the line haul carriers must not, in view of complainants industrial affiliations, accord to complainant out of the line haul rates more than reasonable compensation for its service. Also HELD, through rates to and from the industries are not in issue, and the Commission is not asked to prescribe through routes and joint rates. Complainant dismissed. Pittsburgh Allegheny & McKees Rocks R. R. Co. v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 223.

(m) Complainant alleged it is a common carrier; that joint rates and charges and divisions thereof are in effect between complainant and defendants; and that the divisions are unjust, unreasonable, unduly prejudicial. The New York Dock Ry. leased from the New York Dock Co., the latter's right of way, station buildings and other properties. Its accounts are kept in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission and are examined by its accountants. It complies with the hours of service and safety appliance acts. It operates 10.62 miles of track on the Brooklyn water front. There is no rail connection between any two of its terminals, all interchange being accomplished by means of float bridges, flats or tugs. It handles no passenger traffic, but transports property between points on its railroad and points in New Jersey and New York, with which it has direct connection and interchanges freight with trunk lines. The dock railway files with the Commission its local and proportional tariff applicable to the transportation shipments between its terminals when through rates are not applicable. The use of these local or proportional rates has been so infrequent as to be practically negligible. HELD, the Dock Railway is a common carrier and it furnishes an important service to the public and it is efficiently operated. The Dock Railway receives a certain amount from the trunk lines for service performed by it, which amount is deducted from the through freight rate before prorating, the balance being divided among the other interested carriers on regular divisions. About 90 per cent of the revenue of the Dock Railway is received from the trunk lines. The record shows that in none of the tariffs publishing rates to or from the terminals of the Dock Railways, with exceptions of a few, is that carrier named. As it is not named in the tariffs, it is not a party to joint rates published therein, and accordingly divisions thereof to be received by complainant can not be prescribed in this proceeding. HELD, the complainant is not a party to joint rates with the defendants, with the exception of certain rates, and the record affords no basis upon which proper divisions of such joint rates as it does participate in can be determined, complaint dismissed. The trunk lines therefore are publishing rates to and from stations which are not on their lines and which can not be reached by any line which is a party to their tariffs or by any carrier to which an allowance for service beyond the eastern terminal of the trunk lines is lawfully provided. Obviously this in in violation of the requirements of the law and regulations with respect to publication of rate schedules. New York Dock Ry. v. B. & O. R. R., 73 I. C. C. 656.

(n) A division of a joint rate accorded a tap line which is grossly disproportionate to the service rendered by the tap line is equivalent to a rebate from the trunk line to the proprietary company. Adriatic Mining Co. v. C. & N. W. Ry., 78 I. C. C. 611, 619.

(o) In 53 I. C. C. 656, the Commission found that the distance from the junctions which are determinative of the maximum divisions that the M. P., may lawfully pay to the Prescott & Northwestern R. R., and to the Ohachite & Northwestern R. R., under the order in 31 I. C. C. 490, out of the joint rates on interstate shipments of lumber and forest products from points on their lines must be measured by the direct route of movement toward final destination, rather than by the out of line movements described in the report. In order to increase their divisions the tap lines resorted to the practice of hauling the lumber to more distant interchange points, where the shipments were delivered to the M. P., either directly or through the intervention of a third line. The Commission found that this could not lawfully be a means of increasing the tap lines divisions where it resulted in an unnecessary out of line movement and a return of the shipment to the junction near the mill point before beginning the actual movement to destination. As admitted by the M. P., the sole reason for seeking to have the former findings rescinded is in order that it may secure a substantial share of the lumber traffic of these tap lines by permitting them to resort to the socalled wasteful service. The object which the M. P., desires could be secured by permitting the division for the switching movement to be made the same as the division for the line haul to the distant junction, but it would give to these tap lines divisions plainly excessive for the switching service and unfair to many other tap lines. HELD, original report affirmed. Wasteful service by tap lines, 89 I. C. C. 327.

(p) The Interstate Commerce Commission entered an order providing that the maximum division to a tap line for a distance of not more than three miles should be $3.00, and if more than three miles 1½c per 100 pounds. It appeared that via the road of the claimant's tap line, if shipment hauled direct would move 2.41 miles, but as a matter of fact the shipments were first taken in the opposite direction. Because of this fact the distance actually traveled was 3.42 miles. The Commission interpreting its own order directed that for this service the claimant could not be allowed by the trunk line more than $3.00. HELD, that the order of the Commission was valid, and would not be disturbed on appeal. Louisiana & P. B. Ry. Co. v. United States, 42 Sup. Ct. 25.

(q) Where the Interstate Commerce Commission, to prevent unjust discrimination in favor of shippers owning tap lines, by means of an unfair division of the through rate over the two lines, fixed amounts receivable by the tap lines based on mileage, it did not act arbitrarily and unreasonably in refusing to include the back haul from the mill to a track scale, where it found that a greater allowance would result in unjust discrimination, that the evidence did not show that it was necessary that the shipments be weighed by the tap line, rather than by the trunk line, and that allowing of a larger division of the through rate would place the owner of the tap line in a more advantageous position than other tap lines performing a similar service, and open the way for the relocation of other track scales, so as to require a long back haul and lay a basis for rebates. Louisiana & P. B. Ry. Co. v. United States, 42 Sup. Ct. 25.

§7. Legality of divisions, allowances or practices.

See Allowances §10; Common Carriers; Divisions IV; Industrial Railroads; Legality.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) A division of a freight rate with another railroad company constitutes a mere subterfuge to give a concession in the rate, and is unlawful, where the railroad company receiving the division of the rate, while owning four or five thousand feet of railway siding adjoining one of several plants belonging to the shipper, does not own any equipment or rolling stock, and is not in any way engaged as a common carrier, but is in fact controlled by the officers of the shipping company, who control its earnings and receive the benefit of the division of the rate, thereby enabling it to sell its produce at prices which its competitors cannot meet. Re Transportation of Salt from Hutchinson, Kansas, 10 I. C. C. 1.

(b) No undue discrimination against individuals is made in the granting of divisions in rates to lumber mills owning or controlling short originating roads called "tap lines," while other carriers fail or refuse to allow like concessions to members of the complaining association located in a different section of the country. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 193.

(c) The second section of the Act to Regulate Commerce, which prohibits rebates whereby one shipper is preferred to another, refers to a like and contemporaneous service performed under similar circumstances and conditions; and, in the absence of a showing of such similarity of circumstances and conditions, such section is not violated by the granting of divisions of rates to lumber mills owning or controlling short originating roads, while other carriers fail or refuse to allow like concessions to complainants located in a different section of the country. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg S. & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 193.

(d) Defendants publish a certain rate on lumber from stations upon their lines, which must be strictly observed and charged to all shippers alike; and they are not entitled, under the Act to Regulate Commerce, to grant a division of the rate to the owner of a lumber mill as compensation to him for the cost of bringing his logs to the mill by steam railroad, horse railroad, wagon, or any other means of conveyance. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg S. & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 193.

(e) The second section of the Act to Regulate Commerce, which prohibits a rebate or other concession in rate whereby one shipper is preferred to another, refers to a like and contemporaneous service performed under similar circumstances and conditions, and it is not shown in this case that lumber mills served by defendants are so located that differences in divisions allowed by defendants to tap lines used for such mills, or the failure of one of the defendants to allow any division to some mills, violates this section. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. U. S. & P. R. Co. et al., 10 I. C. C. 193.

(f) Where excessive divisions of rates are granted by the carrier to another carrier owned and controlled by a shipper, for the purpose of obtaining the traffic of that shipper, they benefit the shipper, and operate as a rebate or other device to cut the tariff charge, in violation of the Act to Regulate Commerce. Re Division of Joint Rates, etc. 10 I. C. C. 385.

(g) The logging roads, or "tap lines," to which the defendant, the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, grants allowances from its published rates, are not common carriers, but such tap lines are the private property of mill owners, and the allowances are therefore unlawful. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Illinois C. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 505.

(h) No undue preference between individuals or localities is made by the failure or refusal of defendants to make "tap line" allowances to mill owners in their territory, which lies east of the Mississippi, while such allowances are granted to mill owners by other carriers in the territory west of the Mississippi. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Illinois C. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 505.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(i) Any allowance to or division with a tap line which is an adjunct or plant facility is a preference and discrimination and an unlawful departure from the published rate. Star Grain & Lumber Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 17 I. C. C. 338, 344.

(j) Wherever an abnormal division is allowed to a railroad which is tied up with an industry there results an indirect and hidden rebate to the shipper because of his ownership of the railroad. In Re Divisions of Joint Rates on Coal, 22 I. C. C. 51, 55.

(k) Whether a tap line is a common carrier is a question of fact, but if it is a common carrier it cannot haul for the proprietary company free of charge. Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 292, 297.

(l) It would be an unlawful preference for a trunk line to set up a milling-in-transit privilege with a common carrier tap line by which the lumber rate is extended back through the mill point to the trees in the forest while not pursuing the same course with respect to forests on its own line. Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 277, 298.

(m) Frequently an industry develops new traffic and shippers other than the owning industry located on its rails, whereupon the owning industry or its stockholders separately incorporate the railway which thereupon files tariffs with the Commission, claims thenceforth to be wholly separate and distinct from the owning industry, and thereafter holds itself out to serve the owning industry and its other shippers impartially. Assuming the newly-made carrier to be, under the law, a common carrier, allowances under Section 15 of the Act can no longer be made to the owning industry as for services rendered by the shipper, as the railway is no longer a part of, or in law, connected with the latter, which is "the owner of property transported," to whom alone, under that section of the statute, allowances may be made, but is in the contemplation of the Act in the same position as it would be if it had been constructed by parties having no interest whatever in the owning industry. Conversely, the owning industry would be on the same plane as if it had located as an independent shipper upon the newly-made railway after the latter's construction by parties having no connection with the industry. The railway is in such case a public agency, which, if it lives up to the obligations attached by the Act to its own representations, should collect its charges from the former owning industry, the same as it does from shipper on its line. This complete separation of the carrier from the shipper applies not only to local shipments, but also in case the service is performed in connection with a trunk line on a through haul. Mfrs. Ry. Co. v. St. L. I. M. & S Ry. Co., 28 I. C. C. 93, 102.

(n) Where a carrier is a common carrier and transports for others than its owners a substantial amount of interstate commerce, it is entitled to a division of the joint rate despite the fact that it is owned by one who is the principal shipper over its line. McCloud River Lumber Co. v. S. P. Co., 24 I. C. C. 89, 94.

(o) Industrial railways should not receive from the more distant trunk line connection any compensation as division or allowance which exceeds the amount added to the junction-point rate. Second Industrial Railways Case, 34 I. C. C. 596, 606.

(p) By paying or permitting to be paid to industrial line more than would be just and reasonable, trunk lines may be giving controlling industry a rebate. Chicago, West Pullman & Southern R. R. Co. Case, 37 I. C. C. 408, 416.

(q) As a general proposition, it may be said that a common-carrier railroad is under no obligation to haul cars at its own cost beyond its own rails. This statement, however, is subject to qualification. When a carrier adds to the line-haul rate a charge for the movement of cars incident to the receipt and delivery of carload freight at one industry while treating a like service at other similarly circumstanced industries as covered by the line-haul rate, it creates an unjust discrimination. Again, in the absence of changed conditions, a charge in addition to the line-haul rate would be improper for services which by long-continued general custom and usage have been treated as embodied in the line-haul charge. Newport Stone Co. and Big Four Stone Co. case, 38 I. C. C. 316, 318.

(r) To take from the trunk line carrier a portion of the lumber rate and apply it to the payment of the cost of the log haul relieves the mill owner in whole or in part of the reasonable cost of transporting his logs to his mills. This is a direct contribution to the mill owner who is the shipper of the lumber. It is none the less a contribution to the shipper because the payment is made to the tap line. The direct and inevitable result is that the mill owner is relieved of the whole or a part of the reasonable cost of getting his logs to his mill by a contribution out of the lumber rate, and this would unjustly discriminate against mill owners who are obliged to bear the full cost of transporting their logs. Milling Logs in Transit on Tap Lines, 40 I. C. C., 597, 601.

(s) Placing of cars on tracks within the plant inclosure designated by the industry constitutes delivery by the trunk lines under their line haul rate; subsequent service of switching cars to points of placement within the plant inclosure constitutes an additional movement, for which an additional charge must be made if it is performed by the trunk lines. Marting Iron and Steel Co. Case, 48 I. C. C. 620, 622.

(t) Clearly an excessive allowance to a tap line would constitute a rebate to the controlling industry. Diamond Alkali Co. v. F. P. & E. Ry., 53 I. C. C. 554, 549.

(u) A tap line is entitled only to just compensation for the actual and reasonably necessary services performed by it as a part of the transportation of the traffic from point of origin to destination, and the orders of the Commission relative to divisions out of the through rates were framed upon this principle in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court. Wasteful Service by Tap lines, 53 I. C. C. 656, 662.

(v) The payment of switching reclaims to industrial lines may result in preferences and advantages to proprietary industries. Undue preferences of the shipper who happens to own an industrial road cannot be sanctioned in any guise. The arrangements between industrial roads and connecting trunk lines respecting demurrage, car detention, car interchange, and reclaims, are of fundamental importance, and, in so far as they are involved in this case, they are reserved for further consideration. Lake Erie & Fort Wayne Railroad Co., 58 I. C. C. 558, 560.

(w) The payment of switching reclaims to industrial lines may result in preferences and advantage to proprietary industries. Undue preference of the shipper who happens to own an industrial road cannot be sanctioned in any guise. The arrangements between industrial roads and connecting trunk lines respecting demurrage, car detention, car interchange, and reclaims are of fundamental importance, and, in so far as they are involved in this case, they are reserved for further consideration. Chicago Short Line Railway Co., 58 I. C. C. 561, 566.

(x) Carriers must observe reasonable rules and practices with respect to car service as defined in the act; however, car interchange is primarily a matter of agreement. The common carrier status of an industrial railway gives no inherent right to per diem or per diem reclaim. Birmingham Southern v. Director General, 61 I. C. C. 551, 555.

(y) The practice of trunk lines in absorbing a portion of the charges of a short line, found not to be a common carrier subject to the act, should be discontinued, but it is not unlawful to make a reasonable allowance to such short line for performing a portion of the service included in line-haul rates which trunk lines do not elect to do for themselves. National Tube Co. v. P., C., C. & St. L. R. R. Co., 61 I. C. C. 590, 599.

(z) Where short line found not to be a common carrier is not to say that it is unlawful for trunk lines to pay reasonable compensation to such short line as its agent or a reasonable allowance to the industry under section 15 of the act, for performing through its industrial railroad any portion of the service customarily included in the line-haul rates which they do not elect to do for themselves. Wyandotte Terminal R. R. Co., 62 I. C. C. 1, 5.

(aa) Contracts under which a subsidiary to a proprietary industry acts as switching agent for carriers not shown to violate the act and the Commission is without power to abrogate such contracts or revise their terms. Allegheny & South Side Ry. Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 248, 252.

(bb) Division of rates with tap lines may not be at the will of common carriers involved and without any power of the Commission to control. Prescott & Northwestern R. R. v. M. P. R. R., 68 I. C. C. 487, 490.

(cc) Hauling lumber and forest products over unnecessary and circuitous routes before delivery to the connecting trunk line by a tap line is condemned. Cancellation of Joint Rates from and to Green Hill, S. C., on the Alcolu Railroad, 74 I. C. C., 571, 573.

(dd) Though a large shipper controlled the stock of a terminal railway company, whose charges trunk lines refused to further absorb, the Commission, in a proceeding by the terminal company to compel further absorptions, may, under Interstate Commerce Act, §15, as amended in 1910, fix a maximum for the joint rates which the terminal and trunk line companies might establish without determining the question of the division of the same, so as to prevent undue discrimination in favor of the shipper owning the stock of the terminal company. Mfrs. Ry. Co. v. United States, 38 Sup. Ct. 383.

See Allowances; Common Carrier; Divisions §6; Industrial Railroads.

(a) No undue preference between individuals or localities is made by defendants in the granting of divisions in rates to lumber mills owning or controlling originating roads called "tap lines," while other carriers fail or refuse to allow like concessions to members of the complaining association, located in a different section of the country. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 193.

(b) The transportation of the log to the mill by one line, and the transportation of the lumber from the mill by another line, may, under the circumstances of this case, be treated as in the nature of a through shipment from the point where the log is received to the point where the lumber is finally delivered; and the carrier of the lumber may, by joint arrangement with the log carrier, make such allowance toward the cost of moving the log as would be fairly involved in moving the lumber from the point where the log is received for carriage, provided always that the carrier of the log is a common carrier by rail; but this holding extends the application of the principle of milling in transit to the extreme limit . Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 193.

(c) The third section of the Act to Regulate Commerce, which prohibits undue preference between individuals or localities, is not violated by defendants in the granting of divisions in rates to lumber mills owning or controlling short originating roads called "tap lines," while other carriers fail or refuse to allow like concessions to members of the complaining Association located in a different section of country. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. V., S. & P. R. Co. et al, 10 I. C. C. 193.

(ca) While the defendants, whose advances in rates are claimed to be unreasonable, are not bound to make "tap line" allowances in their territory which lies east of the Mississippi, merely because such allowances are granted to mill owners by other carriers in the territory west of the Mississippi, the fact that the rate west of the Mississippi River, minus the allowance, is reasonable, tends to support the proposition that a similar reduction east of the Mississippi would leave the rate reasonably high, and the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company by voluntarily making such allowances east of the river, practically concedes this proposition as to itself. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Illinois C. B. Co., 10 I. C. C. 505.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) Under their tariffs the public carriers interpret the lumber rate as applying from mills west of the Mississippi River as far as three miles from their own lines. If a lumber company having a mill within that distance of a trunk line uses its own power to set the empty car at the mill and to deliver it when loaded to the trunk line, it is doing for itself what the trunk line under its tariffs offers to do under the rate. In such a case the lumber company may therefore fairly be said to furnish a facility of transportation for which it may reasonably be compensated under section 15, whether its tap line is incorporated or unincorporated. But an allowance under such circumstances is lawful only when the trunk line prefers for reasons of its own and without discrimination to have the lumber company perform the service. It is not lawful when the lumber company refuses to permit the trunk line to do the work. No allowance, however, ought to be made by a trunk line to a lumber company where the mill is within a thousand feet of the trunk line. An allowance under such circumstances would be a mere device to effect an unlawful payment to the lumber company. The same rule would apply where a short switch track to the mill has been torn out or is still available, but not used, in order to give the appearance of a longer haul to the mill over a spur or switch track constructed by the lumber company or by its tap line, for the purpose of securing an allowance. Tap Line Case 23 I. C. C. 277, 294.

(e) Where a mill is distant more than three miles from a trunk line and is connected with the latter by a tap line not recognized by the Commission as a common carrier, no allowance or division may lawfully be made by a trunk line either to the lumber company or to its tap line. Such a lumber company, although using rails, stands in no better position under the law with respect to its lumber than does a lumber company that uses other means of delivering its lumber to a public carrier. Where a mill is more than three miles distant from a trunk line and is connected with it by a tap line organized as a common carrier and so recognized by the Commission, the mill is to be regarded as a shipping point equally with all other mill points in its rate group; and the lumber rate is to be regarded as in effect from the mill, the tap line being entitled to a division thereof according to the extent of its participation in the through service under the through rate. The Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 277, 295.

(f) The lumber rate west of the Mississippi River applies from the mill. In those cases where a short switch track to the mill from a trunk line has been torn out or is still available but not used, in order to give the appearance of a longer haul to the mill over a spur or switch track constructed by the lumber company or by its tap line to secure an allowance, any compensation allowed for such service by the trunk line to the lumber company or its tap line is unlawful. The Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 549, 586, 589, 632, 646.

(g) No allowance may be made where the mill of the controlling company is within a few hundred feet of the trunk line. Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 549, 569.

(h) It is unlawful for a tap-line to receive divisions in excess of a reasonable switching charge. Tap line Case, 23 I. C. C. 549, 582.

(i) The lumber rate west of the Mississippi River applies from the mill. In those cases where the mill is situated a reasonable distance of not less than 1,000 feet from the trunk line that carrier may arrange with the lumber company to perform the service for it of transporting the loaded cars from the mill to the trunk line and may make a reasonable allowance to the lumber company for such service under section 15. The Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 549, 552, 553, 559, 568, 569, 576, 594, 596, 597, 599, 601, 603, 605, 607, 608, 611, 618, 632, 641, 645, 646.

(jk) Where a tap-line is merely a plant facility hauling logs to the mill, and the mill itself is situated on a trunk line, any allowance or division of rates made by the trunk line to the lumber company or the tap-line is an unlawful rebate. The Tap-line Case, 23 I. C. C. 549, 552, 555, 587, 597, 599, 602, 606, 613, 635, 641, 642, 645, 646, 649.

(l) A common carrier, formerly considered an industrial line, should collect its charges from former owning industry the same as it does from other shippers. Mfrs. Ry. Co. v. St. L. I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 28 I. C. C. 93, 102.

(m) The allowances and free services accorded by line carriers to industrial railways were never taken into consideration by the former in fixing the rate, but in effect are concessions from the rate. Industrial Railways Case, 29 I. C. C. 212, 216.

(n) The privileges and advantages now enjoyed by a relatively small number of extensive industrial establishments, must either be held to be an unlawful concession to them by the carriers, or, if lawful, the principles upon which they may be justified must be ascertained and clearly defined, so that like privileges and advantages may be claimed by all industrial establishments served, whether large or small. Industrial Railways Case, 29 I. C. C. 212, 217.

(o) No service can lawfully be required of a line carrier beyond the point of interchange with an industry, and therefore a line carrier cannot be required to make an allowance to the industry out of the rates, for doing the service for itself with its own facilities. Industrial Railways Case, 29 I. C. C. 212, 230.

(p) Where it has been customary to include in the service rendered under the line-haul rate the movement of cars over industry tracks to convenient points for loading and unloading, switching performed by the industrial line between industries and connecting carriers may properly be regarded as a transportation service for which the connecting carriers may pay a division of the line-haul rate. C.W.P.& S.R.R.Case, 37 I. C. C. 408, 415.

(q) Trunk lines undoubtedly have a right to lease their tracks so long as the arrangement is profitable to them and does not interfere with the performance of their public duties. The industrial line having effected such a lease may be, and in the present case is, in a position to render a common-carrier service to all of the industries located on its line. However, should the arrangement prove unprofitable to the trunk lines or hinder them in the performance of their public duties it must be looked upon as "a device condemned by the act." So also where a trunk line without unjust discrimination permits the industrial line to operate over its tracks without compensation the arrangement may be just and proper so long as it is for their mutual benefit. C. W. P. & S. R. R. Co., 37 I. C. C. 408, 417.

(r) For a haul of 3 miles or less under the Commission's order, which is still in force, a tap line may receive a maximum allowance of $3 per car. Louisiana & Pine Bluffs Divisions, 40 I. C. C. 470, 471.

(s) Carriers refusal to switch inbound and outbound cars to and from convenient points on switch tracks serving quarries of one shipper, while performing a similar service for its competitors may result in undue prejudice. Refusal to make an allowance found unreasonable and reparation awarded. Westport Stone Co. v. C., C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 48 I. C. C. 637, 639.

(t) Refusal of carriers to establish and maintain joint rates, including terminal and spotting services, to and from loading and unloading points at the Wharton Steel Company's plant at Wharton, N. J., and to its ore yard near Wharton Junction, N. J., or imposing charges in excess of those accruing at line-haul or junction point rates while maintaining such rates and services without additional charges at competitive furnace points, found to result in undue prejudice. Wharton Steel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 59 I. C. C. 11, 23.

(u) So far as industrial railways are concerned, transportation conditions in Chicago switching district differ materially from those common to industrial common carriers in other sections of the country. Operating conditions are more complex, interruptions to traffic more frequent, and connections more numerous. L. E. & Ft. W. R. R. Co., 78 I. C. C. 475, 478.

III. THROUGH ROUTES AND JOINT RATES.

§10. Right in general.

See Common Carrier §7½; Through Routes and Joint Rates II.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Defendants publish a certain rate on lumber from stations upon their lines, which must be strictly observed and charged to all shippers alike; and they are not entitled, under the Act to Regulate Commerce, to grant a division of the rate to the owner of a lumber mill as compensation to him for the cost of bringing his logs to the mill by steam railroad, horse railroad, wagon, or any other means of conveyance. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 193.

(b) The third section of the Act, which prohibits undue preference between individuals or localities, is not violated by defendants in the granting of divisions in rates to lumber mills owning or controlling short originating roads called "tap lines," while other carriers fail to allow like concessions to members of the complaining Association located in a different section of country. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. V. S. & P. R. R. 10, I. C. C. 193, 201.

(c) No unlawful discrimination against localities is made by defendants in the granting of divisions in the rates to lumber mills owning or controlling short originating roads called "tap lines," while other carriers fail or refuse to allow like concessions to members of the complaining association located in a different section of the country. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 193.

(d) Under the Act to Regulate Commerce a common carrier subject to its provisions can allow a division of rates only to another common carrier which, participating in the particular traffic to which the rate is applied, is also subject the Act to Regulate Commerce. The two lines may by contract or agreement establish a joint rate from the point of origin on the one road to the point of destination on the other and agree between themselves as to divisions of the rate. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. V. S. & P. R. Co., et al, 10 I. C. C. 193.

(e) While there may be great objections to allowing shippers to build and operate railroads over which their traffic moves, such action is not prohibited by the Act to Regulate Commerce. And the mere fact that the property of a common carrier is owned by the largest individual shipper over it, or that it was originally constructed for the purpose of doing the work of that shipper, furnishes no reason why it cannot make joint rates and agree upon joint divisions with other railroads. Re Division of Joint Rates, etc., 10 I. C. C. 385.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(f) The Commission may require trunk lines to establish, with connecting industrial lines lower than combination on junction point of trunk line and industrial line. Chicago, West Pullman & Southern R. R. Co. Case, 37 I. C. C. 408, 415.

(g) While the Interstate Commerce Act places on carriers the burden of proving that an increased rate is just and reasonable, the Interstate Commerce Commission in a proceeding by petitioner, a terminal railway company in which shipper served by it joined to require trunk line railroads to re-establish former absorptions of such railway's charges on the ground that the continued practice of absorbing the charges of a terminal association, the stock of which was owned by the trunk line railroads, constituted a discrimination against shippers on the line of petitioner, having found that terminal railway was a common carrier, and that there was no discrimination, may assume that the through rates charged by the trunk line railroads which had been in effect before the cancellations of the absorptions were reasonable. Mfrs. Ry. Co. v. United States, 38 Sup. Ct. 383.

(h) The contention that a tap line is entitled to compensation for an out of line haul of nearly a mile to a track scale, not sustained. Louisiana & Pine Bluffs Divisions, 40 I. C. C. 470, 471.

(i) No warrant is found for requiring trunk lines against their will to establish milling in transit with tap lines, under which rates on lumber applying from mill points will be readjusted. Milling Logs in Transit on Tap Lines, 40 I. C. C. 597, 601.

(j) Refusal of trunk lines to establish and maintain through routes and joint rates in connection with the Mount Hope Mineral R. R. Co., and allow it to participate in divisions thereof, not found unreasonable or unduly prejudicial. Fact that there are joint through rates in effect with other short lines in the same general territory does not establish a prima facie case of undue prejudice, and the negligible amount of traffic and lack of station facilities or agents at points other than the junction justifies denial of the prayer for joint rates. Mount Hope Mineral R. R. Co. v. C. R. R. Co. of N. J., 74 I. C. C. 195.

(k) To entitle a tap line to avail itself of a milling in transit privilege, it must make reports to the Interstate commerce Commission and file or concur in tariffs. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. S. H. Bolinger & Co., 279 Fed. 564.

(l) It is permissible for a railroad company having a trunk line to enter into an agreement with a railroad company, whose line was a tap line or tributary to its trunk line, establishing thru routes and joint rates as to property transported over both the tap line and the trunk line, applicable to logs or lumber, belonging to the trunk line company, and it was contemplated that the logs should be manufactured into lumber after being received by that company. I. C. R. R. v. Brooks-Scanlon Co., 241 Fed. 445.

IV. TARIFFS AND PUBLICATION

See Tariffs.

§11. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Treating the transportation of the log to the mill by one line, and the transportation of the lumber from the mill by another line, as a through shipment involves the right to mill in transit; and when that privilege is granted, the tariff should show upon its face that the transportation covers carriage of the log to and the lumber from the mill; and the division allowed to the carrier of the log should be named in all cases. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 193.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Every carrier that becomes party to an agreement as to divisions between trunk line carriers and tap lines or industrial roads must file with the Commission a full statement of the arrangement entered into, showing specifically the allowances of divisions granted thereby. Industrial Railways Case 129, 32 I. C. C. 132.

(c) Complainant, Mount Hope Mineral Railroad, a common carrier, extending from connections with the Jersey Central and D. L. & W., at Wharton, N. J., to Mount Hope, N. J., distance 5.6 miles, contended that trunk lines be required to establish through rates with it, and that reasonable divisions be prescribed in connection with such through joint rates. Original decision found in 56 I. C. C. 158. HELD: The refusal of defendants to establish and maintain through routes and joint class and commodity rates in connection with complainant, and to allow complainant to participate in divisions thereof, not unreasonable or unduly prejudicial, complaint dismissed. Mount Hope Mineral Railroad Co. v. C. R. R. Co. of N. J., 74 I. C. C. 195.

See Reparation.

(a) Principles announced in General Electric Co. Case, 14 I. C. C. 297, reaffirmed and applied, and complaints of the National Tube Co. for reparation on traffic of its plant at Lorain, O., during period that allowances out of the line-haul rate to its industrial railway were discontinued, dismissed. Demands of the same nature by Carnegie Steel Co. also dismissed. National Tube Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 489.

(b) An order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, finding an unjust discrimination by the carrier in making a separate charge against a shipper for switching from the pier used by him, while absorbing such charge from piers used by his competitors, is not sufficient evidence to authorize recovery of damages by the shipper, since the measure of his damages is not the amount of the unjust discrimination, but the amount by which such discrimination had injured him. Hillsborough Mills v. Boston & M. R. R. (Mass., 1921), 269 Fed. 816.

ALL OTHER CITATIONS

Buffalo Union Furnace Co. v. L. S. & M. S. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 267; National Tube Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 489.

§12½ Per Diem Reclaims.

See Per Diem Charges.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The payment of per diem reclaims to industrial roads may result in undue preference to proprietary industries, and that the per diem agreement is not a proper basis for settlement by an industrial railway for the use or detention upon its lines of foreign cars. Mosshasuck Valley R. R. v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R., 69 I. C. C. 368, 374.

(b) Fact that a short line is found to be a plant adjunct and not a common carrier is not to say that it is unlawful for trunk lines to pay reasonable compensation to it for performing as their agent, or a reasonable allowance to the manufacturing company, under section 15 of the act, for performing through its industrial railroad, any portion of the transportation service customarily included in the line-haul rates which they do not elect to do for themseles. Inland Ry. Co., 78 I. C. C. 59, 64.

(c) Suggestion that industrial road be regarded as agent of trunk lines, to show that reclaim period or free time extended to them should exactly balance their average detention and thus permit industrial lines to escape car hire and transfer over to trunk lines obligation of furnishing adequate equipment. HELD: Agency theory not applicable when industrial line retains demurrage collected, nor does it accord with rules respecting liability for damage to car or its contents. Lake Erie & Fort Wayne R. R. Co., 78 I. C. C. 475, 489.

(d) Assumption that "basis for condemning reclaim arrangements is that a profit may result to the terminal road . . . it may receive a greater aggregate sum under reclaim than it pays out during same period in form of per diem," held warranted. While possibility of thus indirectly increasing division or absorption found reasonable by commission, or of giving proprietary industry, through its subsidiary corporate organization a sum from trunk-line connections not earned by any transportation service performed from trunk lines has influenced expressions of commission, it can not be said to be sole or most important reasons for decisions relative to per diem reclaims. L. E. & Ft. W. R. R. Co., 78 I. C. C. 475, 489.

V. PROCEDURE AND PLEADING.

See Procedure before Commission

§13. In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Whether divisions or allowances from published tariff rates made by defendants to tap lines owned or controlled by lumber mills constitute departures from such published rates in violation of the Act to Regulate Commerce or of that Act as amended February 19, 1903, is the question herein presented, and while complainant, a lumber manufacturers' association, has no direct interest in the determination of that question it has such an indirect interest as entitles it under the statute to maintain this proceeding. Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. V. V. S. & P. R. Co., et al., 10 I. C. C. 193.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) In view of the difficult questions so frequently arising out of the relations between trunk-line carriers and industries with industrial railways, rulings in this case should be reviewed by the courts in order that some definite principle may be judicially established by which the Commission may hereafter be guided in such cases as they arise. National Tube Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 489, 504.

(c) Where the Commission has, upon a full and fair hearing, found that a tap railroad, while an interstate carrier as to other shippers, is a mere plant facility as to a proprietary company, the Commission's findings are subject to review in a court only upon allegation that they are not sustained by any substantial evidence in the record, or are arbitrary in being based upon improper distinctions and considerations. L. & P. Ry. Co., v. United States, 209 Fed. 244, 250; affirmed, 234 U. S. 1; 34 Sup. Ct. 741, 58 L. ed.

(d) The Commission cannot be charged with such arbitrary action as would justify an annulment of its orders in respect to tap lines petitioning for joint rates on lumber from proprietary mills, merely because of a different finding as to other tap lines, whose history, physical conditions, and relations to and service for proprietary companies are in some respects like those of the petitioning tap lines. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. United States, 209 Fed. 244, 250; affirmed, 234 U. S. 1; 34 Sup. Ct. 741; 58 L. ed.

(e) An order of the Commission directing the discontinuance of certain allowances by a trunk line to a tap line serving proprietary plants will be reviewed upon the petition of the tap line, though not the party against whom the order was directed, since the tap line is directly and financially interested by the order. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. United States, 209 Fed. 244, 251; Affirmed, 234 U. S. 1; 34 Sup. Ct. 741; 58 L. ed.

(f) In a procedure before the Commission to require trunk line railways to absorb charges of a terminal railway company, on the ground of discrimination as trunk lines continued to absorb charges of a terminal association, the stock of which they owned, such terminal railway and shippers served by it having sought no special relief because of the Antitrust Act are only entitled to have the Commission consider as a circumstance bearing on the question of discrimination that the terminal association had been adjudicated a combination in restraint of interstate commerce. Mfrs. Ry. Co. v. United States, 38 Sup. Ct. 383.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION.

See Control and Regulation.

§1. Jurisdiction of Commission.

See Advanced Rates § 1 (4); Common Carrier; Interstate Commerce Commission I; Jurisdiction of Commission.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Carriers should bring their tariffs into conformity with the statute, without suggestions from the Commission as to details. Re Tariffs of the Columbus & W. R. Co., (Com.), 2 I. C. R. 11.

(b) While the demand of the full legal rate and detention of the goods for its enforcement by a carrier can not be held to be in violation of the Act, the question of the lawfulness of such detention, where the shipper is an innocent party to the contract and not in pari delicto with the contracting carrier, will arise in a suit at law for the recovery of the goods and damages for their detention and is one for the determination of the courts and not within the cognizance of the Commission. Duncan v. A. T. & S. F. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 385, 389.

(c) The jurisdiction of the Commission and the purposes of the law can not be defeated by the omission or failure of carriers to include in their schedules and to keep posted and open to public inspection the rates, fares and charges for the entire service, both transportation proper and refrigeration, which under the law they are bound to provide. J. J. Waxelbaum & Co., v. A. C. L. R. R., 12 I. C. C. 178, 183.

(d) The Commission may not authorize a carrier to make a refund from the charges collected on the basis of the published rate, or otherwise to depart from the published rate, unless, upon a hearing or upon submission of the carrier, the Commission finds that rate to be discriminatory or unreasonable in amount and orders the establishment of a different rate. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418, 423.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(e) The Act authorizes the Commission in its discretion and for good cause shown to permit changes in tariffs or fares on less than statutory notice. The Commission seeks to limit the exercise of this discretionary power to cases where actual emergency and real merit are shown. The power is not to be lightly regarded, and it will not be exercised to aid a carrier in any strategic endeavor or to aid shippers in any ordinary commercial exigency. Acme Cement Plaster Co. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 22 I. C. C. 283, 285.

(f) Tariffs are but forms of words, and the Commission, in the exercise of its power to administer the Act, can look beyond the forms to what caused them and what they are intended to cause and do cause. In re Advances on Manganese Ore, 25 I. C. C. 663, 668.

(g) The Commission should not be expected in every case to check superseding issues of all tariffs to determine whether, by any possible construction, a rate may be increased via a possible route over which there may or may not ever have been any movement. New England and Canadian High Explosive Rates, 29 I. C. C. 697, 698.

(h) The Commission is empowered to strike a tariff from its files if filed as part of a scheme by shippers to secure unlawful allowances from carriers under pretense of common carriage. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 33 I. C. C. 92.

(i) If a transportation service has been rendered without tariff authority and the shipper paid a sum claimed by the carrier for that service, the Commission can upon a proper record determine a reasonable charge therefor and order refund of whatever the carrier has collected in excess of a reasonable charge. Wharton Steel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 59 I. C. C. 11, 22.

(j) Contention that rates from points in United States to point in Mexico, increased under General Order No. 28 of Director General, were unlawful since laws of Mexico required publication of increased rates for thirty days before becoming effective, not sustained. Rates assailed were lawfully established under acts administered by commission, which is without jurisdiction to determine whether or not they were lawfully established under laws of Mexico. Greene Cananea Copper Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 121.

(k) Under section 6 of the Act a carrier must abide by the published tariff rule, just as it must charge a published rate; but there is no reason why, when it is found that the rule has resulted in unreasonable charges under section 1, the Commission should fail to afford relief. The Commission's powers should not be construed so narrowly as to defeat justice. Hawkins & Sons v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 225, 227.

(l) Where the task to be performed is to determine the meaning of words of the tariff used in their ordinary sense, and to apply that meaning to the undisputed facts, such operation is solely one of construction and preliminary resort to the commission is necessary. Fanley Grain Co. v. Director General, 89 I. C. C. 33, 36.

(m) Where the construction of a tariff on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission requires a determination whether the words used therein have a technical meaning different from their ordinary meaning, or where technical words or phrases not commonly understood are employed, the question of the application of the tariff in a particular case is not a question of law as to construction of a written instrument, but a question involving issues essentially of fact, and the question must be presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission before resort is had to the courts. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Merchants' Elevator Co., 42 Sup. Ct.

(n) The Act endows the Commission with plenary administrative power to supervise freight tariffs and charges it with the duty to annul any tariffs in contravention of such Act, and generally to enforce the provisions thereof. American Sugar Refining Co. v. D. L. & W. Ry. Co., 200 Fed. 652.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where a new tariff is filed, and is protested on the ground of violations of the fourth or other sections of the Act, the averment, if confirmed by tariff check is good ground for suspending the tariff. Greater Des Moines Committee v. C. St. P. M. & O. Ry. Co., 42 I. C. C. 65, 75.

§2. Power of Congress.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Under the Act shippers are not to be put in a position of subservience to common carriers, nor required to ask for rates, but are entitled to equal and open rate at all times. Re Tariffs of the Transcontinental Lines, 2 I. C. C. 203, 207.

(b) The filing of schedules of rates with the Commission as required by statute raises no presumption as to the legality of such rates, and no omission or failure to challenge or disapprove the schedules of rates so filed can have the effect of making rates lawful which are unreasonable. San Bernardino Board of Trade v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 3 I. C. C. 138, 143.

(c) The fact that circulars concerning carload weights had been filed with the Commission and no opinion had been had thereupon expressed by the Commission as to the legality thereof, raises no presumption of approval by the Commission of the rules or regulations therein set forth, or of the manner in which they are established. Suffern, Hunt & Co. v. Indiana, D. & W. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 255.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) A tariff filed by the authorized agent of a carrier has the same legal status as though separately published and filed by the carrier. Johnson & Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 637, 639.

(e) To determine an overcharge the tariff rates itself and the rules and regulations connected therewith are the standards. Lay Fish Co. v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 4, 6.

(f) That army goods were styled and regarded as rags by the shipper, and received and billed as such by the carrier, was not controlling as to their proper classification for rate purposes, since the carrier was bound to collect the prescribed rate on a proper classification. Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co., v. Johns & Patterson (Ky., 1924), 258 S. W. 312.

§3. (1) Adherence to Published Rate. See Freight Rates; Legal Rate; Notice; Through Routes and Joint Rates §22; Undercharges.

(a) Rates lower than the established tariff are prohibited by law. Re Passenger Tariffs and Rate Wars, 2 I. C. C. 341, 348.

(b) Under the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce, the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada is required to print, post, and file its schedule of rates and charges for the transportation of property from points in the United States to points in Canada, and cannot lawfully charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation therefore, or for any services in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule as may at the time be in force. Re Grand Trunk R. Co. (Com.) 2 I. C. C. R. 496.

(c) Common carriers engaged in interstate transportation are subject to the provisions of the Act in respect to the printing of schedules of rates, fares, and charges, for the traffic they carry, the posting and filing with the Interstate Commerce Commission of copies of such schedules, the notice of advances and the maintenance of the rates, fares and charges established and published and in force at the time. Matter of Grand Trunk Railway Co. 2 I. C. C. R. 496.

(d) Under the amendments of March 2, 1889, to the statute, requiring ten days' previous notice of advances and three day's previous notice of reductions in rates, they cannot be varied from day to day, or oftener, to meet fluctuations in ocean rates. New York Produce Exchange v. New York Central & H. R. R. Co., 2 I. C. C. R. 553.

(e) Inasmuch as the Interstate Commerce Act prohibits, not only contracting for, but also collecting, a less rate of freight on interstate shipments than that specified in the schedule of rates in force at the time (such schedule being required by the Act to be printed, and kept in every station for inspection and use by the public), a common carrier who has complied with the terms of the Act in respect to providing and keeping the schedule is not precluded from collecting from a shipper the full schedule rate because, by mistake, a less rate was named to him by the carrier at the point of shipment, and also inserted in a bill of lading signed both by the carrier and the shipper, no fraud or wilful deception having been practiced or attempted. On discovery of the mistake, after the shipment, but in time to correct it at the point of destination, it may there be corrected by the exaction of the full schedule rate, and payment of the same by the shipper,—he being also the consignee,— as a condition to surrendering the goods to him, the transportation being fully competed. Should he refuse to comply with the conditions, the detention of the goods by the carrier to enforce payment of the correct charges is no conversion. Savannah, Florida & Western R. Co. v. Bundick, 5. 1. C. R. 289.

(f) A common carrier which has complied with the terms of the interstate commerce act in respect to providing and keeping in every station for inspection and use by the public a schedule of the rates of freight in force can collect from a shipper the full schedule rate, notwithstanding a less rate was named by the carrier at the point of shipment and inserted in the bill of lading, where no fraud or wilful deception was practiced or attempted, as such act prohibits not only contracting for, but also collecting, a less rate of freight than that specified in the schedule. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co., v. Rundick (Ga.), 5 I. C. R. 289.

(g) A contract of shipment within the operation of the Interstate Commerce Act is illegal and void and does not bind either party where it prescribes a greater or less rate of transportation than that prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for property of the kind shipped. Miss., Kans., & Te. R. R. Co. v. Bowles, 7 I. C. App. LXII.

(h) Circulars issued by a railway company prescribed maximum and minimum carload weights for grain depending up the capacity of the car furnished by the railway company to the shipper; the rules so prescribed were not shown upon the carriers posted schedules of rates and charges; and application of the rules to three carload shipments of corn carried for complainant resulted in materially increasing the charges above those in force under the carrier's published rate schedules. HELD: That complainant only had to consult the schedule showing defendant's rates and charges, and that complainant is entitled to recover charges collected on its shipments in excess of those set forth in such schedule. Suffern Hunt & Co. v. I. D. & W. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 255.

(i) A shipper of goods over lines within the Interstate Commerce Act is not bound to ascertain the local rates on the connecting lines, or know or assume, as matter of law, that carriers cannot contract for a through rate lower than the combination of the local rates; nor is he bound to make personal investigation or inquiry at the office of the Interstate Commerce Commission to learn if a through or joint rate has been filed, and what are its terms. The court says: "Undoubtedly the Interstate Commerce Act purposes to control the carriers in such a way as will insure to persons and localities shipping by them just, fair, and equal treatment" . . . . It nowhere intimates by any express language that contracts made by carriers within the scope of their general powers are to be declared, in any collateral proceeding which may arise, null and void by reason of some alleged or supposed departure from the requirements of that act with reference to the matter of fares and charges. On the contrary, as we read the act, it is strongly implied that the carrier will not only be liable to the government and to any private party injured, for a violation of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, but that carrier will also most certainly be bound on its contract to the party with whom it contracts." Pond-Dicker Lumber Co. v. Spencer, 8 I. C. C. App. LXV.

(j) A carrier which is a party to an agreement with other carriers for joint tariff rates is not bound by an emigrant rate given by an agent of one of the other carriers upon an interstate shipment, where it was based upon a false classification made by the agent knowingly or because of false representations of the shipper, in view of the amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act, making it an offense for any officer or agent to make false classification for the purpose of obtaining the low rate. The court says: "If the shipper obtained the low rate by misrepresentation, he was guilty of fraud, and neither carrier would be bound by a contract obtained in that way. On the other hand, if he stated the truth, and the agent, in order to favor him, billed the goods at emigrant rates, knowing that they did not come within the published definition of emigrant goods, he was guilty of a violation of the law, and his contract did not bind the connecting carrier. St. Louis & San Francisco R. R. Co. v. Ostrander, 8 I. C. C. App. XCIV.

(k) A tariff fixing a rate on machinery from Erie, Pa., to Salton, Cal., having been legally established, it was the duty of the defendants to apply the rate so published and in effect upon a shipment made by complainant between those points; and if, as claimed by complainant, a contract was made with defendant for a lower charge upon that shipment, such contract was not binding and its violation furnishes no ground for redress under the Act to Regulate Commerce. Red Cloud Min. Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 9 I. C. C. 216.

(l) The Act requires carriers to publish and adhere to their tariffs. Re A. T. & S. F. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 473, 487.

(m) Failure in the part of the shipper to pay, or of the carrier to collect, the full freight charges, based upon the lawfully published rate for the particular movement between two given points, constitutes a breach of law, and will subject either one or the other, and sometimes both, to its penalties, regardless of the rate quoted or inserted in a bill of lading. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(n) The published rate governing transportation between two given points, so long as it remains uncanceled, is as fixed and unalterable either by the shipper or by the carrier as if that particular rate had been established by a special Act of Congress When regularly published, it is no longer the rate imposed by the carrier, but the rate is imposed by the law. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 418, 422.

(o) A rate may be lawful in the sense that it is the regularly published rate and therefore the only rate under which traffic may lawfully move, and yet at the same time be unlawful in the sense that it is excessive and unreasonable in amount In no event may a carrier agree with a shipper that the published rate, under which shipments have been made, is too high and undertake to adjust it by collecting a less rate. The publication fixes and makes the rate inflexible and unalterable, and that rate must be applied until changed in the manner required by law. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418, 425.

(oa) Tariffs binding on carrier and shipper, both chargeable with notice of the rate and of the route over which a rate is made applicable. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 469.

(p) A carrier is required by law to publish the rate and also clearly to indicate the route over which the published rates are applicable. When so published the rate named and the route designated stand as the law, binding as well upon the shipper as upon the carrier. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 469, 470.

(q) A lawfully published schedule speaks with equal authority to the shipper and the carrier, and both are chargeable with notice of the rate and of the route over which a rate is made applicable. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 469, 470.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(r) Section 6 of the Act requires that carriers subject to Act shall in all cases publish rates at which they afford transportation services and that the rates specified shall in every case be observed. In Re Contracts of Express Companies, 16 I. C. C. 246, 249.

(s) The fact that a charge is grossly unjust and unreasonable affords no excuse either to the shipper, carrier or the Commission for disregarding the application of lawfully published and established tariffs. The law plainly provides for but one method of getting rid of the unreasonableness or injustice of duly established rates, and that is by their condemnation upon complaint and investigaiton. They cannot lawfully be ignored without making the parties to such transaction incur the penalties of the law. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Penn. R. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 309, 312.

(t) A carrier publishing a tariff with the Commission and under its jurisdiction is bound to assess, collect and retain neither more nor less nor different compensation than the charges so published from any shipper. Humboldt S. S. Co., v. White Pass & Yukon Route, 25 I. C. C. 136, 140.

(u) There is more excuse for departure from the usual and approved standards in the framing of tariff schedules which tend toward or approach lines of demarcation between things which are forbidden by law and those which are not, where the carriers are acting initially and particularly when so acting are confronting competitive conditions, if the result of such action is found to be in violation of law, than when they are acting in the light of findings, reports, and orders of the Commission concerning the particular situation involved, where they will be expected to act in good faith in the light of the Commission's action so long as it stands. Nashville Flour Transit Rules, 41 I. C. C. 483, 494.

(v) Section 6 of the Act provides that common carrier shall file with the Commission schedules showing all charges for transportation and that such schedules shall state separately all terminal charges and other charges which the Commission may require. Section 6 also provides that no carrier, unless otherwise provided, shall engage or participate in the transportation of property unless the charges upon which the same is transported have been filed and published in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Rule 10 (c) of Tariff Circular 18-A provides that a terminal road must publish tariffs containing all its charges whether any part or all of such charges are absorbed by connecting carriers; and Rule 10 (e) provides that if part or all of the charges of a terminal carrier are to be absorbed by a connecting road, the tariff of such connecting road must specify that its rate includes originating or delivery services by the terminal road, and that it will absorb the charges of such terminal road in a specified sum, or as per the current tariffs on file with the Commission. Chicago Live Stock Exchange v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 52 I. C. C. 209, 222.

(w) Interstate shippers are liable to pay the rate fixed by the printed and published schedules of carriers on file with the Commission. Lieberman Iron Co. v. Director General, 61 I. C. C. 21, 22.

(x) Shippers rights and obligations are determined by the special governing tariff and not by knowledge of defendant's usual practice indicated by other general tariffs. Louisa Schaefer v. L. V. R. R. Co., 66 I. C. C. 549, 551.

(y) The Act prohibits a carrier from charging, demanding, collecting, or receiving a greater or less or different compensation than that specified in its tariffs. California Sugar & White Pine Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. C. 338, 339, 340.

(z) Parties to a transportation transaction can not lawfully stipulate that any other than the applicable tariff rate shall apply. Baker Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R., 74 I. C. C. 489, 491.

(aa) A provision in a tariff carrying rates which may be used in combination to the effect that the rates are subject to the combination rule in Morris I. C. C. 1, is equivalent to the publication of said rule in the rate tariff. Combination Rates on Limestone, 78 I. C. C. 579, 581.

(bb) Deviation from legally applicable rate is not permitted by the Act under any pretext; an allowance can not be made except under provisions of lawfully filed tariff. Lay Fish Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 4, 5.

(cc) Under section 6 of the Act a carrier must abide by the published tariff rule, just as it must charge a published rate; but there is no reason why, when it is found that the rule has resulted in unreasonable charges under section 1, the Commission should fail to afford relief. The Commission's powers should not be contrued so narrowly as to defeat justice. Hawkins & Sons v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 225, 227.

(dd) Irrespective of the rate quoted, the legal rate must be paid by the shipper and collected by the carrier. Apperson Brothers Automobile Co. v. L. E. & W. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 392, 393.

(ee) Rate published by defendants to apply over lines of defendants and complainant, in which complainant did not concur. HELD: Defendants are bound to protect rate published and held out by them to public. Complainant, not being party to rate published, must collect its local rate, and defendants must pay to it this rate until tariff is corrected to accord with the statute. Fact that there is contract with complainant fixing amounts to be received by complainant for its services in connection with traffic from junction point, can not be permitted to defeat plain requirements of the law. Rate as at present published is unlawful and tariff should be corrected. St. Louis & O'Fallon Ry. Co. v. E. St. L. & S. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 541, 542.

(ff) Railroad tariffs duly filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, so long as in force, have the effect of statutes, and are binding upon the carrier and shipper alike. They are required for the purpose of preventing any preference or discrimination, and to effectuate that purpose must be uniformly applied and enforced. Anthony Carlin Co. v. Hines, (Ohio, 1923), 140 N. E. 99.

(gg) Interstate rate schedules, duly established in accordance with Interstate Commerce Act, §6, as amended (Comp. St. §8569), while in force, have the effect of a statute, and if in fact unreasonable the shipper is nevertheless bound to pay, and the carrier to retain, such rates, leaving, however, to the former the right to apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission for reparation. North American Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 288 Fed. 612.

(hh) The rights of a shipper against a carrier are determined by law through the provision of the tariff which are embodied in the applicable published rate. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., v. Settle, 43 Sup. Ct. 28.

(ii) Unless and until suspended or set aside, the rate contained in a carrier's published tariff is for all purposes, as between carrier and shipper, the legal rate, and the rights of the parties as defined by the tariff cannot be varied or enlarged by contract or tort of the carrier, or affected by the tort of a third party. Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. Ry., 43 Sup Ct. 47.

(jj) When a carrier's tariff is filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission or published, it becomes the law between the shipper and the carrier until the Commission has determined what are the just and reasonable rates to be charged, and in the meantime the carrier is prohibited from departing from the tariff, and its only remedy, if the shipper refuses to pay the tariff charges, is to sue for their recovery. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Emmons Coal Mining Co., 287 Fed. 168.

(kk) A railroad company is charged by law with collecting the freight charges contained in its tariffs filed with, and approved by, the Interstate Commerce Commission and any agreement by it to vary therefrom is void. Lexington Compress & Oil Mill Co. v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., (Miss., 1923), 95 Sou. 92.

(ll) The legal rate is the filed rate, and it is the duty of the carrier to charge and collect the rate precisely as the same is contained in the tariffs on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and this is true even though such rate be excessive, unreasonable, and unlawful. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Southern Sawmill Co., (Mo., 1923), 251 S. W. 434.

(mm) Whether tariff schedules filed by a carrier as reissues were effective retroactively is immaterial, where such schedules have been on file for the time required by the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, before the shipments on which the carrier seeks to impose such tariff were made. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Southern Sawmill Co., (Mo., 1923), 251 S. W. 434.

(nn) Where a 16-cent tariff rate on cypress lumber was permitted by the Interstate Commerce Commission to remain the legally filed and published rate, it was the duty of plaintiff, delivering carrier, to charge that rate so long as it was actually on file and published at the time the freight moved, regardless of the interpretation that should be given to a previous decision of the Commission in which the carriers were directed to cancel such rates as were found by the Commission to be unreasonable. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Southern Sawmill Co., (Mo., 1923) 251 S. W. 434.

(oo) An order of the Interstate Commerce Commission under Interstate Commerce Act, §15 (U. S. Comp. St. §8583), directing a carrier to cancel a rate is not self-executing as to annul the rate but if the order is not obeyed by changing the tariff rate as provided in section 6 (section 8569) that tariff is conclusively presumed to be the legal rate, and a departure therefrom is made an offense, the Commission having the power to compel obedience by proceeding under section 16 (section 8584), and Act. Cong. Feb. 19, 1903, §1, as amended by Act. Cong. June 29, 1906, §2 (U. S. Comp. St. §8597). Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Southern Sawmill Co., (Mo., 1923) 251 S. W. 434.

(pp) If a tariff was unreasonable, the only way it could be changed so as to relieve the carrier from the obligation of applying that rate was to require the carrier under Interstate Commerce Act, §6 (U. S. Comp. St., §8569), to print new schedules showing the changes, or by indicating them upon schedules already enforced, but until that was done the carrier must charge the rate, even though the enforcement of the statute involves a hardship. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Southern Sawmill Co., (Mo., 1923), 251 S. W. 434.

(qq) No estoppel can be enforced against the carrier to relieve the shipper or consignee from liability to pay the rate fixed by the regularly filed tariff under the Interstate Commerce Act (U. S. Comp. St. §8563 et seq.). Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Southern Sawmill Co. (Mo., 1923), 251 S. W. 434.

§3 (2) Erroneous quotation or publication.

See Erroneous Rate; Passenger Fares and Facilities § 15.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Where a contract is made with a shipper by a carrier, member of a through line, for shipment of goods over the line at a less than the published lawful rate charged shippers in general, it is not a violation of the Act to Regulate Commerce within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the delivering carrier to exact payment of the full lawful rate before delivery, although if the shipper was an innocent party he might be entitled to his goods on payment of the contract rate. Duncan v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Com.) 4 I. C. R. 385.

(b) Misrepresentation by a carrier as to the rate charged, but without injury, affords no ground of redress in a suit for damages. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Smith, 4 I. C. R. 415.

(c) A contract for the transportation of coal from a point in Missouri to one in Kansas for a rate less than a reasonable joint tariff rate agreed upon by two companies operating the roads between the two places, caused by a mistake of the agent of the receiving carrier, is utterly void as violating the provisions of the interstate commerce act prohibiting unjust discrimination. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hubbell (Kan.), 5 I. C. R. 241.

(d) Under judicial interpretation of the statute, shippers and consignees cannot depend for the lawful rate or charge upon what may be quoted by the carrier's agent, but they must be guided by the published rate sheets themselves; and this emphasizes the duty of carriers to make their schedules of rates comply precisely with the mandatory provisions in the statute concerning the contents and publication of such schedules, so that shippers may readily and accurately determine therefrom what rates, and what transportation rules affecting rates, are actually in force for a particular service. Suffern, Hunt & Co. v. Indiana, D. & W. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 255.

(e) Shippers and consignees cannot depend for the lawful rate or charge upon what may be quoted by the carrier's agent, but must be guided by the published rate sheets themselves. Suffern, H. & Co. v. Indiana, D. & W. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 255.

(f) Carriers are not only entitled to exact their proper established rates, but they are bound to do so, and a lower rate stated in the bill of lading issued by the carrier to the shipper will not be enforced. Shippers and consignees can not, therefore, depend for the lawful rate or charge upon what may be quoted by the carriers agent, but they must be guided by the published rate sheets themselves. Such interpretation of the law emphasizes the legal duty of the carriers to make their schedules of rates comply precisely with the mandatory provisions in the statute concerning the contents and publication of such schedules, in order that shippers may, upon inspection of such schedules, be enabled to readily and accurately determine what rates, and what transportation rules affecting rates, are actually in force for any particular service. Suffern Hunt & Co. v. I. D. & W. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 255, 278.

(g) While shippers largely rely upon the rates quoted by freight agents and billing clerks the law charges them with knowledge of the lawful rates. And they will not be heard, before this Commission, to claim the benefit of a lower than the lawful rate on the ground that some railroad clerk has made a mistake in quoting a lower rate for a particular shipment. To permit shippers to impute negligence to carriers in quoting rates and on that ground to enjoy the rate quoted instead of paying the lawfully published rate would open a way for the payments of rebates and might, in practical results, work a repeal of the law. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(h) Agents of carrier can not bind to other than tariff rate. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(i) Regularly published rate governing transportation between two given points, so long as uncanceled, the only legal rate, and cannot be affected by mistake in quoting a lower rate. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(ia) To permit shippers to impute negligence to carriers in quoting rates and on that ground to enjoy the rate quoted instead of paying the lawfully published rate would open a broad and ample way for the payment of rebates and for other unlawful practices and might, in its practical results, work a repeal of the essential feature of the law. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418, 423.

(j) The published tariff rates control notwithstanding the erroneous quotation of another and lower rate by agent of the defendant A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418, 421.

(k) Regardless of the rate quoted or inserted in the bill of lading, the published rate must be paid by the shipper and actually collected by the carrier. The failure on the part of the shipper to pay or of the carrier to collect the full freight charges, based upon the lawfully published rate for the particular movement, between two given points, constitutes a breach of the law and will subject one or the other, and sometimes both, to its penalties. Not even a court may interfere with a published rate or authorize a departure from it when it has voluntarily been established by the carrier. A. J. Poor Grain Company v. C. B. & Q. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 418, 422.

(l) Mistake by carrier in responding to an inquiry by a shipper, either as to the rate or the route, will not excuse the carrier from collecting the lawful rate or the shippers from paying it. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 469.

(m) When responding to an inquiry by a shipper, a mistake made by a carrier either as to the rate or the route will not excuse the carrier from collecting the lawful rate or the shipper from paying it. A. J. Poor Grain Company v. C. B. & Q. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 469, 470.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(n) Accidents of tariff publication alone should not operate to continue rates upon a basis different from that upon which they were established and intended to be maintained. Substitution for Increase in Rates, 61 I. C. C. 518, 522.

(o) Proof of error in the publication of rates does not justify a departure from the published rates, and the intention of tariff framers is not controlling. Seaboard By-Product Coke Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 317, 329.

(p) A misstatement by an agent of a railroad company of the amount of a freight charge on an interstate shipment, and its payment by the shipper, HELD not to relieve him from liability for the lawful rate. Payne, Director General of Railroads, v. Clarke, 271 Fed. 525.

(q) Where an erroneous interstate rate is quoted and collected, the carrier must collect the correct freight even though that results in injury or great hardship to the shipper or consumer, and the carrier cannot by its conduct estop itself to sue for and recover the lawful rate. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., (Tenn. 1923), 248 S. W. 297.

§3. (3) Notice to Shipper.

See Notice; Released Rates §3½; Reparation §8.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Under the amendments of March

2, 1889, to the statute, requiring ten days previous notices of advances and three days notice of reductions in rates, they can not be varied from day to day, or oftener, to meet fluctuations in ocean rates. New York Produce Exchange v. N. Y. C. & H. R. Co., 2 I. C. C. 553, 568.

(b) That shipper was not informed of the through tariff rates when making shipments between local points will not avail him as a basis for an action for violation of the long and short haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887, where he made no inquiry, and no false statements were made to him, and the shipping point was a noncompeting one where no publication of the joint rate was required under the order of the Commission made June 21, 1887. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Osborne (C. C. App. 8th C.), 4 I. C. R. 257.

(c) Under § 6 of the act, two kinds or classes of routes are recognized and provided for, namely, the line of a single carrier, and a continuous line or route operated by more than one carrier, where the participating carriers establish joint rates or charges for such continuous line or route; and in respect of both classes of lines, the provision is uniform that established rates shall not be increased except after ten days, notice, nor reduced except after three days' notice. Consolidated Forwarding Co. v. Southern P. Co., 9 I. C. C. 182.

(d) Shippers, being charged by law with knowledge of the lawful rates, cannot claim the benefit of a lower than the lawful rate, on the ground that some railroad clerk has made a mistake in quoting a lower rate for a particular shipment. Poor Grain Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(e) Shippers charged with knowledge of rates. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(f) Regardless of the rate quoted or inserted in a bill of lading, the published rate must be paid by the shipper and actually collected by the carrier. The failure on the part of the shipper to pay or of the carrier to collect the full freight charges, based upon the lawfully published rate for the particular movement between two given points, constitutes a breach of the law and will subject either one or the other, and sometimes both, to its penalties. Not even a court may interfere with a published rate or authorize a departure from it when it has voluntarily been established by the carrier. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 418.

(g) A lawfully published schedule speaks with equal authority to the shipper and the carrier, and both are chargeable with notice of the rate and of the route over which a rate is made applicable. A. J. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Ry. Co. Et. Al., 12 I. C. C. 469.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(h) The responsibility rests upon the carrier to have lawful rates and rules in effect and every shipper may, with safety, rely upon such rates without fear that they will be withdrawn as illegal after he has made shipment thereon, resting in confidence that they are lawful so long as they are in force. If subsequently found to be unlawful the carrier is subject to penalty for the institution and maintenance of such rates or rules, but the law does not contemplate that the shipment shall move under any other theory than that the provisions of the carrier's tariff are in full compliance with the law's demands. The carrier may not plead the unlawfulness of its tariff to avoid extending the benefit thereof to a shipper. Interstate Remedy Co. v. American Express Co., 16 I. C. C. 436, 439.

(i) Rules and regulations published in tariffs are as binding as published rates, and shippers are chargeable with knowledge of them. El Paso Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 135, 137.

(j) The Commission is of the opinion that a carrier may not plead the unlawfulness of its tariff to avoid extending the benefit thereof to a shipper. While it has been repeatedly emphasized by the Commission that the shipper is put upon notice of the rate by the publication of the tariff, it has not been held that a shipper must determine for himself the lawfulness of a rate, regulation, or practice, upon his peril. The responsibility rests upon the carrier to have lawful rates and rules in effect, and every shipper may with safety rely upon such rates without fear that they will be withdrawn as illegal after he has made shipments thereon, resting in the confidence that they are lawful as long as they are in force. If subsequently found to be unlawful the carrier is subject to penalty for the institution and maintenance of such rates or rules, but the law does not contemplate that the shipper shall move upon any other theory than that the provisions of the carriers tariff are in full compliance with the laws demands. Louis Werner Stave Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 395, 397.

(k) The Commission has frequently held that a shipper is not required to look beyond the face of a tariff. Louis Werner Stave Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 395, 397.

(l) Shippers are presumed to know contents of tariffs, and lack of such knowledge will not affect applicability of tariffs. General Petroleum Corp. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 53, 54.

(m) It is well settled that shippers are presumed to know the contents of tariffs, and lack of that knowledge would not affect the applicability of the tariff. General Petroleum Corporation v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 53, 54.

(n) Diversion requested "with understanding that it be not made unless through rate could be protected." Charges assessed at applicable combination rate. HELD: Failure of carrier to comply with condition attached to diversion order does not constitute violation of the act. Every shipper is bound to take notice of terms and conditions of tariffs governing his shipments. Northwestern Traffic & Service Bureau v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 81.

(o) Every shipper is bound to take notice of terms and conditions of tariffs governing his shipments. Western Transit Co. v. Leslie & Co., 242 U. S., 448. Northwestern Traffic & Service Bureau v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 81, 82.

(p) Under the Interstate Commerce act, the rate for either freight or passengers under the tariff of the carrier duly filed is the only lawful charge. Deviation from it is not permitted upon any pretext. Shippers and travelers are charged with notice of it, and they as well as the carrier must abide by it, unless it is found by the Commission to be unreasonable. Ignorance or misquotation of rates is not an excuse for paying or charging either less or more than the rate filed. This rule is undeniably strict, and it obviously may work hardship in some cases, but it embodied the policy which has been adopted by Congress in the regulation of interstate commerce in order to prevent unjust discrimination. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Maxwell, 35 Sup. Ct., 494, 495; 237 U. S. 94, 59 L. ed.

(q) In the O'Connor Case, 232 U. S. 508, 34 Sup. Ct. 380, 58 L. Ed. 703, and the Robinson Case, 233 U. S. 173, 34 Sup. Ct. 556, 58 L. Ed. 901, it was said that the conclusiveness of the filed rates has no application to attempted fraudulent acts or false billing. But there is no hint at fraud or false billings in the present case. The rates were open to inspection at the station of the defendant at Murfreesboro, and if the terms of the contract were not known, they were at least available to plaintiff. He must take notice of the rates applicable when they are filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, as required by law, and actual want of knowledge is no excuse. The shipper's knowledge of the lawful rate is conclusively presumed. The rate when made out and filed is notice, and its effect is not lost, although it is not actually posted at the station. Kansas City Sou. Ry. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 33 Sup. Ct. 391, 57 L. Ed. 683, J. T. Rather & Co. v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., (Tenn. 1915), 174 S. W. 1113, 1115, 1116.

(r) The shippers's knowledge of the lawful rate is conclusively presumed, and the carrier may not be required to surrender the goods carried upon the payment of the rate, if that is less than the lawful rate, until the full legal rate has been paid. Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Carl, 33 Supt. Ct. 391, 395; 227 U. S. 639.

(a) Neglect to publish rates for milage tickets is violation of Act. Larrison v. Chicago, etc. R. R. Co., 1 I. C. C. 369.

(b) The statute has made it the duty of the carrier under a heavy penalty, to file a copy of tariffs with the Commission, and this is one of the most vital and important provisions of the statute. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce v. F. & P. M. R. Co., 2 I. C. C. 393, 397.

(c) Common carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, for a continuous carriage or shipment from a place in the United States to a place in an adjacent foreign country, are subject to the provisions of the Act in respect to the printing of schedules of rates, fares, and charges for the traffic they carry, the posting and filing with the Interstate Commerce Commission of copies of such schedules, the notices of advances and reductions, and the maintenance of the rules, fares, and charges established and published and in force at the time; also to the provisions in respect to joint tariffs of rates, fares, and charges established and published and in force at the time; also to the provisions in respect to joint tariffs of rates, fares, and charges for continuous lines or routes. Re Grand Trunk R. Co. (Com.) 2 I. C. R. 496.

(d) Under the provisions of the Act the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada is required to print, post and file its schedules of rates and charges for the transportation of property from points in the United States to points in Canada, and cannot lawfully charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation therefor, or for any services in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule as may at the time be in force. Matter of Grand Trunk Railway Co. v. 2 I. C. R. 496.

(e) Rules and regulations which in any wise change, affect or determine any part or the aggregate of a carriers rates, fares or charges must be shown separately upon the carriers posted schedules of rates, fares and charges; and any such rules or regulations promulgated by the carrier in circulars issued independently of its rate schedules are not lawfully in force. Suffern Hunt & Company v. I. D. & W. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 255, 272.

(f) Rules or regulations which, if enforced, would result in changing or affecting rates or charges shown on published schedules must be notified to the public for the time required by law for other rate changes. The notice should set forth the changes proposed to be made in the schedules then in effect, and such changes must be shown by printing new schedules or be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time. Suffern Hunt & Company v. I. D. & W. R. Co., 7 I, C. C. 255, 273.

(g) To be in compliance with the Act, any practice of a carrier which operates to alter, modify or change its rates must be fully and clearly set forth upon its published tariffs of rates and charges to be affected thereby. Spillers & Co. v. L. & N. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 364, 367.

(h) A carrier cannot excuse the collection of an unpublished and unknown drayage and transfer charge by proof that it had a rule which forbade the sending of its own cars beyond its own line during a period of car shortage and congestion of business, especially where no notice of the rule, either actually or by reference in a published tariff, had been brought to the shipper. Schwager & Nettleton v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 521.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(i) Under section 6 of the Act requiring schedules to be published and filed with the Commission and providing that they shall also state separately all terminal charges, storage charges, icing charges and all other charges which the Commission may require, and all privileges or facilities granted or allowed," it was not intended that the carrier should be required to state separately the hauling charge between the stations and the charge for the use of the terminal at both ends of the line. The terminal charges referred to in section 6, and which must be expressly set forth in the carrier's tariff, are those for other services at the terminal which the carrier may furnish, such as storage, elevation, switching and cartage. Associated Jobbers of Los Angeles v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 18 I. C. C. 310, 315.

(j) The duty rests upon the carrier to clearly and definitely state its rates and charges in its tariffs, and it is prohibited from accepting either more or less or different compensations for transportation than that so stated. The duty rests upon the shipper to clearly state and truly represent the character of his shipment, and he is entitled to no rate except that shown in the carrier's schedule for the transportation of the commodity as tendered for shipment. Ford Co. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 19 I. C. C. 507, 511.

(k) To prevent discrimination and promote equality of treatment in charges and services, the law requires not only a definite statement of the amount of the rates, fares and charges of carriers in their established schedules, but an equally definite statement therein of all privileges and facilities granted or allowed in connection therewith, and any rules or regulations which in any wise affect or determine any part or the aggregate of the rates, fares or charges, or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, shipper or consignee. It is clear that no schedule complies with the requirements of the law which does not definitely and fully state the charges on the one hand and the services to be rendered therefor, on the other. In Re Mileage, Excursion and Commutation Tickets, 23 I. C. C. 95.

(l) Where provisions are eliminated from one tariff in anticipation of publishing them in another the two tariffs should be amended simultaneously. Western Trunk Line Rules, 34 I. C. C., 554, 580.

(m) With respect to traffic where steamship company is forced to meet port to port competition of water carriers not required to file tariffs a petition may be filed for continuing permission to make effective on short notice rates not higher than those in effect when permission is granted. Ocean S. S. Co. of Savanah, 37 I. C. C. 422, 480.

(n) While all charges must be separately stated, the statute does not make it unlawful to secure compensation for the protective service by regarding it as an integral part of the service of transportation. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 463.

(o) The uniform scale of charges for transportation of circus and carnival trains promulgated by the railroad administration during Federal control, was merely an administrative authority and not a rate or charge, and as such not governed by section 208 (a) of the transportation act, or required to be filed with the commission. Comma v. St. L.-S. F. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 400, 402.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) There is more excuse for departure from the usual and approved standards in the framing of tariff schedules which tend toward or approach line of demarcation between things which are forbidden by the law and those which are not, where the carriers are acting initially and particularly, when so acting are confronting competitive conditions, if the result of such action is found to be in violation of law, than when they are acting in the light of findings, reports, and orders of the Commission concerning the particular situation involved, where they will be expected to act in good faith in the light of the Commission's action so long as it stands. Nashville Flour Transit Rules, 41 I. C. 483, 494.

(b) Commission's tariff regulations are aimed at simplicity and uniformity, and changes made with that object in view will be condemned only upon a clear showing of unlawfulness. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. Director General, 53 I. C. C. 583, 586.

(c) The objects of the Act are to prevent favoritism and to secure equal rights to all in interstate transportation, and to apply one legal rate published, posted and accessible to all alike. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., v. U. S., 212 U. S. 481, 495, 29 Sup. Ct. 304, 53 L. ed. 613.

§6. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) It appears that the Southern Pacific Company and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company each has several stations on their lines at which no publication is made in their tariffs of the rates at these stations,—and this they admit; and the Commission finds that this conduct on their part has been owing to a misapprehension and misconstruction of the law and in accordance with a usage and practice long existing among railroads; the Commission therefore orders them to make publication of the rates they charge at these stations in their tariffs; and in all other respects, as to these defendants and the Union Pacific Railway Company, the petition in this proceeding stands dismissed. Rice v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe R. R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 263.

(bc) Common carriers are required to post in their depots, stations and offices schedules showing the rates and charges for transportation in force on the routes of such carriers, as well as on freight which is, as on that which is not, for export. New Orleans Cotton Exchange v. L. N. O. & T. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 523, 525.

(d) The rates which carriers are required by the sixth section of the statute to publish, file, and adhere to without deviation cover not merely the carriage, but services rendered in receivng and delivering property as well Phelps & Co. v. T. & P. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 363, 367.

(e) Carriers' methods of making and publishing rates from eastern points to the Pacific coast criticised. Mere designation in a paper or circular of the means of arriving at rates by calculation or reference to other papers or tariffs does not constitute the rate sheet required to be published and filed by section six of the law. The reissuing by a carrier of a tariff of another line and by a supplement concurrently issued limiting its use of the rates therein prescribed to such as are over a specified minimum, is reprehensible. The only satisfactory method of publishing rates is to definitely state the charges fixed between points clearly specified, without burdening and confusing the public with the need of making involved calculations or with scrutinizing a series of supplements to determine whether a particular rate has been changed since the original tariff was issued. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 6 I. C. C. 488.

(f) Posting notices in a railway station that all rates are on file in the office of the station agent and may be examined upon application to such agent does not constitute compliance with the requirements of the act in respect to the posting by a common carrier of printed schedules showing its rates, fares and charges. Rea v. M. & O. R. Co. 7 I. C. C. 43, 50.

(g) When rates established to apply between points within a single state are applied as part of combination rates on transportation between different states, such state rates, as well as the interstate rates with which they are combined, must be published at stations and filed with the Commisson as provided in section 6 of the act. In the matter of export rates from points east and west of the Mississippi River, 8 I. C. C. 185, 213.

(h) The schedule of rates required by §6 of the law to be printed, posted and filed with the Commission should state, among other terminal charges, the rules and regulations, if any, of the carrier in relation to storage. Pennsylvania Millers' State Asso. v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 8 I. C. C., 531.

(i) Posting a notice in a station or depot that the tariff sheets of the railroad company may be found in some other place is not compliance with the provision in the sixth section of the act requiring the posting of rate schedules or tariffs in every depot or station. Johnson v. C. St. P. M. & O. Ry. 9 I. C. C. 221, 237.

(j) The Act to Regulate Commerce provides that all interstate rates shall be filed with the Commission, and requires annual reports of the operations and financial condition of all interstate carriers. When a schedule is filed announcing an advance of general application, for which no apparent reason exists, such action is a proper subject of investigation, and if it thereupon appears that the advance is unwarranted the Commission should exhaust whatever power it has to correct the injustice. Re Proposed Advances in Freight Rates, 9 I. C. C. 382.

(k) The provision of section six of the Act to Regulate Commerce are not complied with by posting a notice stating that tariffs may be inspected upon application to the carrier's agent. Paxton Tie Co. v. Detroit S. R. Co. 10 I. C. C. 422.

(l) Carrier subject to the Act to Regulate Commerce as amended may not lawfully refuse transportation as therein defined, but must, upon reasonable request, afford the same upon established rates filed and kept posted as required by law. Waxelbaum & Co. v. A. C. L. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 178.

(la) Omission to include all rates, fares, etc. The jurisdiction of the Commission and the purpose of the law can not be defeated by the omission or failure of carriers to include in their schedules and to keep posted and open to public inspection the rates, fares and charges for the entire service, both transportation proper and refrigeration, which under the law they are bound to provide. Waxelbaum v. A. C. L. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 178.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(m) A tariff filed with the Commission in the manner prescribed by law and on statutory notice is a lawful tariff and lawfully binding upon both carriers and shippers, though it is not posted at stations fully thirty days prior to its effective date. Pueblo Transp. Ass'n vs. S. P. Co. 14 I. C. C. 82, 85.

(n) While the posting of tariffs is required by the Act, and while a failure to post the same may subject the carriers to penalties, the failure to obey the law in this respect does not invalidate the tariff when it has been properly filed with the Commission. Posting of rates as required by section 6 of the Act, is not a condition to making the tariff legally operative. The requirement that tariffs be posted in depots, stations and offices of carriers was intended as a means of affording special facilties to the public for ascertaining the rates actually in force, and not as a condition upon which the legal operation of a tariff must depend. Buren v. S. P. Co., 26 I. C. C. 332.

(o) Higher charges published in separate tariffs found applicable to shipments moving outbound from transit point, and the publication by the inbound carrier of the tariff naming lower charges without the concurrence of its connections found to be a direct contravention of the Commission's rules under section 6 of the act, and shipper is justifed in relying upon the lower basis of rates thus offered Reparation awarded. Brenner Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 595.

(p) The posting of rates as required by section 6 of the Act is not essential to make them legally operative, and is required only as a means of affording special facilities to the public for ascertaining the rates actually in force. K. C. S. Ry. v. Albers Comm. Co. 223 U. S. 573, 594, 32 Sup. Ct. 316, 56 L. ed. 556.

(q) Under section 8 of the Act making a carrier liable for damages resulting to a shipper from the carrier's violation of the Act, a shipper may, for the carrier's failure to post and keep open for inspection its established rates whereby the shipper is compelled to pay a higher rate than that in effect over a competing line, recover the difference between the rate paid and the competitive rate, and this despite the fact that the shipper would thereby be charged less than the defendant's published charge. St. L. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Lewellen Bros., 192 Fed. 540, 542.

(r) Posting is not prerequisite to the establishment of an interstate rate. I. C. R. R. Co. v. Henderson Co., 33 Sup. Ct. 176, 177; 226 U. S. 441.

(s) The rate, when made out and filed is notice to the shipper for the purpose of declaring valuation, and its effect is not lost, although it is not actually posted in the station. Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Carl, 33 Sup. Ct. 392, 395; 227 U. S. 639.

§6a. Form of Tariffs.

(a) Methods generally adopted by carriers in the preparation and publication of rate sheets, if in substantial compliance with the law and sufficient for purposes of public information, while not necessarily to be accepted by the Commission as a standard, may be acquiesced in until a better mode can be substituted. Re passenger tariffs 2 I. C. C. 445, 446.

(b) All common carriers subject to the act shall, in future issues of their rate sheets, schedules and joint tariffs, including all future amendments and supplements to existing joint tariffs, comply with and conform to the general rules laid down in pamphlet of the Commission of Dec. 1891. That all common carriers in all joint tariffs hereafter filed, and all future amendments and supplements to existing joint tariffs, be hereafter so arranged and printed as to show distinctly the names of the several parties thereto. That all common carriers subject to the act which shall hereafter be named as parties to any joint tariff filed and published by another carrier, or as parties to any amendments or supplements to existing joint tariffs, shall forthwith upon the publication thereof file with the Commission a statement or certificate showing their acceptance of and concurrence therein and making themselves parties thereto. In the matter of form and contents of rate schedules 4 I. C. C. 698, 704.

(c) The mere designation, in a paper or circular, of the means of arriving at rates by calculation or reference to other papers, does not constitute the rate sheet required to be published and filed by the Act to Regulate Commerce, §6. Colorado

Fuel & I. Co. v. Southern P. Co. 6 I. C. C. 488.

(d) Defendants required to correct their methods of announcing rates, changes in rates, and exceptions to rate sheets by participating lines, so that their rate schedules will be readily intelligible to shippers and consignees. Johnston-Larimer Dry Goods Co. v. A., T. & S. F. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 568.

(e) Rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect or determine any part or the aggregate of a carrier's rates fares or charges must be shown separately upon the carrier's posted schedules of rates, fares and charges; and any such rules or regulations promulgated by the carrier in circulars issued independently of its rate schedules are not lawfully in force. Suffern, Hunt & Co. v. Indiana, D. & W. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 255.

(f) Rules or regulations which, if enforced, would result in changing or affecting rates or charges shown on published schedules must be notified to the public for the time required by law for other rate changes. The notice should set forth the changes proposed to be made in the schedules then in effect, and such changes must be shown by printing new schedules or be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time. Suffern, Hunt & Co. v. Indiana, D. & W. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 255.

(g) Rules or regulations which, if enforced, would result in changing or affecting rates or charges shown on the published schedules must be notified to the public for the time required by law for other changes. The notice should set forth the changes proposed to be made in the existing schedule, and such changes must be shown by printing new schedules, or plainly indicating it on the schedules in force. Suffern, H. & Co. v. Indiana, D. & W. R. Co. 7 I. C. C. 255.

(a) Any one member of a joint combination may file copies of joint tariff for all the members. Re Filing Copies of Joint Tariff, 1 I. C. R. 76.

(aa) When purposes of Act seem to be fully accomplished by rate sheets as printed, and no one complains. Commission may not feel inclined to interfere on its own motion where sheets are printed in smaller type than prescribed by Act. ReRate Sheets, 1 I. C. R. 316.

(b) Terms for rolling stock for transportation of petroleum oil should be uniform and published with rate sheets. Rice v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. 1 I. C. R. 722.

(c) Common carriers are under obligations to take all descriptions of ordinary traffic from all points; and it is right that the rates should be known and announced publicly in advance of the offering of traffic. Re tariffs of the transcontinental lines 2 I. C. C. 203, 207.

(d) Methods generally adopted by carriers in the preparation and publication of rate sheets, if in substantial compliance with the Law and sufficient for purposes of public information, while not necessarily to be accepted by the Commission as a standard, may be acquiesced in until a better mode can be substituted. Re Passenger Tariffs v. 2 I. C. R. 445.

(e) The Act requires that all the rates of a rail carrier subject to its provisions shall be plainly printed in the tariff under which the freight is carried so that the shipper, consignee or any other person having occasion to examine them may see and understand what they are. Rice v. A. T. & S. F. R. Co. 3 I. C. C. 263, 271.

(f) A tariff sheet whose caption shows that the rate made applies only when the grain is destined through to points on the seaboard, and which has a memorandum at its foot showing that the total through rate is to be ascertained by consulting another tariff sheet for the rate from the point mentioned in such sheet to the seaboard, sufficiently shows that the rate named is a part of the joint through rate and not a local rate. Parsons v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 5 I. C. R. 95.

(g) A charge that a tariff sheet was a mere device to evade the law will not be considered in the absence of allegations of any fact showing that the agreement upon a general through rate indicated by it was merely colorable. Parsons v. Chicago N. W. R. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 5 I. C. R. 95.

(h) The rate which carriers are required by the Act to Regulate Commerce, §6, to publish, file, and adhere to without deviation, cover not merely the carriage, but services rendered in receiving and delivering property as well. Phelps v. Texas & P. R. Co. 6 I. C. C. 36.

(i) Posting notices in a railroad station that all rates are on file in the office of the station agent and may be examined upon application to him is not a compliance with the requirements of the Interstate Commerce Act that the schedules be posted, although the expedient is adopted because the schedules have been repeatedly torn down. Rea v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 7 I. C. C. 43.

(j) An interstate commerce rate for hay covers old hay as well as new hay. Miss., Kans., & Tex. R. R. Co. v. Bowles, 7 I. C. C. App. LXII.

(k) Rules or regulations in any wise changing, affecting, or determining any part of the aggregate of a carrier's rates, fares, or charges must be shown separately upon the posted schedules; and any such rules or regulations promulgated in circulars issued independently of such schedules are not lawfully in force. Suffern, H & Co. v. Indiana, D. & W. R. Co. 7 I. C. C. 255.

(l) It is unlawful practice for a carrier to disregard the regular published tariff rates, and charge a lower rate made up of a combination of the rate from the point of shipment to a competitive point, and from such competitive point to the station of destination, where the rule is not set forth in its published tariff. Spillers & Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 364.

(m) Published tariffs specifying rates per standard crate on vegetables shipped from Florida to northern or northeastern points should state plainly the dimensions of the crate to which the rates apply. Re Alleged Unlawful Charges for Transportation of Vegetables, 8 I. C. C. 585.

(n) Complainants shipped two carloads of snapped corn over the railways of the St. Louis & San Francisco and Texas & Pacific companies, from Grove, Indian Territory, to Marshall, Texas. On one carload defendants exacted a charge of 44 1-2 cents per 100 pounds and on the other 31 1-2 cents. The only published rates in effect and applicable to the shipments were, an interstate rate of the former company of 21 cents per 100 pounds plus 25 per cent for the transportation to Paris, Texas, and a proportional rate of the latter for transportation from Paris to Marshall of 14 1-2 cents, except that the T. & P. Company's tariff provided that lower combinations by other roads would be protected. Upon one shipment the tariff purporting to name the rates was an association tariff consisting of 297 pages, filled with notes, exceptions and special references, indicated by a host of arbitrary signs, and was so involved that the freight officials of the carriers could not agree, and the Auditor of the Commission found it difficult to determine the rate which did apply. HELD: 1. That the rate of the St. L. & S. F. Company for the transportation to Paris was excessive and unreasonable to the extent that it exceeded 21 cents per 100 pounds. 2. That the proportional rate of the T. & P. Company of 14½ cents per 100 pounds is assumed to be reasonable. 3. That complainants are entitled to reparation to the extent that the charges exacted from them exceeded 35 1-2 cents per 100 pounds. 4. That it is the duty of railroad companies, under the Act to regulate commerce, to print, publish and file tariffs showing rates which are so simplified that persons of ordinary comprehension can understand them; and that a notation in the tariff of one carrier making reference to the tariff of some competing carrier does not meet the requirements of the law that the rate charged shall be published and filed. H. B. Pitts & Son v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. et al. 10, I. C. C. 684.

(o) It is manifestly contrary to law, and leads to confusion, for one line of rates to be retained in published tariffs while others are in fact used on actual shipments; and so long as carriers in Southern Classification territory deem it necessary to retain class F in their classifications, and publish rates applicable thereto, including flour in barrels, and at the same time publish commodity rates on the same article carried in sacks, there should be uniformally a just relation in such rates. S. J. & S. Cannon v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 11 I. C. C. 537.

(p) Tariff cannot be given retroactive effect. Re Through Routes and Joint Rates, 12 I. C. C. 163.

(pa) Published rate is the law. Poor Grain Co. v. C. B. & Q. Co. 12 I. C. C. 418.

(pb) Joint rate in tariff a unit. Union P. Purchasing Co. v. C. & M. W. R. Co. 12 I. C. C. 549.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(q) After the passage of the Hepburn Act the rule of the Commission was not that clauses applying rates to intermediate points should be eliminated from tariffs and the specific points be mentioned, but that indefinite and uncertain "intermediate" and "maxima" rules should be amended so as to make their application affirmative and definite and to state plainly what rates should be applied at intermediate points instead of saying that certain rates "should not be exceeded" at said points. White Water Farms Co. v. P. B. & W. Ry. Co. 13 I. C. C. 526, 527.

(r) In every instance where a commodity rate is named in a tariff upon a commodity and between specified points, such commodity rate is the lawful rate and the only rate that can be used with relation to that traffic between those points even though a class rate or some combination may make lower. The naming of a commodity rate on any article or character of traffic takes such articles or traffic entirely out of the classification and out of the class rates between the points to which such commodity rate applies. Porter v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 1, 5.

(s) Tariffs reading "between" are always understood to apply in either direction. Advance Thresher Co. v. O. & N. W. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 599, 600.

(t) A shipper cannot be charged with knowledge of the intent of the framers of schedules or the carrier's canons of construction. Newton Gum Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 16 I. C. C. 341, 346.

(u) A distance tariff is to be applied when no other rates are provided, or when, under a special provision in the tariff therefor, it makes lower than the specific rate shown in the same tariff. Lee Warren Milling Co. v. C. R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 16 I. C. C. 422, 423.

(v) Where the language of a tariff is ambiguous in its specifications, and when there is a reasonable doubt as to its true import and meaning, a private agreement may be examined and employed as a medium of explanation of the tariff to remove the ambiguity. Hood & Sons v. D. & H. Co., 17 I. C. C. 15, 19.

(w) Where, on a newly constructed line, the published class rates contain the provision that for rates to and from stations not named therein rates to and from stations next beyond shall be applied, and where between two given points from which commodity rates have been published there is a point from which no rates are named, such provision in the class tariff cannot be extended to the commodity tariff. Wheeler-Holden Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 21 I. C. C. 237.

(x) A rate unreasonably high and unlawful, in the sense of section 1, may, nevertheless, be the legally established standard and rule of action, under section 6 of the Act. The sole test of the latter is the due publication of the rate in the manner and form prescribed by the statute, regardless of how the rate may have come to be established, whether knowingly in the usual course, or improper purposes. Crescent Coal & Mining Co. v. C. & E. I. R. R. Co., 24 I. C. C. 149, 156.

(y) Where the through rates and charges must necessarily be made up of the separately established rates and charges, because there is no joint tariff, the law requires carriers subject to the Act to file such separately established rates and charges. Eagle Pass Lumber Co. v. National Railways of Mexico, 25 I. C. C. 5, 7.

(z) The rate in effect at the time a shipment begins to move is the rate lawfully applicable. Transit Case, 25 I. C. C. 130, 134.

(aa) Although a rule may appear to be unlimited in its application when taken by itself, the general character of the tariff in which it is found must be taken into consideration. Hutchinson Mill Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 25 I. C. C. 180, 181.

(bb) Where there are two rates—one a joint rate, and the other a combination rate—the joint rate is the legal rate. Arabol Mfg. Co. v. S. B. Ry. Co., 25 I. C. C. 429, 431.

(cc) Tariffs should contain special arrangements necessary to meet special condition. In re Break-Bulk Rates on Grain, 27 I. C. C. 78, 82.

(dd) The customary meaning of the word "billed" is waybilled at point of origin. It would be an unwarranted construction of the term to hold that it means "received at—terminals up to and including" specified dates. New York Hay Exchange Assn. v. L. V. R. R. Co., 29 I. C. C. 90, 92.

(ee) Tariffs must be enforced in accordance with their terms, and when provisions are clear and free from ambiguity no agreement between the shipper and the carrier assigning another meaning to them may lawfully be substituted; nor may this Commission sanction a departure from their plain meaning until such rules have been found to be unlawful under the act. Peters Mill Co. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 38 I. C. C. 245, 248.

(ff) Tariff provided that on lumber milled in transit and delivered to connecting carrier, charges to junction point will be on weight of rough lumber and beyond the junction point on weight of dressed lumber, but it does not appear what rates the tariff proposes to assess. Such a provision is indefinite, improper, and unlawful and can not furnish a basis for reparation. Atlantic Lumber Co. v. T. & O. R. R., 46 I. C. C. 368, 370.

(gg) Line-haul rates of carriers in this country have been made to include compensation for the delivery and placement of freight upon the tracks of private industries, and if this long-established usage were to be changed and separate charges imposed for the accessorial services which are merely incidental to the line haul, even handed justice would seem to require that these line-haul rates should be proportionately reduced, and such a change would involve sweeping revisions of many thousands of tariffs. Huron Milling Co. v. P. M. R. R., 49 I. C. C. 558, 560, 561.

(hh) The fact that there was no notation or symbol of an increase in a tariff supplement, an item of which was amended, and that in a subsequent supplement a further modification of that item with reference to reconsignments bore symbols denoting both increase and reduction, did not affect the validity or applicability of the item, as it was allowed to become effective in each instance. New Era Milling Co. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 207, 210.

(ii) A tariff must be construed in its entirety considering both the limitations on its title-page and rules contained therein. Commission can not consider only the part of the rule that is favorable to complainant's contention, and ignore provisions of the tariff that make clear its application. United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. Director General, 55 I. C. C. 253, 255, 256.

(jj) Tariffs should inform the public definitely and clearly as to the application of the rates named therein. New Bedford Board of Commerce v. Director General, 55 I. C. C. 320, 321.

(kk) Points on new branch line not indexed in the applicable tariff from which rates applied, whereas the rates from stations included in the tariff had been in effect prior to opening of the new line. Contention that it was never intended to apply rates of original tariff to points on the new line, not sustained, as the carrier should have specifically excepted points on the new branch line, as was subsequently done. Wood Curtis Co. v. S. P. Co., 56 I. C. C. 344, 345.

(ll) Tariffs are to be construed according to their terms, and the intention of the framers is not controlling. Provisions should be so clearly stated as to avoid misinterpretation or misunderstanding. Wood Curtis Co. v. S. P. Co., 56 I. C. C. 344, 346.

(mm) It is a well established rule that tariffs are to be construed according to their terms, and the intention of the framers is not controlling. Their provisions should be so clearly stated as to avoid misinterpretation or misunderstanding. Wood Curtis Company v. S. P., 56 I. C. C. 344, 346.

(nn) A tariff providing joint rate, with creosoting-in-transit service, required payment of inbound freight bills and their recordation by Joint Rate Inspection Bureau, and required shippers, transit-house owners, or operators to keep daily record of receipts and deliveries. As requirements not compiled with combination rates were assessed in accordance with published tariffs. Joyce-Watkins Co. v. Director General, 56 I. C. C. 433.

(oo) A consolidated tariff governing the transportation of perishable commodities would greatly reduce the number of tariff publications, facilitate the ascertainment of charges, and tend to eliminate discrimination as between communities and commodities. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 461.

(pp) Nothing can be added to or subtracted from the law by limitations or definitions stated in tariffs, and there is the constant risk, if declarations are included, of misstating the law and misleading the parties to no good purpose. Perishable Freight Investigation, 56 I. C. C. 449, 482.

(qq) Where a supplement to a tariff contained an index of commodities similar to the index in original tariff, and all matter in the supplement not embraced in the index made reference to a note in connection with each particular rate, there has been a substantial compliance with the rules of Tariff Circular 18-A, requiring an index and reference to show clearly the application of rates. Cobbs & Mitchell v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 179, 181.

(rr) A tariff carried the following provision: This route shown in this tariff is that ordinarily and customarily used, but if from any cause the carriers for their own convenience, route shipments via junction points other than that shown being over the lines of carriers parties to this tariff, the rates shown herein will apply. HELD this provision was plainly applicable to shipments routed by carriers, not by shippers. Dort Motor Car Co. v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 374, 375.

(ss) A contention that the phase in a tariff "Highest rate and minimum weight" means the highest rate and highest minimum weight, sustained. Minimum Weight on Live Stock in Mixed Carloads, 64 I. C. C. 546.

(tt) The meaning of a tariff is limited to the plain import of the language employed therein. El Paso Chamber of Commerce v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 135, 136.

(uu) Tariffs are to be construed according to their language, and the intention of the farmers is not controlling. William L. Carney v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 309, 310.

(vv) The Commission has frequently held that tariffs must be construed strictly according to their terms and that the intention of the framers is not controlling. Republic of France v. General 68 I. C. C. 419, 423.

(ww) If it was defendants purpose to restrict the application of the joint rate to any particular route and the reconsigning privileges authorized in connection therewith to it should be in clear and unequivocal language. Freeman Grain Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 559, 561.

(xx) Whatever may have been the intention of its framers a tariff is to be construed according to its terms. Los Angeles Pressed Brick Co. v. Director General, 69 I. C. C. 254, 255.

(yy) Different rates on "peanut hulls" and "ground peanut hulls" published in the same tariff. Shipments of hulls rolled under high pressure to effect compactness for shipment, as well as to reduce them to small particles, found to consist of "peanut hulls," as the term when used in a tariff must be construed to apply to the commodity prepared in a practical manner for transportation. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Rothchild Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 126.

(zz) Neither the intention of tariff compilers nor the use to which an article is put is controlling in determining the rate applicable on a particular commodity. The commission has consistently condemned such methods of determining applicable rates. Morris & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 137.

(3a) In numerous instances the Commission has said that neither the intention of tariff compilers nor the use to which an article is put is controlling in determining the rate applicable on a particular commodity. Morris & Co. v. Director General 73 I. C. C. 137, 139.

(3b) Under the provisions of section 6 of the act requiring the observance of rates and charges lawfully published and filed, the rate in effect at the beginning of a transit movement must be applied on the shipment to final destination. Nonsurrender of Inbound Billing, 73 I. C. C., 455, 457.

(3a) Commercial rates charged on certain messages relating to news articles and tendered for transmission to newspapers found applicable and not unreasonable or unduly prejudicial. Such messages found not entitled to lower press rates, since they were not queries within the meaning of the tariff. While they related to newspaper articles to be transmitted, they did not relate strictly thereto, as provided in the rules. Consolidated Press Asso. v. W. U. T. Co., 73 I. C. C., 379.

(3d) Contention that transportation service was a switching movement and that increases in switching charges were not contemplated by General Order No. 28 of the director general. HELD, whether or not charges assessed were authorized by that order, the fact is that they were published and were the applicable charges, and it is immaterial, so far as the issue of their justness and reasonableness is concerned, whether the movement be designated a switching or linehaul service. Minnesota Steel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 571, 573.

(3e) Emergency rates established by the director general to afford relief to drought stricken territory and assessed on hay, feed, bran, and shorts, from points in Washington to destinations in Montana, found applicable. Another section of the same tariff named specific commodity rates, but since they were restricted to apply westbound, the "application of rates" provisions can not be construed as making them applicable on traffic moving eastbound. Devereaux Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 627.

(3f) Tariffs are construed according to their language, and the intention of the framers is not controlling. Baker-Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 489, 491.

(3g) Intention of tariff compilers is not controlling, it being well settled that where a tariff contains conflicting provisions the one according the lowest rates or charges governs, and particularly when the rule producing the lower rate or charge was first in effect and has not been legally canceled. Swift & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 77 I. C. C. 678.

(3h) It is well settled that tariffs must be construed according to their terms. Definitions of the term "handling" at Virginia, south Atlantic and Gulf ports. 78 I. C. C. 4, 7.

(3i) Whatever may have been intention of framers, a tariff is construed according to its terms. In case of ambiguity a tariff must be construed against framer. Pacific Rice Mills Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 459, 461.

(3j) Tariffs must be construed according to their provisions. Van Dusen Harrington Co. v. Director General 78 I. C. C. 729, 731.

(3k) Under section 6 a carrier must abide by the published rule, just as it must charge a published rate; but there is no reason why, when the Commission finds the rule has resulted in unreasonable charges under section 1, it should fail to afford relief. The power of the Commission should not be construed so narrowly as to defeat justice. Hawkins & Sons v. Director General 80 I. C. C. 225, 227.

(3l) Commission has frequently drawn distinction between legal rate required under section 6 of the act and lawful rate provided for in other sections. Lay Fish Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C., 4, 5.

(3m) Allegation that carrier has violated section 6 of the act through assessing and collecting without tariff authority switching charges on grain transited at a certain point, predicated upon failure to state in tariff naming transit provisions charges in connection therewith, not sustained. Tariff carrying rates of carrier contains general provision that switching charges at any point will be added to through rate unless provision is made for absorption. This is in accordance with requirements of rule 10 (a) of Tariff Circular 18—A. Detroit Board of Trade v. W. Ry. Co. 80 I. C. C. 717, 723.

(3n) Shipments moved all-rail over lines of carriers parties to tariff containing no restriction as to routing. Charges assessed under higher rates of another tariff, upon defendant's construction that tariff first referred to was restricted to rail-and-water or rail-water-and-rail movements. HELD: Whatever may have been intention of carriers, lower-rail tariff contained no restriction against all-rail movement of traffic over lines of carriers parties thereto and forming complete route for complainant's shipments, and rates provided by it were applicable. Shipments found overcharged and refund directed. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 131.

(3o) Contention that charges in ground-storage tariffs were applicable on shipments remaining loaded in cars, specific orders for unloading having been given as required by tariff. HELD: Adequate request was made by complainant to have shipments unloaded, and it, therefore, had done all that was necessary to secure benefits of provisions of ground-storage tariffs. Republic of France v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C., 174, 179.

(3r) Tariffs may be intended to effect a certain result, but the mere intent of carriers in framing tariffs may not be given controlling weight in interpreting the tariffs. Standard Oil Company v. Midland Valley R. R. Co. 81 I. C. C. 193, 195.

(3p) As between two constructions of a tariff rule, that one should be adopted which gives effect to the whole rather than one which creates a conflict. Brenner Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 241, 244.

(3q) Tariff provided for cancellation of combination rates in other tariffs and prescribed "combination rule." No specific cross reference between tariffs as required by Tariff Circular 18-A. Contention that superseding tariff was without legal effect, as published in violation of tariff requirements of commission. HELD: Tariff constituted notice of rule applicable in connection with combination rates and applied to traffic moving between points specified therein. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Former reports, 59 I. C. C., 411, and 62 I. C. C., 119, reversed. Acme Cement Plaster Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 298.

(3r) If intent of carrier is to limit application of a charge to certain traffic, that intent should be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms. In case of ambiguity, the familiar rule of construction is that a tariff must be construed against the framer. Northwest Steel Co., 68 I. C. C., 195, 198. Sutherland Flour Mills Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 365, 366.

(3s) In case of ambiguity, the familiar rule of construction is that a tariff must be construed against the framer. Sutherland Flour Mills Co. v. Director General 81 I. C. C. 365, 366.

(3t) A tariff whch makes the application of rates over particular routes dependent upon the existence of divisions, without stating the routes with respect to which divisional arrangements are in effect, is indefinite and unlawful and imposes uncertain and unreasonable conditions upon the shipper. Acme Mills v. Director General 81 I. C. C. 492, 494.

(3u) Tariffs must be construed strictly according to their language, and the intention of the framers is not controlling. Routing on grain and grain products from Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, and Lockport, Ill., to Texas points. 81 I. C. C. 725, 727.

(3w) Tariffs must be construed according to their language and the intention of the framers is not controlling. Mason City Brick & Tile Co. v. Director General, 88 I. C. C. 37, 38.

(3x) The location of a rule in a tariff must be considered in determining the correct application of the rule. Furnishing Ice and Salt, 88 I. C. C. 361, 363.

(3y) The words of a tariff should be construed in their ordinary sense, and where the meaning so construed, is clear it must govern. Flaney Grain Company v. Director General, 89 I. C. C. 33, 36.

(3z) The only lawful rate on an interstate shipment is the tariff rate by the route over which the shipment moved. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Lykes Bros. 294 Fed. 968.

(4a) In view of the Interstate Commerce Commission decision and tariffs in evidence, HELD, that whether melons were to be classified for charges by a carrier as a vegetable or a fruit was question of fact. American Ry. Express Co. v. Magnola Fish & Oyster Co. (Tex. 1923), 255 S. W. 459.

(4b) Where the question of a rate to be charged on an interstate shipment is in question, the interstate tariff rates for the shipment control as the tariff rates have the effect of a statute, and both carrier and shipper being presumed to know, they must abide by them. Peuchen v. Davis, 198 N. Y. S. 518.

(4c) A tariff is construed most strongly against the carrier. Southern Ry. Co. v. Berthold & Jennings Lumber Co., (Mo. 1923), 247 S. W. 219, 221.

(4d) In construing a written tariff rule of a carrier which has been filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the intentions of the parties must govern. Davis v. Latham-Bradshaw Cotton Co. (N. C. 1923.) 117 S. E. 391.

(4e) A carrier, having prepared tariff schedule for interstate shipments, is not entitled to have them liberally construed in its own favor, and the rule of fair and reasonable construction applies. Raymond Hadley Corporation v. Boston & M. R. R., 174 N. Y. S. 342.

§8. Ambiguity.

(a) A system of tariffs and classifications unintelligible to shippers defeats the end and object of the provisions of the law and rules of the Commission thereunder requiring the posting and publication of rates for the information of the public. Duncan v. A. T. & S. F. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 385, 390.

(b) The only satisfactory method of publishing rates is to definitely state the charges fixed between points clearly specified, without burdening and confusing the public with the need of making involved calculations or with scrutinizing a series of supplements to determine whether a particular rate has been changed since the original tariff was issued. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. v. S. P. Co., 6 I. C. C. 488, 519.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) It is not just or fair to the shipping public to promulgate as a basis for determining rates a classification the terms of which are indefinite or impracticable of application either in whole or in part. Shippers must necessarily be more or less misled thereby, and any effort on the part of the carriers to apply the classification by a lax interpretation thereof must result in inextricable confusion. The classification of an article of commerce should be plainly and clearly stated in terms that the shipping public may readily understand. Tariffs are to be construed according to their language and the intention of the person who framed the tariff and the arbitrary practice of the carriers thereunder may not be looked to as an authoritative construction thereof. Pacific Coast Biscuit Co. v. S. P. & S. Ry. Co., 20 I. C. C. 546, 549.

(d) Even if there be ambiguity in the tariff it should be construed against the framer. Northwestern Steel Co. v. Director General 68 I. C. C. 195, 198.

(e) In case of ambiguity, the familiar rule of construction is that a tariff must be construed against the framer. Pacific Rice Mills Co. v. Director General, 78 I. C. C. 459, 461.

(f) Whatever may have been the intention of the carriers publishing the tariffs the rules must be interpreted according to their wording and whatever ambiguity exists must be construed against the publishing carrier. Republic of France v. Director General, 81 I. C. C. 174, 178.

(g) Grain was switched by defendant from Cairo, Ill., elevator to connection with M. & O., thence over M. & O. to complainant's mill at Cairo. Tariff provided switching charge for movement from elevator to M. & O. connection. Contention that such switching charge restricted to traffic receiving line haul on connecting roads by tariff rule providing that "switching charges will only apply between industries and point of connection with other railroads, and will not apply on cars moved from one industry or side track to another industry or side track both of which are located at same station." HELD: Tariff rule did not clearly express alleged intent of carrier to so restrict switching charge, and because of ambiguity must be construed against carrier. Switching charge found applicable and reparation awarded. Sutherland Flour Mills Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 365.

(h) Tariff ambiguities are resolved in favor of the shippers. Mason City Brick & Tile Co. v. Director General, 88 I. C. C. 37, 42.

§8½. Amendments and Supplements.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The reissuing by a carrier of a tariff of another line, and, by a supplement concurrently issued, limiting its use of the rates therein prescribed to such as are over a specified minimum, is reprehensible. Colorado Fuel & I. Co. v. Southern P. Co. 6 I. C. C. 488.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Where a change is made in an item republished it is technically an amendment, not a reissue. And an amended item should always be printed in a supplement in its entirety. Coal Operators' Traffic Bureau of St. Louis v. B. & O. S. W. R. R., 41 I. C. C. 361, 362.

(c) The fact that there was no notation or symbol of an increase in a tariff supplement, an item of which was amended, and that in a subsequent supplement a further modification of that item with reference to reconsignment bore symbols denoting both increase and reduction, did not affect the validity or applicability of the item, as it was allowed to become effective in each instance. New Era Milling Co. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 207, 210.

(d) It is well settled that a rate once lawfully established continues to be the legal rate until it has been legally canceled. A subsequent tariff naming new rates without canceling the previous rate can not carry the new rate into lawful effect. Citing New Albany Box & Basket Co. v. I. C. 16 I. C. C. 315. Dewey Portland Cement Co. v. A. T. & S. F., 56 I. C. C. 444, 445.

(e) Where supplement to tariff contained index of commodities similar to index in original tariff, and all matter in the supplement not embraced in the index made reference to a note in connection with each particular rate, there has been a substantial compliance with the rules of Tariff Circular 18-A, requiring an index and reference to show clearly the application of rates. Cobbs & Mitchell v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 179, 181.

(f) In publishing a reissue of a supplement to a tariff, a comma was erroneously inserted between certain items which had the effect of making applicable higher rates. After shipments moved tariff corrected by eliminating comma, making lower rate applicable. Reparation awarded. Young v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 305.

(g) Contention that a revised clause was improperly published and not lawfully effective because the notation in the tariff to indicate a change of rate was either incorrectly shown or else entirely omitted, in violation of the commission's rules in Tariff Circular 18-A, HELD: Fact that there was no notation or symbol of an increase in the supplement . . . did not affect the validity or applicability of the item. Nat'l Preserves & Fruit Products Asso. v. A. & S. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 179, 181.

(h) Contention that combination rates were illegal in that each factor was increased under General Order No. 28 of director general, master supplements to tariffs publishing separate factors providing that "total" increase would not exceed sum that was here applied to each factor, not sustained. Master supplements did not contain so-called combination rule or any other provision legalizing single maximum increase in through combination rates, and limitation upon amount of increase can therefore be construed only as applying to increase in each separately published rate. Hence, each factor, although used in constructing through rate, was subject to increase. Van Dusen Harrington Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C., 729, 731.

§9. Cancellation.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) A rate, once lawfully published, continues to be the lawful rate until it has been lawfully cancelled. A subsequent tariff, naming other rates without cancelling the previous rates, can not carry the new rates into lawful effect. The silence of a subsequent tariff with respect to rates lawfully in effect cannot be accepted as a lawful cancellation of the previous rates, nor will vague references in subsequent tariffs as to the cancellation of previous tariffs have that effect. The law and the requirements of the Commission provide a method by which existing rates may be cancelled, and other rates put into effect, and these requirements must be fulfilled in order to give legal effect to a new rate intended to take the place of an existing one. The Albany Box & Basket Co. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 16 I. C. C. 315, 316.

(b) A cancellation of a schedule of rates is not to be construed as a withdrawal of all rights arising under such schedule to those who have availed themselves of its provisions prior to the date that such schedule dies. If there is offered to the shipper under the tariff a right of stopping-in-transit, reconsignment, storage or return of freight, he is entitled to the use of such privilege even though it may later be cancelled out of the tariff before the time allowed for the exercise of such right has expired. The date of original shipment determines the rights, privileges and obligations attaching to that shipment throughout its transportation. Interstate Remedy Co. v. American Express Co., 16 I. C. C. 436, 438, 439.

(c) Where the initial carrier's advanced rate tariff does not cancel the lower commutation rate named in the tariff of another line to which the initial line is a party, the lower rate is the legal rate. Stilwell v. L. & H. R. Ry. Co., 19 I. C. C. 404.

(d) Error in the publication of rates and rules is not in itself justification for cancellation of rates or rules so established and maintained. Intermediate application of class rates from Lexington, Ky., 77 I. C. C. 427, 430.

§9a. Combination Rule.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Combination rates on clay, brick, mine props, mine caps, logging, slab wood, gravel, and sand between St. Louis and Vandalia, Mo., during Federal Control, which exceeded joint rates prescribed by the State commission, found not unreasonable. Factors composing the combination rates were on file with the appropriate commissions and were therefore the applicable rates. The director general was not amenable to rate orders of State commissions and fact that rates were subsequently reduced is insufficient to warrant a finding of unreasonableness. Walsh Fire Clay Products Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 410.

(b) The publication by one carrier participating in the traffic of the so-called combination rule was a holding out by that carrier of a specific manner of making up the combination through rate, which combination basis that carrier must protect. Standard Oil Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C., 271, 272.

(c) Even though the combination rule may be undesirable as a tariff rule, that fact alone does not justify its elimination from the tariffs unless the carriers publish either joint or proportional rates in lieu thereof in order to prevent unwarranted increases in rates. Cancellation of Combination Rules to the Southwest, 74 I. C. C., 505, 509.

(d) A provision in a tariff carrying rates which may be used in combination to effect that rates are subject to combination rule, which provides a method for arriving at combination through rates, is equivalent to publication of said rule in rate tariff and principle announced in Sligo Case, 62 I. C. C., 643, and 73 I. C. C., 551, is controlling. Combination Rates on Agricultural Limestone, 78 I. C. C. 579, 581.

§9½. Changes during Suspension Period.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where a tariff was suspended but before its effective date the carriers issued a corrected tariff purporting to cancel that under suspension, such tariff rejected under the Commission's order which prohibits changes in rates while under suspension pending investigation. Lumber to Texas Ports, 44 I. C. C. 275, 276.

§10. Concurrences.

See Concurrences; Through Routes and Joint Rates §2.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where there is concurrence in the guide book, but no concurrence in rate, though such was intended, there is no legal rate or basis of reparation, tariff rate charged not being unlawful. Noble v. G. T. W. Ry. Co., 20 I. C. C. 70, 71.

(b) So far as charges on its own road are concerned, a carrier cannot be bound by tariffs of its connections, in which it has not concurred; neither can it ignore the provisions of the tariffs of its connections with reference to charges for services performed by those connections. Hull Co. v. S. Ry. Co., 24 I. C. C. 302, 303.

(c) Concurrence sheets are not posted in the same manner as are tariffs, and no opportunity is afforded the general public to ascertain whether or not the terms of the concurrence limit the application of the tariff in so far as the participating road is concerned. Healy & Towle v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 43 I. C. C. 83, 84.

(d) Paragraph (4), section 6 of the act requires that the "names of the several carriers which are parties to any joint tariff shall be specified therein," and that each of the parties thereto other than the one filing the tariff shall file such evidence of concurrence therein as may be required by the commission. N. Y. Dock Ry. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 656, 662.

(e) The New York Dock Ry. filed with the commission concurrences in tariffs naming rates applicable to or from its terminals, which in effect, give assent to the publication of rate schedules in which it is shown as a participating carrier. In instances where such railway is not named in the tariffs it is not a party to joint rates published therein, in view of the specific requirement of the law as set forth in paragraph (4), section 6, of the act. Accordingly divisions thereof to be received by such railway can not be prescribed. New York Dock Ry. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 656, 662.

(f) Where schedules purport to publish joint rates, and intermediate carrier, which forms a necessary link in through route, actually participates in through movement, and for whose account a switching charge is published, is not shown as concurring carrier, such method of publication is contrary to the act and commission's tariff regulations. Cord and Pulp Wood to Canton, 78 I. C. C. 503, 596.

(g) Rate published by defendants to apply over lines of defendants and complainant, in which complainant did not concur. HELD: Defendants are bound to protect rate published and held out by them to the public. Complainant, not being party to rate published, must collect its local rate, and defendants must pay to it this rate until tariff is corrected to accord with the statute. Fact that there is contract with complainant, fixing amounts to be received by complainant for its services in connection with traffic from junction point, can not be permitted to defeat plain requirements of the law. Rate as at present published is unlawful and tariff should be corrected. St. Louis & O'Fallon Ry. Co. v. E. St. L. & S. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 538, 541, 542.

(h) The mere insertion in the tariff of an erroneous concurrence number did not invalidate the rates shown therein. Bartlett Co. v. C. P. & St. P. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. A-203.

§11. Conflict in Rates.

See Bills of Lading, §9, §9 (2); Through Routes and Joint §21; §21, §22.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where the rate of the delivering carrier conflicts with the rate previously established by the initial line, the former is not the legal rate. Sunderland Bros. Co. v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., 18 I. C. C. 425, 426.

(b) While the tariff published by carrier's agent, being a bureau or committee issue, provided for the application of rates named in the individual issue of the carrier, this did not have the effect of excluding the application of the rates actually named in the bureau or commitee tariff issued by the agent. Kenner Truck Farmers' Assn. v. I. C. R. R. Co., 32 I. C. C. 1, 5.

(c) The shipper is entitled to the lower of conflicting rates. United Verde Copper Co. v. Penn Co., 48 I. C. C. 663, 664.

(d) There can be but one applicable rate at the time over the same route between the same points on the same trffic. U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co. v. Diector general 68 I. C. C. 389, 392.

(e) In case of conflict the commodity tariff takes precedence over the classification. Queen City Iron & Metal Co. v. Director General, 73 I. C. C. 618, 619.

(f) Two rates published in different sections of the same tariff, each section providing that if a rate therein made a lower charge than a rate in the other the rate therein would be applied. Since the tariff provided for the alternative application of rates in the different sections, the rate producing the lowest charge on a particular shipment was the rate applicable. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Rothschild Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 126, 127.

(g) Proposal to except proportional rates of the Midland Continental R. R. on petroleum and products, from application of the combination rule, which provided a method by which through rates were given specific or flat increases under General Order No. 28 of the director general, when made up of separately established rates, found not justified. Tariffs specifically provided for application of the combination rule; use of the Midland's proportional rates as exception would result in conflicting tariff provisions. Cancellation of Combination Rule on Petroleum, 73 I. C. C., 146.

(h) In case of conflict the commodity tariff takes precedure over the classification. Queen City Iron & Metal Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 618, 619.

(i) While the disposition of the commodity may properly be considered when the description given by the shipper and the rating applied by the carrier's inspector are in conflict, such evidence is not controlling. Western Cartridge Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C., 654, 655.

(j) Tariff provided for furnishing of ice and salt for refrigeration throughout c. f. a. territory at carrier's expense. Subsequently rule was adopted for purpose of assessing such charges upon consignor or consignee, creating conflict with the preexisting rule on this point. HELD: Intention of tariff compilers is not controlling, it being well settled that where a tariff contains conflicting provisions the one according the lowest rates or charges governs, and particularly when the rule producing the lower rate or charge was first in effect and has not been legally cancelled. Charges assessed found illegal and reparation awarded. Swift & Co. v. Director General, as Agent 77 I. C. C. 678.

(k) It is well settled that the intention of the tariff compilers is not controling; and it is equally well settled that where a tariff contains conflicting provisions the one according the lowest rates or charges governs, and particularly when the rule producing the lower rate or charge was first in effect and has not been legally cancelled. Swift & Co. v. Director General 77 I. C. C. 678, 680.

(l) Upon reargument, original report, 66 I. C. C., 415 amended to extent of finding that fifth-class rate on imported pickled sheep skins illegal to extent it exceeded domestic commodity rate on sheep slats (green). Tariff provision in connection with rate on "Green" slats indicated that that was not restricted to green hides in strict sense of the word nor to green hides preserved only with salt, but was intended to cover untanned skins which had undergone some temporary preserving process. Reparation awarded. Tanners' Council v. Director General, as Agent. 78 I. C. C. 27.

(m) Tariff carried rule providing that "rates . . . . will, in absence of specific commodity rates, apply from or to directly intermediate points." Shipments moved from certain branch line points in California to San Francisco, Calif., during Federal control, and commodity rate from next more distant point applied. Lower commodity rate from point farther distant available. HELD: Since points of origin were "directly intermediate" to point taking lower commodity rate, and language of tariff did not limit application of intermediate rule to "next more distant point," such lower rate was applicable. Rate charged found illegal and reparation awarded. Pacific Rice Mills Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 459.

(n) A general provision in an item of a freight tariff established by the Interstate Commerce Commission, giving the carrier the right to transport cotton to any other compress, if the one designated is unvailable, without additional charge to the shipper must yield to an inconsistent provision in the subsequent item, referring to shipments on designated routes in cases coming within the later item. King v. Chicago R. I. & G. Ry. Co., (Tex. 1922), 241 S. W. 180, 181.

(o) A lawfully established rate remains in effect, and is the only lawful rate until canceled, notwithstanding a subsequently published conflicting rate. The latter does not supersede, nor can it be substituted for, the prior existing rate except by proper tariff provision to that effect. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. S. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. 555.

§11½. Description.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Iron or steel articles which have a recognized commercial value other than that of the metal from which they are manufactured are not properly described as scrap iron. Schwartz v. T. & N. O., 61 I. C. C. 29, 31.

(b) Where a commodity rate description of vehicles included trailers, and carriers failed to cancel such description when a specific designation of trailers was placed in the classification, such commodity rates are legally applicable. Texas State Highway Dept. v. Director Generall, as Agent, 69 I. C. C. 220, 222.

§12 Cross-references.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) It is the duty of railroad companies, under the Act, to print, publish and file tariffs showing rates which are so simplified that persons of ordinary comprehension can understand them; and that a notation in the tariff of one carrier making reference to the tariff of some competing carrier does not meet the requirement of the law that the rate charged shall be published and filed. H. B. Pitts & Son v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. 10 I. C. C. 684, 688.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) The provisions of a storage and reconsigning tariff issued separately by one carrier, to which two other connecting carriers are not named as parties, cannot be applied to through movements under the joint tariff of the three carriers unless the latter tariff by express reference to the former so provides. Wash. Broom & Woodenware Co. v. C. R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 15 I. C. C. 219, 221.

(c) References in one tariff publication to another must be in specific, clear, and unambiguous terms as to every item affected. Marx & Sons v. I. C. R. R. Co., 36 I. C. C. 419, 522.

(d) Where use of rates in one section of tariff is predicated upon rates in another section of the same tariff, one factor cannot be used interdependently of the other. Nebraska Bridge Supply & Lumber Co., v. Director General, 58 I. C. C. 129, 131.

(e) Where supplement to tariff contained index of commodities similar to index in original tariff, and all matter in the supplement not embraced in the index made reference to a note in connection with each particular rate, there has been a substantial compliance with the rules of Tariff Circular 18-A, requiring an index and reference to show clearly the application of rates. Cobbs & Mitchell v. Director General, as Agent, 59 I. C. C. 179, 181.

(f) Tariff must contain specific authority for extra service and the charge therefor, or must provide that rates contained in tariff are subject to the rules, regulations, and charges as lawfully on file with the Commission governing reconsignment, etc., Rule 10 (a) of Commission's tariff regulations cited. Sifritt v. P. M. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. 1913.

§12¼. Exceptions.

See Class Rates §2(1).

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where a tariff applied generally from all points in Oregon, it applied from points there on a new branch line, although they were not specifically named in the index of stations to the tariff. Wood Curtis Co. v. S. P. Co., 56 I. C. C. 344.

(b) Where tariff naming a lower rate applying in connection with a delivering line specifically excepts shipments moving over the rails of certain carriers, the lower rate is not applicable to shipments forwarded via the rails of said lines so specifically excepted. American Cement Plaster Co. v. C. & A. R. R. Co., 59 I. C. C. 165, 166.

(c) Commodity rates were in effect on packing-house products, but exceptions to classification provided that in applying increases under General Order No. 28 of director general "the increased class rates applicable to like commodity description . . . . are not to be exceeded." Contention by defendants that, because not all commodities named in item "packing-house products" in commodity tariff appeared in similar item in classification exceptions, the "commodity descriptions" were not "like," within meaning of rule above quoted, and that class rates applied to specifically named packing-house products were inapplicable, not sustained. Fact that certain articles were listed in one tariff and not in other does not deprive articles listed and described alike both of benefit of the rule. Former report, 61 I. C. C., 153, reversed. Morrell & Co. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 200, 202, 203.

§12½. Guide Book.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) In the adoption of a guide book or other auxiliary to a main tariff, routing, way-billing, terminal and transit rules and other restrictive, expansive, or modifying regulations may not be ignored, as to do so would work violence to the well-established principle that a tariff rate or rule cannot be divorced from any of its governing conditions or limitations, except by clear and specific tariff provisions therefor. Newman Lumber Co. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 97, 100.

(b) Where a carrier is named in a tariff as an originating line and a paragraph in the tariff limits the application of the rates to certain guide books to which said carrier is not a party, that carrier is not thereby eliminated as an originating line when rates to certain destinations are specifically shown and reference to the guide books is unnecessary. Cancellation of Joint Class Rates from T. & W. R. R. Co., 59 I. C. C. 122, 123.

(c) No rule or provision which would warrant conclusion that rules as to billing instructions contained in basing book should take precedence over rules contained in tariffs of initial line. Morse Lumber Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. 1919.

§13 Index.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where there are two stations of the same name in the same state in different counties a tariff which does not in its index contain such information, but leads a reader to suppose there is but one station of that name in the state, does not comply with section 6 of the Act to the effect that "schedules ....'..... shall plainly state the places between which property and passengers shall be carried ....." Larson Lumber Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 21 I. C. C. 474, 475, 476.

(b) Points on new branch line not indexed in the applicable tariff from which rates applied, whereas the rates from stations included in the tariff had been in effect prior to opening of the new line. Contention that it was never intended to apply rates of original tariff to points on the new line, not sustained, as defendant should have specifically excepted points on the new branch line as was subsequently done. Wood Curtis Co. v. S. P. Co., 56 I. C. C. 344, 345.

(c) Where a supplement to a tariff contained index of commodities similar to index in original tariff, and all matter in the supplement not embraced in the index made reference to a note in connection with each particular rate, there has been a substantial compliance with the rules of Tariff Circular 18-A, requiring an index and reference to show clearly the application of rates. §14. Legality.

See Legal Rate; Legality of Rates; Proportional Rates III.

(a) The filing of schedules of rates with the Commission as required by statute raises no presumption as to the legality of such rates, and no omission or failure to challenge or disapprove the schedules of rates so filed can have the effect of making rates lawful which are unreasonable. San Bernardino Board of Trade v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Co., 3 I. C. R. 138.

(b) A tariff of rates adopted by a carrier subject to the Act to Regulate Commerce, between a point on its own line and points on the line of a connecting carrier with which it has no agreement for a joint tariff, not showing its charges for the haul upon its own route, is illegal, independently of the legality of the charge for the haul upon its own route upon which the rates are based, since the requirement of §6 as to the publication of rates upon its route cannot be complied with. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323.

(ba Tariffs can not be made to apply to conditions other than those existing upon the date when such tariffs became effective. A combination through rate is as binding, definite, and absolute as a joint through rate; and all of the conditions, regulations, and privileges obtaining as to any factor in such combination rate for through shipment at the time of initial shipment upon such combination through rate must be adhered to and can not be varied as to that shipment during the period of such shipment to its final destination. A local or proportional rate "in" can not be absorbed, diminished, or affected by any "out" rate not in effect at the time when the traffic moved upon such local or proportional rate. In the Matter of Through Routes and Through Rates, 12 I. C. C. 163.

(bb) Tariffs do not conform to the law, which make the rate charged dependent upon one or more factors which do not enter into the transportation as actually conducted. Pacific Coast Jobbers & Manfrs. Asso. v. Southern P. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 319.

(bbc) That the law does not permit a rate to be stated which includes charges which the carrier does not in fact meet. And that a tariff does not conform to the law which makes the rate set forth dependent on one or more factors, such as a state toll, which do not enter into the transportation as actually conducted. Pac. Coast Jobbers & Manfrs. Asso. v. So. Pac. Co., 12 I. C. C. 320.

(c) A tariff or schedule of transportation rates does not conform to the law which makes the rate charged as set forth in the tariff dependent upon one or more factors which do not enter into the transportation as the same is actually conducted. Pacific Coast Jobbers & Mfrs. Asso. v. Southern Pacific Co., 12 I. C. C. 320, 324.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) Every rate is presumed to be lawful. Banner Milling Co. v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., 14 I. C. C. 398, 408.

(e) A rate or tariff published and filed with the Commission cannot be held to be legal merely because of that fact; it must also be plain and intelligible. Porter v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 1, 4.

(f) It is permissible for a carrier to issue a distance tariff for use in determining rates on its own lines, but only in cases where no other rates are provided. Porter v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 1, 5.

(g) The law does not contemplate that the shipper shall move upon any other theory than that the provisions of the carrier's tariff are in full compliance with the law's demands. Interstate Remedy Co. v. American Express Co., 16 I. C. C. 436, 439.

(h) The Commission will not sanction a tariff rate published only for articles to be employed in a special undertaking. American Creosote Works v. I. C. R. R. Co., 18 I. C. C. 212, 215.

(i) A tariff is contrary to law which provides that the rate in effect at the time of reshipment shall govern. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. A. C. L. R. R. Co., 19 I. C. C. 434, 435.

(j) Tariffs which contain rates applicable only to the shipments of certain consignees, or applicable only when a commodity is put to a particular use and which are restricted to the use of certain shippers and not open to all shippers alike, are in violation of section 2 of the Act and unjustly discriminatory in violation of section 3 of the Act, and are therefore unlawful. In Re Restricted Rates, 20 I. C. C. 426, 437.

(k) A tariff is not unlawful on the ground that it is in effect an exclusive service for the benefit not of the general public but of a single shipper, where the result arises merely from the fact that one shipper is in a position to avail himself of the tariff, while others are not. Albree v. B. & M. R. R. Co., 22 I. C. C. 303, 319.

(l) A tariff is unlawful under the 15th section of the Act which compels a shipper to load his milk into a car leased by another shipper in such a way as to disclose the secrets of his business and which compels him to pay the transportation rate to such other shipper. Albree v. B. & M. R. R. Co., 22 I. C. C. 303, 321.

(m) A rate may be unlawful in view of section 1 and at the same time be the legally established rate under section 6. The sole test of the legality of a rate is the due publication of the rate in the manner and form prescribed by the statute. Crescent Coal & Mining Co. v. C. & E. I. R. R. Co., 24 I. C. C. 149, 156.

(n) When timber is of many kinds, and several kinds of lumber take same rates, there is no impropriety in tariff which permits shipping at carload rates in straight or mixed carloads to and from transit point. National Casket Co. v. S. Ry. Co., 31 I. C. C. 678, 685, 686.

(o) Carriers should not publish rates in one tariff and discounts or allowances from such rates in another tariff . . . . but wherever possible should file net rates as such. Allowances on Anthracite Coal, 36 I. C. C., 164, 170.

(p) A tariff provision which makes the application of rates over particular routes dependent upon the existence of divisions without stating the routes with respect to which divisional arrangements are in effect is indefinite and unlawful and imposes uncertain and unreasonable conditions upon the shipper. McGowin Lumber & Export Co. v. Director General, 59 I. C. C. 238, 240.

(q) The fact that there was no notation or symbol of an increase in a tariff does not affect the validity or applicability of the item. National Preservers & Fruit Products Asso. v. A. & S. Ry., 74 I. C. C., 179, 181.

(r) Commission has frequently drawn distinction between legal rate required under section 6 of the act and lawful rate provided for in other sections. Lay Fish Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 80 I. C. C. 4, 5.

(s) Allegation that carrier has violated section 6 of the act through assessing and collecting without tariff authority switching charges on grain transited at a certain point, predicated upon failure to state in tariff naming transit provisions charges in connection therewith, not sustained. Tariff carrying rates of carrier contains general provision that switching charges at any point will be added to through rate unless provision is made for absorption. This is in accordance with requirements of rule 10 (a) of Tariff Circular 18-A. Detroit Board of Trade v. W. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 717, 723.

§17. State Rates.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Commission has constantly insisted upon the exaction of the lawfully published interstate rates upon all traffic really moving as interstate commerce. Kanotex Refining Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 34 I. C. C. 271, 273.

(b) Shipments moved intrastate during Federal control, and distance rates assessed under tariff stating that it contained all intrastate rates and was only tariff applicable to intrastate movements. Contemporaneously another tariff was in effect, its title page indicating that it applied to intrastate and interstate traffic, and contained lower specific rates unrestricted. HELD: Legality of specific rates published in interstate tariff without restriction can not be affected by provision contained in intrastate tariff under which charges collected. Since rule 10 (g) of Tariff Circular 18-A provides that distance rates may be applied only when no specific rates are in effect, shipments found overcharged and refund directed. Crookston Gas Co. v. G. N. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 128.

(c) Whether an interstate or intrastate tariff is applicable depends on the essential character of the movement, and is not necessarily determined by the contract between shipper and carrier. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Settle, 4 Sup. Ct. 28.

(a) Complainant atacked rates on household goods from Hammond, La., to Chicago, Illinois. A shipper was charged under a special tariff $60.00 per car from Chicago, Ill., to Hammond, La., distance 863 miles, and on the return move was charged $122 under the general tariff. The service and transportation conditions were the same, but the tariff naming the south bound rate was unlawful in that it named a special rate for certain classes without taking into account the general public. Complaint dismissed. Elvey v. I. C. R. R., 2 I. C. C. 804.

(b) Under the conditions now governing the manufacture and use of the "Scheidel outfit," such outfit is properly classified by defendant with the x-ray and medical or scientific apparatus as double first class, and is not entitled to a first-class rating with dynamos, transformers, and other electrical machinery; but no opinion is expressed upon the justice of the first class rate for such machinery. W. Scheidel & Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 532.

(c) The tariff of the Southern Pacific Company on traffic westbound to San Francisco contains a schedule of transportation rates imposed upon such traffic, and by a note in such tariff headed "Toll at San Francisco, Cal.," an additional charge of 5 cents per ton is levied upon such traffic reaching San Francisco by both the Ogden and the Coast Line routes: HELD: 1. That traffic moving by the Coast Line is not subject to the payment of such charge. Pac-Coast Jobbers & Manfrs'. Asso. v. So. Pac. Co. et al., 12 I. C. C. 320.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) The Commission ought not to impose a charge not specified in tariff where the omission to state such a charge was not due to inadvertence. Lee v. St. L. S. W. Ry Co., 29 I. C. C. 101, 102.

(e) Not infrequently shipments are reconsigned on basis of the sum of the local rates without violating tariffs where no specific through rates is in effect. Doran & Co. v. N. C. & St. L. Ry., 33 I. C. C. 523, 527.

(f) An unsuspended tariff item modifying a suspended item and published under special permission from the Commission takes effect on its lawfully proposed effective date, provided that the existing rates from and to the same points are properly cancelled. Oklahoma Traffic Asso. v. A. & S. Ry., 36 I. C. C., 329, 332.

(g) The consequences of a practice in particular cases can not determine the rate legally applicable. Marquette Coal Co. v. P. R. R., 40 I. C. C. 4, 6.

(h) Official classification provided in substance that when parts or pieces constituting one or more complete articles are shipped under one bill of lading at one time, by one shipper, to one consignee and destination, they should be charged for at the rate provided for the complete article, and a statue which constituted a minor but essential part of a monument should have taken the rating provided for the monument. Moore Granite & Monumental Works v. I. C. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C. 77, 79.

(i) Where a producing point is located upon the boundary line between territories, the proper scale or scales to apply depends upon the direction of the movement. In such cases the producing point shall be considered to be in that territory within which the point of destination is located, except that, if the point of destination is not in either of the territories whose common boundary passes through the producing point, then the producing point shall be considered to be within the territory which is bounded by such common boundary line lying nearest to the point of destination. A similar rule, mutatis mutandis, will be applied to destinations located upon boundary lines. Western Cement Rates, 48 I. C. C. 201, 248.

(j) If the tariffs do not provide the rates on a shipment from one classification territory to another, charges should be computed at the ratings published in the classifications for the movement within their respective territories. Holt, et al., as Receivers of Aetna Explosives Co. v. Alabama Great Southern R. R. Co., 52 I. C. C. 235, 238.

(k) If no specific rate from a point of origin to a point of destination of a through shipment is provided, and no specific manner of constructing the combination rate is prescribed, the lowest combination of rates applicable via the route over which the shipment moves is the lawful rate for that shipment. Holt, et al., as Receivers of Aetna Explosives Co. v. Alabama Great Southern R. R. Co., 52 I. C. C. 235, 238.

(l) A rate once lawfully established continues to be the legal rate until legally canceled. Subsequent tariff naming new rates without cancelling previous rate can not carry new rates into lawful effect. Dewey Portland Cement Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry., 56 I. C. C. 444, 445.

(m) Where a tariff naming a lower rate applying in connection with a delivering line specifically excepts shipments forwarded via the rails of said lines so specifically excepted. American Cement Plaster Co. v. C. & A. R. R. Co., 59 I. C. C. 165, 166.

(n) While a tariff naming the commodity rate did not define scrap iron, rates on scrap iron are understood generally to apply on scraps or pieces of iron or steel having value for remelting purposes only, and the western classification, which governed the tariff naming the rate on scrap iron, carried a note to that effect. Schwartz v. T. & N. O., 61 I. C. C. 29, 31.

(o) The legal rate is the rate in effect on date shipments are accepted for transportation. Transcontinental Freight Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 62 I. C. C. 127, 128.

(p) A point was formerly reached by a narrow gauge line over which an out-of line charge was established. Subsequently the line was made standard gauge and became part of the main line rendering the out-of-line haul unnecessary, but the charge for the extra service was not eliminated from the tariff until after shipments moved. The Commission held charges assessed for the unperformed out-of-line movement found illegal. Reparation awarded. Grayson Owen Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 64 I. C. C. 157.

(q) Contention that a lower rate remained in effect because new tariff carried a note that "This tariff contains no changes in rates from those published effective June 25, 1918," and because item naming the increased rate did not bear a symbol indicating an increase over the previous rate as required by Tariff Circular 18-A, not sustained. Tariff publishing the increased rate and cancelling the previous tariff conformed to the essential requirements of the act and was lawfully on file with the Commission. Hercules Mining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C., 140, 141.

(r) Rates named in a tariff published after the issuance of general order No. 28 of the Director General, but not to become effective until after the effective date of that order, found subject to the increase of 25 per cent provided thereunder. Growers Rice Milling Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 165.

(s) An applicable tariff provided for the application to intermediate points of rates from or to the next more distant station when rates are not specially published, subject to the general proviso, "Except as may be otherwise specifically provided in the tariff." HELD: The publication of a "rate basis" to the intermediate points without corresponding "rates" on specific commodities did not operate to make inapplicable the intermediate clause. Shipments found overcharged and refund directed. Standard Oil Co. v. Director General, as Agent 66 I. C. C. 472.

(t) Higher charges published in separate tariffs found applicable to shipments moving outbound from transit point, and the publication by the inbound carrier of a tariff naming lower charges without the concurrence of its connections found to be a direct contravention of the Commission's rules under section 6 of the act, and shipper is justified in relying upon the lower basis of rates thus offered. Reparation awarded. Brenner Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 595.

(u) Higher rate published in the same tariff from intermediate than from farther distant point: Rate from farther distant point published subject to Rule 77 of Tariff Circular 18-A. HELD: Higher rate from intermediate point legally applicable but publication of lower rate from farther distant point subject to rule 77 was in violation of the fourth section of the act and tantamount to an admission that the higher rate from the intermediate point was unreasonable. Reparation awarded. Standard Asphalt & Refining Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 66 I. C. C. 611.

(ua) What the second Cummins amendment declares to be unlawful it also declares to be void. It does not declare any rate to be void. A void rate would be without legal effect and could not be legally applicable. U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 389, 392.

(ub) There can not be at the same time rates legally applicable and other rates "technically" legally applicable. There can be but one applicable rate at the same time over the same route between the same points on the same traffic. U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co. v. Director General, 68 I. C. C. 389, 392.

(uc) In publishing tariffs carrier failed to show as clearly as it should have done that a switching rate superseded a group rate formerly in effect. Contention that switching charge was not legally established because item in which that charge was published did not specifically refer to and cancel the line-haul rate, and the tariff naming that rate was not at the same time correspondingly amended in accordance with the provisions of rule 8 (a) of Tariff Circular 18-A, and that shipments were undercharged not sustained. Louis Werner Stave Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 68 I. C. C. 395, 396, 398.

(v) Different rates on "peanut hulls" and "ground peanut hulls" published in the same tariff. Shipments of hulls rolled under high pressure to effect compactness for shipment, as well as to reduce them to smaller particles, found to consist of "peanut hulls", as the term when used in a tariff must be construed to apply to the commodity prepared in a practical manner for transportation. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Rothschild Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 37 I. C. C. 126.

(w) Shippers were required to bill fresh-meat bones as fresh meat, and rates applicable on fresh meat were assessed in some instances under an analogous-article rule of the governing classification. Governing tariffs specifically provided rates on "bones" and "bones, n. o. i. b. n."on a lower basis. HELD, rates charged found illegal and shipments found overcharged. Reparation awarded. Morris & Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C. 137.

(x) A joint agency tariff, to which the Southern Ry. is a party, names rates on berries, without restriction as to kind. A later tariff of the Southern's own issue names rates between the same points on strawberries, in crates of sizes the same as and additional to those provided for in the agency tariff, which has never been specifically cancelled. HELD, that as to crates of sizes common to both tariffs the rates in the later tariff were not legally established; and as to crates of sizes provided for only by the later tariff, as to which there is no conflict, the rates in the later tariff were legally established. Strawberries from Virginia Points to Eastern Destinations, 73 I. C. C., 365.

(y) Under the provisions of section 6 of the act requiring the observance of rates and charges lawfully published and filed, the rate in effect at the beginning of a transit movement must be applied on a shipment to final destination. Nonsurrender of Inbound Billing, 73 I. C. C., 455, 457.

(z) Contention that joint rates were inapplicable because in contravention of the fourth section; and that the increase authorized by General Order No. 28 of the director general should have been applied but once to the combinations alleged to be applicable. HELD, argument contrary to the commission's construction of the fourth section and the view repeatedly expressed that the lawfulness of rates can not be determined solely by a construction of the general order. Silica Sand Producers' Asso. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 588, 589.

(aa) Old worn-out log-car wheels were originally billed as scrap iron, but subsequently changed by carrier's agent to second-hand car wheels because they had not been broken up as required by a provision in the tariff. Southern classification rating of sixth class was assessed. Contemporaneously lower commodity rate in effect on "scrap iron and scrap steel, all kinds (except old rails suitable for relaying purposes)." HELD, commodity description sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include scrap iron both in its original form and when broken up. Commodity rate on scrap iron found legally applicable and shipments over-charged. Reparation awarded. Queen City Iron & Metal Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 618.

(bb) Horses and mules moved by express to Goshen, N. Y., where no attempt was made to preserve their identity. Subsequently a portion thereof was forwarded to Jersey City, N. J., for export, for which carrier assessed rate from Goshen, plus terminal charges. Contention that under the terms of the tariff such terminal charges should have been absorbed. HELD, inbound and outbound movements were wholly independent transactions. Rate assessed for movement from Goshen found applicable and absorption of terminal charges was not authorized in connection therewith. Le Prestre, Miller & Co. v. E. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 621.

(cc) First-class ratings and rates assessed on a shipment of accessories and parts comprising parts of motor trucks and chassis previously shipped from Chicago, Ill., to Austin, Tex., found legally applicable. Such shipment found not to consist of bodies or chassis, k. d., upon which ratings of third and second class applied. Had such articles been included in cars with the motor trucks or chassis, the rating on the latter would have been applied on the parts on basis of actual weight. State Highway Dept. of Tex. v. Director General, as Agent, 73 I. C. C., 629.

(dd) Complainant attacked rates charged on carloads of petroleum and petroleum products from and to various points in the southwest during the period. August 1, 1918, to Feb. 29, 1920, as illegal on the ground of tariff interpretation. Rates on petroleum were increased 25 per cent on June 25, 1918, under G. O. 28 and on July 11, 1918 freight rate authority No. 96 provided for an increase of 4.5 cents, this increase to apply but once where the charges were based on combinations. There were no joint rates in effect and the 4.5 cents increase was added to each factor which was subsequently corrected. HELD, rates applicable were those in effect June 25, 1918, plus 4.5 cents per 100 pounds, shipments overcharged, reparation awarded. Standard Oil Co. v. Director General, 74 I. C. C., 188.

(ee) Contention that a revised clause was improperly published and not lawfully effective because the notation in the tariff to indicate a change of rate was either incorrectly shown or else entirely omitted, in violation of the commission's rules in Tariff Circular 18-A, HELD: Fact that there was no notation or symbol of an increase in the supplement . . . did not effect the validity or applicability of the item. Nat'l Preserveers & Fruit Products Asso. v. A. & S. Ry. Co., 74 I. C. C. 179, 181.

(ff) Where tariff of participating carrier provided lower rate between specified points over route other than route of movement, and unrestricted in its application to any particular route, such lower rate is applicable over all routes of carrier. Shipments found overcharged and reparation awarded. Baker-Reid Lumber Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 74 I. C. C. 489.

(gg) The term "scrap brass" is generally understood to mean pieces of brass or old brass articles useful only for remelting purposes. Western Cartridge Co. v. Director General, as Agent 74 I. C. C. 654, 655.

(hh) When the description of commodity given by shipper and the rating applied by carrier's inspector are in conflict, the disposition of the commodity may properly be considered, but such evidence is not controlling, particularly when shipments clearly come within the description contained in applicable tariffs. Western Cartridge Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 654, 655.

(ii) Tariff provided that commodity rates on bulk shipments should be computed not to exceed the applicable class rates, and to that extent shipments of apples in bulk, from Mosier, Oreg., to Louisville, Ky., found overcharged and reparation awarded. Holmes v. Director General, as Agent, 74 I. C. C. 668.

(jj) The Commission has frequently drawn the distinction between the legal rate required under section 6 of the act, and the lawful rate provided for in other sections. Lay Fish Co. v. Director General, 80 I. C. C. 4, 5.

(kk) Where certain grades of a commodity made and sold for common grades are not merely by-products of the production of higher grades, and otherwise fully conform to description and loading requirements of common grades, incidental final use, by purchaser, of a selected few thereof for better purposes should not be regarded as affecting their essential character for rate-making purposes, although exclusive or predominant use of grades for a given purpose is a circumstance to be considered, with other facts, in determining proper description to be applied. National Paving-Brick Mfrs. Asso. v. A. & Y. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 179, 183.

(ll) Allegation that carrier has violated section 6 of the act through assessing and collecting without tariff authority switching charges on grain transited at a certain point, predicated upon failure to state in tariff naming transit provisions charges in connection therewith, not sustained. Tariff carrying rates of carrier contains general provision that switching charges at any point will be added to through rate unless provision is made for absorption. This is in accordance with requirements of rule 10 (a) of Tariff Circular 18-A. Detroit Board of Trade v. W. Ry. Co., 80 I. C. C. 717, 723.

(mm) Commodity rates were in effect on packing-house products, but exceptions to classification provided that in applying increases under General Order No. 28 of director general "the increased class rates applicable to like commodity descriptions . . . are not to be exceeded." Contention by defendants that, because not all commodities named in item "packing-house products" in commodity tariff appeared in similar item in classification exceptions, the "commodity descriptions" were not "like," within meaning of rule above quoted, and that class rates applied to specifically named packing-house products were inapplicable, not sustained. Fact that certain articles were listed in one tariff and not in the other does not deprive articles listed and described alike in both of benefit of rule. Findings in former report, 61 I. C. C., 153, reversed. Morrell & Co. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 200, 202, 203.

(nn) Complainant purchased new brass cartridge cases and new cartridge-brass disks from United States Salvage boards, for remelting purposes; having agreed under oath that material would be remelted while in its possession and would not be used for any purpose or sold until remelted. Contention that "cartridge shell" and "brass blanks" rates assessed were inapplicable and that charges should have been assessed at scrap brass rates, not sustained. Character of an article for transportation standpoint, and not use to which parties may contract that it shall be put, determines rate or rating applicable. Chases Companies v. Director General, as Agent 81 I. C. C. 207.

(oo) Rails intended for use in mining operations moved at rate lower than that on "railway track." HELD: Rails were of weight often used on short-line railroads, and higher "railway track" rate was applicable. The commission has repeatedly refused to sanction different rate on same commodity based on use to which article is put. Mid-Continent Equip. & Mach. Co. v. M. & O. R. R. Co., 81 I. C. C. 510.

(pp) Shipment consigned "Madry Siding, N. C.," transported by carrier through Madrys Spur, N. C., to point on same branch, where demurrage accrued while consignor gave further disposition orders, and further charge assessed for back haul to Madrys Spur. Madry Siding was not listed in tariffs. HELD: Terms "spur" and "siding" used interchangeably by defendant, whose agents considered Madry Siding and Madrys Spur as one and same point. Shipment should have moved under billing accepted by defendant, and was overcharged to extent total charges assessed exceeded rate to Madrys Spur. Reparation awarded. Webb Fuel Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 81 I. C. C. 631.

(qq) As used in a tariff as to lumber dressed and planed in transit at C., Miss, an intermediate point, into which charges at the local rate are paid, and reshipped and rebilled at a through rate from point of origin, providing that, "The agent will then refund reshipper charges into C., Miss., less 2 cents per 100 pounds, with minimum of $6 per car based on the rebilled weight," the word "charges" refers to the total amount charged the reshipper and paid by him for carriage into such place, and does not refer to the charges into it for the carriage of the rebilled lumber, and this construction would not make the tariff illegal as requiring the carrier to transport the lumber to the intermediate point without collecting its published tariff for such transportation. Southern Ry. Co. v. Berthold & Jennings Lumber Co., (Mo. 1923), 247 S. W. 219.

(rr) The freight rates on carload lots of redwood coffin stock, planed and cut to size and shape, shipped from Santa Clara, Calif., to Minneapolis, Minn., in October, 1919 was 90 cents per hundred under the published tariffs then in force. Minnesota-Koll Casket Co. v. Payne, (Minn. 1922), 188 N. W. 560.

(ss) In the absence of a joint through rate, the lawful rate would have been a combination rate; and it was not necessary, in publishing a joint through rate to cancel or refer to the several factors which would have been applied in the absence of a joint through rate. Bartlett Co. v. C. P. & St. L. Ry. Co., Unrep. Op. A-203.

(tt) A connecting carrier is bound to know that the lower of two conflicting rates is the legal rate, and to apply such rate. Dreyfuss v. Penn. R. Co., 153 N. Y. Supp., 966, 968.

(uu) Where a carrier has published conflicting rates effective contemporaneously in the same tariff, the shipper is entitled to the lower of these rates. Dreyfuss v. Penn. R. Co. 153 N. Y. S., 966, 968.

(vv) Unquestionably the schedule of transportation rates filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, posted and published in conformity with the statute, together with the waybill and the fact that the shipment was made, constitute a contract. It is an agreement to perform a certain amount of service for a definite compensation. Any change therein after the transportation begins, without the consent of both parties, would be unjust. With respect to such contracts the Interstate Commerce Commission has repeatedly said that changes in the schedule of rates will not be permited to retroact on freight movements commenced before the change was made. The contract was entire and indivisible, so much so that, if through any act of the shipper the shipment was not completed, the carrier was entitled to his full charge; and by issuing the bill of lading the carrier binds itself to deliver the goods at their destination. Horton v. Tonopah & Goldfield 225 Fed. 406, 411.

(ww) A rate filed by a carrier with, and approved by, the Interstate Commerce Commission, constitutes the lawful rate, irrespective of its subsequent publication. Payne, Director General of Railroads, v. Clarke, 271 Fed. 525.

§19. As Evidence.

See Undercharges §4.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) It is declared by the Interstate Commerce Commission, in a ruling on the subject that there is no presumption of law that a freight rate upon particular commodity is reasonably low because such rate has been duly published and filed by the carrier with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Barnes on Interstate Transportation, p. 223; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 206 U. S. 441, 27 Sup. Ct. 700, 51 L. Ed. 1128. But evidently this ruling is not made to allow each independent shipper to bring the rate into question in each case coming up, for that would be to destroy the main feature of the law, the prevention of discrimination. The ruling is made only so the Commission itself may not be bound. J. T. Rather & Co. v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., (Tenn. 1915), 174 S. W., 1113, 1114.

(b) A tariff purporting to have been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and verified by the certificate of a chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission is incompetent for evidence, because the federal statute provides that copies of tariff rates on file with that commission shall be received in evidence, if certified by the secretary, under the seal of the commission. Beaham v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., (Mo. 1915), 174, S. W., 150, 152.

(c) The law imposes upon shippers the duty of ascertaining the rates and conditions under which they ship, and noncompliance with tariff rules affords no basis for a finding that the rate legally applicable is unreasonable or discriminatory. Joyce-Watkins Co. v. Director General, 56 I. C. C. 433, 434.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) It is unnecessary in order to secure uniformity in a construction of interstate tariffs filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, that all questions concerning their construction shall be first presented to the Commission, since the construction of a tariff is a question of law, which may be ultimately reviewed by the United States Supreme Court, if the parties properly preserve their rights. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Merchants Elevator Co., 42 Sup. Ct. 477.

(b) A court has the power to construe a tariff and resort as to its meaning does not first have to be made to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is only when a question of fact is involved that resort should be had to the Commission. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Merchants' Elevator Co., 42 Sup. Ct. 477.

(c) The construction of a railroad tariff on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which the words used in their ordinary meaning, presents a question of law, which can be raised in the courts, without resort being first had to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Merchants' Elevator Co., 42 Sup. Ct. 477.

TAXES

(a) A state tax upon sleeping cars of a company, used in carrying passengers into and out of the State, is void as a regulation of interstate commerce. Indiana v. Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co. (Ind. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 798; S. P. cited in Wabash etc. R. Co. v. People (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 31.

(aa) A statute of a State, intended to regulate or to tax, or to impose any other restriction upon the transmission of persons or property or telegraphic messages from one State to another, is not within that class of legislation which the States may enact in the absence of legislation by Congress; and that such statutes are void even as to that part of such transmission which may be within the State. Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. People 1 I. C. R. 31.

(b) State tax upon earnings of sleeping car company engaged in transporting passengers from one State to another is void. Indiana v. Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co. (Sup. Ct. Ind.) 1 I. C. R. 798; S. P. cited in Wabash, St. Louis & P. R. Co. v. People (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 37.

(c) State tax upon gross receipts of railroads for carriage of freight or passengers into, out of or through State, is void. Fargo v. Stevens (U. S. Sup. Ct. 1 I. C. R. 51.

(d) State tax upon interstate commerce is void. Robbins v. Taxing District of Shelby County, (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 45; Fargo v. Stevens, (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 53; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 307; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 382; Riddle, Dean & Co. v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 1 I. C. R. 779; Indiana v. Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co., (Sup. Ct. Ind.) 1 I. C. R. 800; Re Hennick (Sup. Ct. D. C.) 1 I. C. R. 66, 69.

(e) A state tax upon a steamship company upon gross receipts from transportation between different States, and to and from foreign countries, is unconstitutional. Phila. etc. Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 308.

(f) Goods brought into a State for sale, although they become thereby a part of the mass of its property, cannot be taxed by reason of their introduction into the State or because they are products of another State. Cited in Phila. etc. Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 311.

(g) Freedom of transportation implies exception from charges other than such as are imposed by way of compensation for the use of the property employed, or for facilities afforded for its use, or as ordinary taxes upon the value of the property within the jurisdiction of the State. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Commonwealth of Pa., 1 I. C. R. 382.

(h) Receiving and landing passengers and freight is incident to their transportation. All restraints by exactions in the form of taxes upon such transportation or upon acts necessary to its completion, are invasions of the exclusive power of Congress. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Commonwealth of Pa., 1 I. C. R. 382.

(i) The capital stock of a foreign ferry company engaged in interstate traffic is not taxable by State. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 382.

(j) No State can impose a tax upon that portion of interstate commerce which is involved in the transportation of persons and property, whatever be the instrumentality by which it is carried on. Cited in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 829. S. P. in Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 382.

(k) A state has power to prescribe the terms upon which a foreign corporation may do business within its territory, unless the corporation is engaged in the business of interstate commerce. If it is not engaged in transacting business of that kind, the State may levy a tax upon its receipts within the State, and enforce collection. Indiana v. Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co., 1 I. C. R. 798.

(l) The State has no power to levy a tax upon the earnings of a sleeping car company engaged in the business of transporting passengers from one State to another. The matter of interstate commerce is a national matter with which no State can in any wise interfere. The jurisdiction of the Federal Government absolutely excludes the State from directly or indirectly hampering or taxing the commerce between States. The statute attempting to authorize it is itself without force. That it restricts the amount of the tax to be paid by the corporation to the distance which passengers are carried through this State does not relieve it of the objection; for the tax it assumes to levy is upon interstate commerce, and not upon the internal commerce of the State. The tax cannot be sustained upon the ground that the carrier can be compelled to pay a tax upon its gross earnings for the privilege of doing a local business in the State. Indiana v. Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co., 1 I. C. R. 798.

(m) Tax of fares is tax on passengers. State of Indiana v. Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co. (Sup. Ct. Ind.) 1 I. C. R. 800.

(n) It makes no difference whether such commerce is carried on by individuals or corporations. State of Indiana v. Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co. (Sup. Ct. Ind.) 1 I. C. R. 801.

(o) A state tax upon interstate commerce is void. Re Hennick (Sup. Ct. D. C.) 1 I. C. R. 66 S. P. cited in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct. 1 I. C. R. 830.

(p) A state law imposing such tax is not cured by including in its provisions subjects within jurisdiction of State. Phila. etc. Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 308; Re Hennick (Sup. Ct. D. C.) 1 I. C. R. 70 S. P. cited in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 834.

(q) Lines wholly within state; "common control, management or arrangement for continuous carriage;" Interstate Commerce Act, §1; English Regulation of Railways Act of 1873, §11. Appendix IV, note, 1 I. C. R. 858.

(r) A single tax assessed, under the statute of Ohio, upon the receipts of a telegraph company which were derived partly from interstate commerce and partly from commerce within the State, but which were returned and assessed in gross and without separation or apportionment, is not wholly invalid, but is invalid only in proportion to the extent that such receipts were derived from interstate commerce. Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 59.

(s) The collection of the taxes on that portion of the receipts derived from interstate commerce should be enjoined, and the treasurer should be permitted to collect the other tax upon property of the company and upon the receipt derived from commerce entirely within the limits of the State. Ratterman v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 2 I. C. R. 59.

(t) Where the subjects of taxation can be separated, so that that which arises from interstate commerce can be distinguished from that which arises from commerce wholly within the State, the tax on interstate commerce will be restrained while permitting the State to collect that upon commerce wholly within its own territory. Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (U. S. Sup Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 59.

(u) The property of a telegraph company, situated within a State, may be taxed by the State as all other property is taxed; but its business of an interstate character cannot be thus taxed. Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 2 I. C. R. 134.

(v) The Western Union Telegraph Company established an office in the city of Mobile, Alabama, and was required to pay a license tax under a city ordinance which imposed an annual license tax of $225 on all telegraph companies, and the agent of the company was fined for the nonpayment of this tax. In an action to recover the fine he pleaded the character and nature of occupation of the company, and its acceptance of the Act of Congress of July 24, 1866, and the fact that its business consisted in transmitting messages to all parts of the United States, as well as in Alabama. HELD, a good defense. Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 2 I. C. R. 134.

(w) A general license tax on a telegraph company doing business in different States affects its entire business, interstate as well as domestic, and is unconstitutional. Leloup v. Port of Mobile (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 134.

(x) Franchises conferred by Congress cannot, without its permission, be taxed by the State. California v. Central P. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 153.

(y) An assessment, by the State Board of Equalization of California, of all the franchises of a railroad company, including franchises conferred by the United States for constructing a railroad from the Pacific Ocean across the State as well as across the Territories of the United States, and of taking toll thereon,—is repugnant to the commercial clause of the United States Constitution. California v. Central P. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 153.

(z) An assessment of the steamers of a railroad company by the State Board of Equalization in California is in violation of the Constitution and void, and, being inseparably blended with the other property assessed, the whole assessment is void. California v. Central P. R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 153.

(aa) The State Board of Equalization of California having included in their assessment all the franchises of a railroad company, amongst which were franchises, conferred by the United States, of constructing a railroad from the Pacific Ocean across the State as well as across the Territories of the United States, and of taking toll thereon,—HELD, that the assessment of these franchises were repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States and the power given to Congress to regulate commerce among the several States. California v. Central Pacific R. R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 153.

(bb) By the Constitution of California two modes of assessment for taxation are prescribed; one, by a State Board of Equalization; the other, by county boards and local assessors. All property is directed to be assessed in the county, city, etc., in which it is situated, except that the franchise, roadway, roadbed, rails, and rolling stock of any railroad operated in more than one county are to be assessed by the state board and apportioned to the several counties, etc. By an Act of the Legislature the state board is required to include in their assessment steamers engaged in transporting passengers and freights across waters which divide a railroad. This Act was held by the Supreme Court of California, in San Francisco v. Central Pac. R. R. Co. 63 Cal. 469, to be contrary to the Constitution; and steamboats were held to be assessable by the county board, and not by the state board. This court, following that decision and that of Santa Clare County v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394 (30:118), HOLDS that the assessment of the steamers of a railroad company by the state board is in violation of the Constitution of California, and void, and, being inseparably blended with the other property assessed, it makes the whole assessment void. California v. Cent. Pac. R. R. Co. 2 I. C. R. 153.

(cc) Exemptions from taxation, being exceptions to the rule of taxation, are strictly construed. Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Lesueur (Ariz.) 2 I. C. R. 189.

(ee) The exemption of a right of way from taxation does not exempt the superstructure, i. e., a railway, thereon. Atlantic & Pacific R. Co., v. Lesueur, 2 I. C. R. 189.

(ff) Exemption from taxation is the exception to the rule of taxation, and can be sustained only from the strictest construction. Atlantic & Pacific R. Co. v. Lesueur, 2 I. C. R. 189.

(gg) Taxation of the franchise of a ralway granted by Act of Congress, by the Territories, does not conflict with the commercial clause of the United States Constitution. Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Lesueur (Ariz.) 2 I. C. R. 189.

(hh) The taxation, by a Territory, of the franchise of a corporation incorporated by Act of Congress, is not unconstitutional as the taxation of a federal agency, in the absence of such restriction in the grant of the taxing power to the Territory, as Congress may permit the Territory to do so. Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Lesueur (Ariz.) 2 I. C. R. 189.

(ii) For the purpose of taxation, the situs of the rolling stock of a railway company is where it is habitually used. If the specified property be constantly changing, the amount may be fixed by the average amount so used. Atlantic & Pacific R. Co. v. Lesueur. 2 I. C. R. 189.

(jj) Nor is the taxation by a Territory of the franchise of a corporation incorporated by Act of Congress unconstitutional, as the taxation of a federal agency, in the absence of such restriction in the grant of the taxing power to the Territory, as Congress may permit the Territory to do so. Atlantic & Pacific R. Co. v. Lesueur, 2 I. C. R. 189.

(kk) The situs of the rolling-stock of a railroad company for the purpose of taxation is where it is habitually used; and if the specified property be constantly changing, the amount may be fixed by the average amount so used. Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Lesueur (Ariz.) 2 I. C. R. 189.

(ll) Taxation of the franchise of a railway granted by Act of Congress, by the Territories, is not in conflict with the constitutional grant to Congress of the power to regulate commerce among the several States. Atlantic & Pacific R. Co. v. Lesueur, 2 I. C. R. 189.

(mm) The situs, for taxation, of unregistered vessels (including dredges and scows) engaged in interstate commerce, is the State of the domicil of their owner, although they may never have been within that State,—in the absence of anything to show that they are so permanently located in another State as to be liable to taxation there. Com. v. Amer. Dredg Co. (Pa.) 2 I. C. R. 221.

(nn) The situs, for taxation, of tangible personal property temporarily in another State, but not permanently located there, is the State of the domicil of the owner. Com. v. American Dredging Co. (Pa.) 2 I. C. R. 221.

(oopp) The situs, for purposes of taxation, of tangible personal property, temporarily in another State but not permanently located there, is the State of the domicil of the owner. Commonwealth v. Amer. Dredg. Co., 2 I. C. R. 221.

(qq) The tax upon railroad gross receipts from transportation, etc., prescribed by Pa. Act 1879, §7 (P. L. 116), if valid in other respects, cannot be evaded by the fact that the railroad company is a foreign corporation and has sent such receipts to its home office, so that they are not physically within Pennsylvania. Delaware & H. C. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 2 I. C. R. 222.

(rr) Such statute is valid, however, as to all receipts derived from commerce wholly confined within the limits of the State; and this, although the company doing the business is a foreign corporation. Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Commonwealth, 2 I. C. R. 222.

(ss) Philadelphia & Reading R. Co. v. Com.—82 U. S. 15 Wall, 284 (21 L. ed. 164), has been in effect overruled by Fargo v. Michigan, 121 U. S. 230 (30 L. ed. 888) and Phila. & Southern M. S. S. Co. v. Com. 122 U. S. 326 (31 L. ed. 1200). Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Commonwealth, 2 I. C. R. 222.

Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Commonwealth, 2 I. C. R. 222.

(uu) Section 7 of the Pennsylvania Act of June 7, 1879, imposing a tax upon the gross receipts of railroad companies from transportation, etc., is valid in respect to receipts from business between points both of which are in Pennsylvania. Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Commonwealth, 2 I. C. R. 222.

(vv) A state statute which attempts to tax the gross receipts of transportation companies derived from tolls and and transportation, telegraph business, or express business," is not valid, so far as such receipts are derived from commerce between points within and points without the state. Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Commonwealth, 2 I. C. R. 22.

(ww) The gross receipts of railroad companies from transportation between points within the State are taxable under section 7 of the Pennsylvania Act of June 7, 1879 (P. L. 116); but receipts from interstate transportation are not taxable thereunder. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 2 I. C. R. 226.

(xx) A state statute taxing gross receipts of transportation companies derived "from tolls and transportation," telegraph business or express business, is not valid, so far as the receipts are derived from commerce between points within and points without the State, but passing through the state on its way. Delaware & H. C. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 2 I. C. R. 222; Northern P. R. Co. v. Raymond (Dak.) 2 I. C. R. 321.

(yy) The payment of the whole of the annual tax on gross earnings of a railroad company on the date upon which, under the Dakota Act of March 9, 1883, only the first installment thereon had become due, is a valid payment and a satisfaction of the whole tax for the year, and not merely of the first installment. Northern P. R. Co. v. Raymond (Dak.) 2 I. C. R. 321.

(zz) The Dakota Act of March 9, 1883, providing for a tax or a per centum in lieu thereof on the gross earnings of a railroad company is unconstitutional so far as the earnings are derived from interstate transportation. Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Raymond, 2 I C. R. 321.

(3a) An ordinance levying a tax of $50 on every railroad running through the corporate limits does not violate the principle of uniformity of taxation. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Reidsville (N. C.) 2 I. C. R. 416.

(3b) A municipal ordinance levying a tax of $50 upon every railroad running through the corporate limits, whether it be called a privilege tax or by some other name, being a tax imposed upon business in the town, if authorized by the State law, is not void as a tax on interstate commerce. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Reidsville (N. C.) 2 I. C. R. 416.

(3c) But such taxes may be levied upon all messages carried and delivered exclusively within the State. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Seay (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 726.

(3d) Where a state court decided that a state law taxing telegraph companies authorized and imposed a tax upon receipts derived by them from messages from or to other States, and sustained a state tax thereon under such law, this court has jurisdiction to review such decision. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Seay, 2 I. C. R. 726.

(3e) The city of Philadelphia is not authorized to tax a telegraph company occupying its streets, and could not, even if authorized, tax a company engaged in interstate commerce. Philadelphia v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (C. C. E. D. Pa.), 2 I. C. R. 728.

(3f) A company formed and doing business within the State of New Jersey, which was organized by a number of individuals signing articles of agreement by which the concern was described as a "joint-stock company," and which provided for continuance a certain number of years, for a capital stock divided into shares, represented by certificates or script and assignable in the usual manner; which provided, further, that the business should be managed by a board of directors; that suits should be brought in the name of the president, and all deeds should run to and be made by him; and that the death of members less than a majority of the interest of the whole should not dissolve the company,—is either a "corporation, joint-stock company, or association," within the provisions of N. Y. Laws 1880, chap. 542, which provides for the taxation of such concerns, and is therefore liable to taxation under that Act, although the articles of agreement contain no reference to any statute under which the company was organized, and the statute provided for such organizations was not in fact passed until after the agreement was prepared. People, Platt v. Wemple (N. Y.) 2 I. C. R., 735.

(3g) A tax upon the corporate franchise or business of express companies organized or doing business within the State, to be computed upon their capital stock or its valuation, is neither in form nor in substance obnoxious to the Federal Constitution, as interfering with commerce. People, Platt, v. Wemple (N. Y.) 2 I. C. R. 735.

(3h) The word "incorporated," as used in Laws 1880, §3, amended by Laws 1881, chap. 380, providing that every company incorporated under any laws of this State shall be subject to a certain tax, is not to be confined to an association brought into being according to the formality of a statute, but as including any combination of individuals upon terms which embody or adopt as rules or regulations the enabling provisions of the Statute. People, ex rel, Platt, v. Wemple, 2 I. C. R. 735.

(3i) An ordinance requiring a license tax from peddlers, and declaring that all persons selling goods from house to house by retail from samples or otherwise shall be deemed peddlers, is, so far as relates to sales by sample made for residents of other States void as a regulation of commerce in violation of the Constitution of the United States. Re. Kimmel, 3 I. C. R. 114.

(3j) Rolling-stock of a nonresident railroad company, used in interstate commerce, is not subject to taxation in a State where it is operating a leased railroad. Bain v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (N. C.) 3 I. C. R. 149.

Lyng v. People of the State of Michigan, 3 I. C. R. 143.

(3k) A State cannot, under the guise of a license tax, exclude from its jurisdiction a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce, nor impose any burdens upon such commerce within its limits. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Pa., 3 I. C. R. 178.

(3l) A license tax assessed under the Pennsylvania Act of June 7, 1879 (P. L. 112, 120), by the auditor-general of the State against such company for keeping an office in Philadelphia for the use of its officers, stockholders, agents and employes, is a tax upon the company's business of interstate commerce, and is a violation of the commercial clause of the Constitution of the United States. Norfolk & Western R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Pa., 3 I. C. R. 178.

(3m) An agent in San Francisco, California, of a railroad corporation having its principal place of business in Chicago and operating a continuous line of road between Chicago and New York, whose duty it was to solicit passenger traffic over such road, cannot be convicted of a misdemeanor for not paying the license tax required by Order 1589 of the City and County of San Francisco, imposing municipal licenses. McCall v. People of State of Cal., 3 I. C. R. 181.

(3n) Such order, so far as it affects such agent, imposes a tax on interstate commerce and is therefore repugnant to clause 3, of sec. 8, art. I., known as the "commerce clause" of the United State Constitution. McCall v. People of State of Cal., 3 I. C. R. 181.

(3o) A statute requiring the payment of a license fee for the privilege of purchasing certain kinds of produce in a certain county, to be shipped out of it, which fee is greater in the case of nonresidents of the county than of residents, is not obnoxious to U. S. Const., art. 4, §2, entitling citizens of each State to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several States. Rothermel v. Meyerle, 3 I. C. R. 315.

(3p) Although a statute imposing a license fee for the privilge of buying certain produce in a particular county to be shipped out of it may be void as an interference with interstate commerce so far as it applies to produce purchased to be shipped out of the State, it is valid in its application to produce intended for shipment to places within the State. Rothermel v. Meyerle, 3 I. C. R. 315.

(3q) The exaction of a license fee for the privilege of purchasing goods to be shipped to another State is not unconstitutional as a tax upon interstate commerce, since at most it is simply a tax on the goods at the time of their purchase, at which time they are subject to state taxation, and so remain until the business of transportation has actually commenced. Rothermel v. Meyerle, 3 I. C. R. 315.

(3r) A notice by the lessor of a railroad to its lessee, not to pay certain taxes because of their invalidity which have been assessed under state laws requiring the lessee under heavy penalties to pay the taxes and deduct them from the rent due, will not entitle the lessor to recover their amount from the lessee in case they are paid and are afterwards adjudged invalid, if it made no offer to idemnify the lessee against liability and under the decisions as they then stood the taxes were lawful. Vermont & C. R. Co. v. Vermont C. R. Co. (Vt.) 3 I. C. R. 488.

(3s) Taxes assessed upon the gross earnings of a railroad are taxes upon the property of such road, within the rule which requires the lessor, and not the lessee, to pay such taxes,—especially where the rent to be paid is a certain proportion of the gross earnings, and the tax law directs the lessee to pay the tax and deduct it from rent due the lessor. Vermont & C. R. Co. v. Vermont C. R. Co. (Vt.) 3 I. C. R. 488.

(3t) Where the lessee of a railroad is compelled to pay taxes assessed against the lessor, the law implies a request on the part of the lessor for the making of such payment; and the lessee may maintain an action to recover the amount from the lessor, or may deduct the amount from the rent due. Vermont & C. R. Co. v. Vermont C. R. Co. (Vt.) 3 I. C. R. 488.

(3u) Since a state tax on the gross receipts of railroad companies was held valid prior to the decision in Philadelphia & S. M. S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, the lessee of a railroad cannot be compelled to make good to the lessor the amount which before that decision, in obedience to a state law, it deducted from the portion of such receipts belonging to the lessor and paid to the State as taxes, even though a part of such receipts came from interstate commerce and were therefore not taxable under that decision. Vermont & C. R. Co. v. Vermont C. R. Co. (Vt.) 3. I. C. R. 488.

(3v) A state law which seeks to tax the earnings derived by railroads from interstate commerce is unconstitutional. Vermont & C. R. Co. v. Vermont C R. Co. (Vt.) 3 I. C. R. 488.

(3w) A law which requires the lessee of a railroad to deduct the taxes levied on the road from the rent stipulated to be paid under the lease, and pay the same to the State, is not void, even with reference to existing leases, as impairing the obligation of a contract, where both lessor and lessee and the rent due are proper subjects for taxation. Vermont & C. R. Co. v. Vermont C. R. Co. (Vt.) 3 I. C. R. 488.

(3x) Taxes assessed upon the gross earnings of a railroad are taxes upon the property of such road within the rule which requires the lessor, and not the lessee, to pay such taxes, especially where the rent to be paid is a certain proportion of the gross earnings and the tax law directs the lessee to pay the tax and deduct it from rent due the lessor. Vt. & Canada R. Co. v. Vt. Central R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 488.

(3y) The amount of the annual license tax is not the amount in controversy in a suit to restrain the enforcement of the tax, so as to defeat the jurisdiction of a federal court, where complainant asks to be relieved from threatened penalties, and alleges that if the injunction is not granted its business will be entirely destroyed, and it will be damaged in a sum exceeding $2,000, and that goods in excess of that sum will be seized. American Fertilizing Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agriculture (C. C. E. D. N. C.) 3 I. C. R. 532.

(3z) The Alabama Statute imposing a license tax on itinerant dealers, etc., so far as it applies to a foreign traveling agent, who goes from house to house and sells goods by sample for a non-resident, is an attempted regulation of interstate commerce, and unconstitutional. Murray, 3 I. C. R. 574.

(4a) For the purposes of taxation, personal property may be separated from its owner, and he may be taxed, on its account, at the place where it is, although not the place of his own domicil. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Com. (U. S. Sup Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 575.

(4b) Taking, as a basis of assessment, such proportion of the capital stock of the company as the number of miles over which it ran cars within the State bore to the whole number of miles, in that and other States, over which its cars were run, was just and equitable method of assessment. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 575.

(4c) Where the cars of a company within a State are employed in interstate commerce, their being so employed does not exempt them from taxation by the State. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 595.

(4d) There is nothing in the Constitution or laws of the United States which prevents a State from taxing personal property within its jurisdiction, employed in interstate or foreign commerce. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 595.

(4e) A tax, not upon the property employed in the business of interstate commerce, but upon the right to carry on the business at all, imposes a direct burden upon the commerce itself. Pullman's Palace Car Co., v. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 595.

(4f) A tax on the capital of a corporation, on account of its property within the State, is in substance and effect a tax on that property. Pullman's Palace Car Co., v. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 595.

(4gh) As to whether a tax is in accordance with a law of a State, the decision of the highest court of a State is conclusive. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Com. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 595.

(4ij) Ships or vessels can be taxed only at their legal situs, their home port and the domicil of their owners. Pullman's Palace Car v. Commonwealth of Pa., 3 I. C. R. 595.

(4k) An ordinance requiring a license tax from persons who solicit orders for books in behalf of a principal in another State, is an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce. City of Bloomington v. Bourland, 3 I. C. R. 667.

(4l) A State can levy an excise tax upon a railroad corporation for the privilege of exercising its franchises within the State. Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R., 807.

(4m) Reference to the transportation receipts of a railroad company and to a certain percentage of the same, in determining the amount of an excise tax upon the company, is not in effect the imposition of the tax upon such receipts or an interference with interstate and foreign commerce, although the railroad lies partly within and partly without the State. Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R. 807.

(4n) The character of an excise tax levied upon a railroad corporation, or its validity, is not determined by the mode adopted in fixing its amount for any specific period or the times of its payment. State v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 3 I. C. R. 807.

(4o) Constitutional provisions as to equality of taxation are not violated by a tax on the business of express companies, which does not apply to railroad or steamboat companies which carry express matter. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 3 I. C. R., 810.

(4p) A tax upon the business of an express company done within the State is not a tax upon interstate commerce, although the company is also engaged in business between the States. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 3 I. C. R. 810.

(4q) The Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution does not prevent a State from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, nor the classification of property for taxation, nor prohibit special legislation. Pacific Express Co. v. Seibert, 3 I. C. R. 810.

(4r) The Missouri Act imposing a tax upon the business of express companies is not repugnant to the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution, because it does not impose a like tax upon railroad or steamboat companies which carry express matter; nor does such Act violate the provision of the constitution of Missouri relating to equality of taxation. Pacific Express Co v. Seibert, 3 I. C. R. 810.

(4s) The statute of New York does not require that the whole business of a foreign corporation shall be done within the state, in order to subject it to the taxing power of the state. Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 4 I. C. R. 57.

(4t) A tax levy only upon the franchise or business of a foreign corporation is not a tax of interstate commerce. Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 57.

(4x) Where complainant took out licenses under the Tennessee law of 1881 to do a general commission business, and gave bond to report their commission during the year, and to pay the required percentage thereon, they cannot, when they apply for similar licenses for the ensuing year, resort to the courts because the municipal authorities refuse to issue such licenses without the payment of the stipulated tax. Fickler v. Shelby Co., Taxing District, 4 I. C. R. 79.

(4y) A citizen doing a general business at the place of his domicil cannot escape payment of his share of the burdens of municipal government because the amount of his tax is arrived at by reference to his profits. Fickler v. Shelby Co. Taxing District, 4 I. C. R. 79.

(4z) A state Legislature may tax trades, professions and occupations in the absence of inhibition in the state constitution in that regard, and where a resident citizen engages in general business subject to a particular tax, the fact that the business done changes to consist, for the time being, wholly or partially in negotiating sales between resident and non-resident merchants of goods situated in another state does not necessarily involve the taxation of interstate commerce, forbidden by the Constitution. Ficklen v. Shelby Co. Taxing District, 4 I. C. R. 79.

(5a) A railroad corporation of a state is liable to taxation by such state upon its receipts, for the mileage within the state, from transportation by continuous carriage from a point in the state to another point in the state, but over a line which, in its course between those points passes out of the state into another state and back again into the State. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Pa., 4 I. C. R. 87.

(5b) A privilege tax on telegraph companies, graduated according to the value of the property of the company measured by its mileage, and imposed in lieu of all other taxes, although incidentally affecting interstate commerce, is not unconstitutional, as an interference with such commerce. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Adams, 4 I. C. R. 416.

(5c) A license tax of $590 per annum imposed on every person selling in a city any meat which is not from animals of his own raising, unless he rents a stall in a public market, while the rent of such stall is $150 per year and the market regulations are so restricted and burdensome as to preclude the reasonable conduct of a wholesale business there, is unconstitutional in respect to wholesale dealers in meat brought from other states, by reason of the necessarily resulting discrimination against them, although the ordinances on the subject on their face purport to apply to vendors irrespective of the places from which it comes,—especially where neither sales nor inspection of meat are restricted to the market, and the regulations are clearly made for the purpose of revenue and not merely to prevent the sale of uninspected meat. Georgia Packing Co. v. Macon, 4 I. C. R. 508.

(5d) The suit in equity by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to enjoin the collection of the taxes imposed upon its property in certain counties of North Dakota is without equity, because of the failure to aver that the company had tendered or paid the gross earnings tax for the year 1889 (or the tax assessed by the county auditors) and it is not entitled to the equitable relief prayed without first tendering or paying such taxes. Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Clark, 4 I. C. R. 641.

(5c) No one can have an injunction against the collection of a tax until he has paid so much of the tax assessed against him as it can be plainly seen he ought to pay. Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Clark, 4 I. C. R. 641.

Brennan v. Titusville (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 658.

(5j) The law of Ohio requiring a corporation to pay the secretary of state for filing articles of agreement of consolidation of corporations a percentage on the capital stock of the new consolidated corporation created by such articles is valid and constitutional, when applied to the consolidation of foreign corporations with a domestic corporation of the state, forming continuous line of railroad through several cities. Ashley v. Ryan (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 664.

(5k) The exaction of a charge by a state for the filing of articles of consolidation of several railroad companies forming a connecting line, only one of which is a corporation of the state, as a condition imposed by the state upon the taking of corporate being or the exercise of corporate franchises, constitutes no tax upon interstate commerce or the right to carry on the same or the instruments thereof, and its enforcement involves no attempt on the part of the state to extend its taxing power beyond its territorial limits. Ashley v. Ryan (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 664.

(5l) Ascertaining the value of the whole line of a railroad as a single property, and then determining the value of that within the state upon a mileage basis, is not a valuation of property outside of the state, if no special circumstances exist to distinguish between the conditions in the two states,—such as terminal facilities of enormous value in one and not in another. Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5m) The true value of a line of railroad for the purpose of taxation is something more than an aggregation of the values of separate parts of it, operated separately. It is the aggregate of those values plus that arising from a connected operation of the whole. Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5n) Assessing that part of an interstate railroad which is within the state at its actual cash value on a mileage basis is not placing a burden upon interstate commerce beyond the power of the state, simply because the value of the railroad as a whole is created partly—and perhaps largely—by the interstate commerce which it is doing. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5o) If an assessing board, seeking to assess for purposes of taxation a part of a road within a state, the other part of which is in an adjoining state, ascertains the value of the whole line as a single property, and then determines the value of that within the state, upon the mileage basis, that is not a valuation of property outside of the state, if no special circumstances exist to distinguish between the conditions in the two states such as terminal facilities of enormous value in one and not in another. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5p) It is not necessary that the assessing board of a state in order to keep within the limits of state jurisdiction shall treat the part of a railroad within the state as an independent line, disconnected from the part without, and place upon that property only the value which can be given to it if operated separately from the balance of the road. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5q) Where an assessing board is charged with the duty of valuing a certain number of miles of railroad within a state forming part of a line of road running into another state, and assesses those miles of road at their actual cash value determined on a mileage basis, this is not placing a burden upon interstate commerce, beyond the power of the state, simply because the value of that railroad as a whole is created partly—and perhaps largely—by the interstate commerce which it is doing. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5r) The rule of all property taxation is the rule of value, and by that rule property engaged in interstate commerce is controlled the same as property engaged in commerce within the state, this does not cast a burden on interstate commerce. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5s) The rule of property taxation is that the value of the property is the basis of taxation; the value of the property results from the use to which it is put and varies with the profitableness of that use. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5t) When a railroad runs into two states each state is entitled to consider as within its territorial jurisdiction and subject to the burdens of its taxes the proportionate share of the value flowing from the operation of the entire mileage as a single continuous road. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5u) While no state can impose any tax or burden upon the privilege of doing the business of interstate commerce, yet it has the unquestioned right to place a property tax on the instrumentalities engaged in such commerce. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 4 I. C. R. 677.

(5v) A state statute which imposes a tax, in general terms, on the doing of specified kinds of business, or the pursuit of designated occupations, in the state, and requires that a license shall be taken out before any such business or avocation shall be done or engaged in, should not be construed to apply to any business of the kind that may constitute interstate commerce, but only to business that is domestic or state commerce and to persons engaged or intending to engage in such domestic or state business. Osborne v. State of Florida, 4 I. C. R. 731.

(5w) A state cannot tax or regulate interstate commerce, or make the payment of a tax or the taking out of a license a condition precedent to carrying interstate commerce. A state statute which does so, either expressly or in effect, is offensive to the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, and void at least to that extent. The same is true as to foreign commerce. Osborne v. State of Florida, 4 I. C. R. 731

(5x) Although interstate commerce cannot be taxed or regulated by state legislation, and the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution exempts all such commerce from regulation or taxation by state authority, yet the doing of business that constitutes interstate commerce by a person who is also at the same time engaged in business, of the same kind, that constitutes state or local commerce, cannot be made a bar or exemption of the local or state commerce business from taxation or regulation by state authority. Osborne v. State of Florida, 4 I. C. R. 731.

(5y) The ninth section of the General Revenue Law of 1893 (chapter 4115, approved June 2, 1893) provides that no person shall engage in or manage the business, profession, or avocation mentioned therein without first taking out a state license as provided therein and paying the occupational tax and license fee prescribed thereby: and it authorizes counties and incorporated cities and towns to impose further taxes. As to express companies its special provisions, substituting figures for words, are as follows: "All express companies doing business in this state shall pay in cities of 15,000 inhabitants or more, a license tax of $200; in cities of 10,000 to 15,000 inhabitants, $100; in cities of 5,000 to 10,000 inhabitants, $75; in cities of 3000 to 5000 inhabitants, $50; in cities of 1000 to 3000 inhabitants, $25; in towns and villages of less than 1,000 and more than fifty inhabitants, $10." Any express company violating these provisions, or any person that knowingly acts as agent for any express company before it has paid the tax payable by such company is guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable as therein provided. HELD, the act does not tax or regulate or apply to interstate commerce, as distinguished from state or local commerce carried on by an express company, but applies only to express business that is local or state commerce. That so long as an express company confines its operations to express business that constitutes interstate or foreign commerce it is exempt from the above legislation, but if it engages in business that is state or local, as distinguished from interstate or foreign commerce, it becomes subject to the statute, notwithstanding it may at the same time engage in interstate or foreign commerce. The effect of the section, in so far as it imposes licenses taxes on express companies, is that each company doing any business that constitutes local or state commerce, as contradistinguished from interstate or foreign commerce, shall pay a state license tax and take out a state license when it proposes to do business in any city or town or village having more than fifty inhabitants, the amount of such tax being as above indicated according to the population. When there are in one county several cities or towns or villages belonging to one or more of the stated classes, the company must take out a separate state license for each city, town, or village it may intend to do business in, and pay the tax and the fee for the same. Any county may require each company doing business within its limits to pay for doing business in any city, town, or village in the county and within the provisions of the act, a license tax not exceeding fifty per cent of the amount paid the state for doing business in such city, town, or village. And any incorporated city or town may impose a tax of as much as fifty per cent of the state tax on any company doing business therein. That the amount of the tax is not shown to be prohibitory or destructive of the business of express companies, even if it be that any judicial action could be based on such a showing. The act is of uniform operation throughout the state as to all persons standing in the situation made the test of such taxation. The ascertainment of population involved in the act is not one that the courts are incapable of dealing with successfully. Osborne v. State of Florida, 4 I. C. R. 731.

(5z) A state tax on all telegraph companies doing business in the state, which is in the form of a privilege tax, but in lieu of all other taxes, and levied at the rate of $1 per mile of wire on companies having less than 1,000 miles of wire, and in the sum of $3,000 each on the others,—is not an unconstitutional interference with commerce. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Adams (U. S. Sup.) 5 I. C. R. 1.

(6a) By whatever name the exaction by taxation of an instrumentality of interstate or international commerce may be called, if it amounts to more than the ordinary tax upon property or a just equivalent therefor, ascertained by reference thereto, it is not open to attack as inconsistent with the Constitution. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Adams, 5 I. C. R. 1.

(6b) The prohibition of any state tax, duty, impost, or toll on the use of the Mississippi and navigable rivers leading into it, which was made a consideration of the admission of the state of Louisiana, is not violated by a statute providing for the gauging by a state officer of all coal or coke boats or barges in the state. Pittsburg & S. Coal Co.

v. Louisiana, Charity Hospital (U. S. Sup.), 5 I. C. R. 18.

(6c) Coal in boats and barges moored at landings on the Mississippi river, within the state of Louisiana, awaiting orders of the owners' agent for further disposal thereof, is taxable by that state. Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Bates (U. S. Sup.), 5 I. C. R. 30.

(6d) Goods which are the product of other states are not free from taxation in the state to which they have been carried for use or sale. Pittsburg & Southern Coal Co. v. Bates, 5 I. C. R. 30.

(6e) Property which still belongs to the original owners in Pennsylvania but was brought from that state on the navigable waters of the United States in boats and barges to Louisiana for purposes of sale, is subject to taxation and sale in Louisiana as any other property of the citizens of the United States is subject when it becomes incorporated into the bulk of the property of the country, and such taxation and sale are not a regulation or restriction upon commerce of the states and do not violate any provision of the United States Constitution. Pittsburg & Southern Coal Co. v. Bates, 5 I. C. R. 30.

(6f) State and municipal authorities are powerless to impose a tax upon messages to or from other states, since such a tax would be in conflict with that clause of the Federal Constitution which gives to Congress the exclusive power to regulate commerce among the several states. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Freemont, 5 I. C. R. 46.

(6g) An ordinance allowing an occupation tax on that portion of the business of a telegraph company which is carried on wholly within the state is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Fremont (Neb.), 5 I. C. R. 46.

(6h) A statute of a state requiring every peddler to procure a license and pay a tax therefor, and imposing a penalty for peddling without a license, is not repugnant to the power given to Congress to regulate commerce, as applied to a peddler, within the state, of sewing machines made in another state by a corporation of that state, and sent by it to him to sell, on its account, and as its agent. Emert v. State of Missouri, 5 I. C. R. 68.

(6i) A foreign corporation which pays the insurance, taxes, repairs, and rent of an establishment in the state from which its goods are sold, and the salaries of various employees engaged in conducting the business there, and a stated commission to a person in charge of such establishment, which does not depend upon the amount of sales or profits, is not relieved from liability for taxation on the goods stored in such establishment on the ground that the one in charge is carrying on an independent business in its goods. People, Parke, v. Roberts (N. Y. Sup. Ct.), 5 I. C. R., 462.

(6j) A state may impose a tax on the privilege of doing business within such state by a foreign corporation, measured by the amount of its capital stock employed in such business within the state. People, Parke, v. Roberts (N. Y. Sup. Ct.) 5 I. C. R. 462.

(6k) A State can validly impose taxes on tolls or rentals paid by one company to another for the use of so much of its railroad as is within the State, where the company paying the tolls is engaged in the transportation of merchandise from points within the State, to points beyond. The New York, Lake Erie, & Western Railway Company owned certain branch railroads in the State of Pennsylvania over which the Delaware & Hudson Canal Company and the Buffalo, Rochester, & Pittsburg Railroad Company were engaged in transporting merchandise from points within two points without the State of Pennsylvania, and operated trains under contracts to pay tolls or rental for the use of the tracks. The State of Pennsylvania imposed a tax upon the amounts received from such tolls. The court says an interference with interstate commerce must be direct, and not the mere incidental effect of the requirement of the usual proportional contribution to public maintenance, before it will be in conflict with the United States Constitution. N. Y., Lake Erie, & Western Ry. Co., v. Commonwealth of Penn., 7 I. C. C. App. 1.

(6l) A tax imposed by the corporation tax act of a State upon foreign pipe-line companies engaged in the transportation of oil from points in foreign States into the State imposing the tax is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce. State of N. J. Tide Water Pipe Co., Limited

v. St. Board of Assessors, 7 I. C. C. App. II.

(6m) The Ohio act of April 24, 1893, imposing a tax upon the business of trafficking in cigarettes or cigarette wrappers, is not void as an interference with interstate commerce in failing to discriminate between commerce within the State and that among the several States. Nor is it unconstitutional as providing for taxation by a rule not uniform or according to the true value of the property, nor as depriving a person engaged in the business of the equal protection of the laws. The decision was by a divided court, and since the act was repealed before the case was decided, the reasons for the majority opinion are not set out by the court. Metz v. Hagerty, 7 I. C. C. App. IV.

(6n) Interstate business is not taxed by taxing the franchise of a bridge company which maintains a toll bridge between States. Commonwealth of Kentucky v. Henderson Bridge Co., 7 I. C. C. App. VI.

(6o) The right of a State to tax the franchise of a bridge corporation created by it is not defeated by the fact that the company had obtained from another State the privilege of extending its bridge from the boundary of that State at low-water mark to the high lands, and had acquired from Congress the privilege of maintaining the bridge across a navigable river, and the designation of the bridge as a post road. Commonwealth of Kentucky v. Henderson Bridge Co., 7 I. C. C. App. VI.

(6p) A statute permitting a municipal corporation to exact a license tax from every railroad doing business within its limits is void as an interference with interstate commerce. The court said: It is true that, in estimating its license tax, the city council only took into consideration the intrastate business of the company. But under the terms of the Act they could have made the estimate of the whole business of the company, and we deal not with what the council did do, but with what they could have done under the authority conferred on them. The validity of this authority, not of their action under it, is the question before us. Southern Ry. Co. v. City of Ashville, 7 I. C. C. App. XI.

(6q) A municipal ordinance imposing a tax upon wires and poles of a telegraph company operated and employed in transmission of messages between different States is not void as an interference with interstate commerce. City of Philadelphia v. American Union Telegraph Co., 7 I. C. C. App. VII.

(6r) An ordinance of a city imposing a license fee upon every telegraph company or agency doing business in the city for business done exclusively in the city, not including business done to and from points without the State or busisness done for the government, its officers or agents, is not void as an interference with interstate commerce, although the same companies may also send interstate messages. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Charleston et al. 7 I. C. C. App. XVI.

(6s) A license tax on all those engaged in packing or canning oysters for sale or transportation whose places of business are in the State is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce as applied to those who may sell or transport their oysters beyond the State. The court says: The law does not in any way discriminate in favor of the citizens of this State against the citizens of other States; on the contrary, it only applies to those whose places of business are in this State. Nor do we think it can be said that it in any way regulates or undertakes to regulate interstate commerce. Of course oyster packers in this State may sell or transport all their oysters within the State, or they may sell or transport some of them beyond the State. But that does not prohibit the State from taxing them for the prosecution of their business within the State. St. of Md. v. C. L. Applegarth, et al., 7 I. C. C. App. XVII.

(6t) A specific tax upon citizens of foreign States for doing business is not invalid if the property has become subject to taxation. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. W. A. Wright., 7 I. C. C. App. XXII.

(6u) A specific tax levied under a statute of Georgia upon persons engaged in the conduct of a particular business there is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce, where the property employed in the business has been brought into the State and has itself become subject to taxaction therein. The court says the property involved in the conduct of this business, having become intermingled with the general mass of property in the State, has itself become subject to taxation there, and upon principle the business of selling it is alike taxable in that jurisdiction. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. W. A. Wright 7 I. C. C. App. XXII.

(6v) A statute imposing a license tax upon every person who shall engage in the business or vocation of operating towboats, to be graduated according to the gross annual receipts, is illegal in so far as it applies to boats operated under a permit from the United States government upon interstate waters. The court says: The tax is a charge explicitly made as the price of the privilege of navigating the Mississippi River between New Orleans and the Gulf, in the coastwise trade, as the condition on which the State of Louisiana consents that the boats may be employed according to the terms of the license granted under the authority of Congress. The sole occupation sought to be subjected to the tax is that of using and enjoying the license of the United States to employ these particular vessels in the coastwise trade, and the State then seeks to burden with an exaction, fixed at its own pleasure, the very right to which the licensee is entitled under, and which he derives from, the Constitution and laws of the United States. Frere v. Victor Von Schveler., 7 I. C. C. App. XXVI.

(6w) A license tax on the business of putting up lightning rods is not a tax on interstate commerce, in case of a person who puts up no rods except those which he sells and which are brought from another State, although he puts them up without extra charge. St. of North Carolina v. Gorham, 7 I. C. C. App. XXVII.

(6x) An ordinance requiring every express company having an office in the city, and receiving goods, wares, and merchandise, and forwarding them to points within the State, or receiving goods, wares, or merchandise within the State and delivering them in the city, to pay a license tax of a certain amount,—is an interference with interstate comerce. The court says: The tax is on every express company having an office in the city and receiving goods and forwarding them to points within the State. Receiving them from what points? Evidently from any quarter within or without the State, for the next sentence is, "for receiving goods, wares, and merchandise within the State and delivering them in the city." This description includes all the business of the express company. The tax is not confined to such business as the company does within the State, nor is any distinction made between the business done within the State and that done without the State. Webster v. Mc K. Bell., 7 I. C. C. App. XXIX.

(6y) That a city is on a branch and not on the main line of an interstate railroad, will not entitle it to impose a license fee upon the railroad for the privilege of doing business which is in fact interstate. City of San Bernardino v. Southern Pacific Co., 7 I. C. C. App. XXXII.

(6ya) Importer of goods who have sold them in the original packages but have not collected the proceeds cannot be compelled to pay a municipal tax upon the goods, since the payment of the import duty gives them the right to dispose of the goods, as well as to bring them in to the state. Gelpi v. Schenck. 7 I. C. C. App. XXXIV.

(6z The provisions of a State statute requiring payment of a tax by persons to agents of manufacturers in another state who merely solicit orders and not manufacture, pack, ship, handle, or even see the fertilizers. The court says: Even if the act could be construed as an inspection law, or as an exercise of the police power of the State, the complainants' business could not be affected by it, as complainants do not deal with, nor handle, nor bring to the State fertilizers; and, even if the complainants were to import into the State original packages of fertilizers, and the act could be properly construed as an inspection law, within and under the police power of the State, still the interference with complainants' business would be in violation of the commerce clause of the United States Constitution. St. of Louisiana et al. v. Largarde et al., 7 I. C. C. App. L.

(7a) A statute imposing a tax upon persons traveling from place to place engaged in selling goods by sample is an unlawful interference with commerce so far as it applies to persons taking orders for goods to be shipped from other states; and if it fails in regard to them it will not be upheld at all, since it cannot be assumed that the legislature would have discriminated against the business interests of the state in favor of those of other states. State, ex rel. M. F. Selliger v. O'Connor., 7 I. C. C. App. XL.

(7b) A state statute which imposes a tax upon the sale of certain designated newspapers and all other publications of like character is not an interference with commerce, although applied to the sale of newspapers published in another State. The court says: The law indeed requires the person who sells the complainant's newspaper to pay the tax, but it is equally obligatory on all persons who sell other publications of like character to pay the same amount. Whether, therefore, the seller of the paper be a resident or nonresident of the State, whether the paper be edited or published in Missouri, Texas, or elsewhere,—each and all, without distinction or discrimination, must submit to the requirements of the law before selling, within the limits of the State, the designated papers. As thus construed, the act is not an encroachment on the commerce clause of the Constitution. Preston v. Finley., 7 I. C. C. App. LXXXI.

(7c) A steamboat is not exempt from taxation because it is engaged in interstate commerce. Linehan Ry. Transfer Co. v. Pendergrass, 7 I. C. C. App. LXXVII.

(7d) The freedom of commerce between States is not nterfered with by a statute requiring every foreign building and loan association to pay into the State treasury annually 2 per cent of its annual gross receipts. The court says: The statute, whatever may be said of the nature of the tax it imposes, in express terms, affects only business done within the State. The business of the corporation is purely internal and domestic. Southern Building & Loan Association of Knoxville, Tennessee v. Norman, 7 I. C. C. App. LXXVIII.

(7e) The imposition of a privilege tax by a city for business done within such city by a railroad company whose lines extend into other States is not an interference with interstate commerce. City of Anniston v. Southern R. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. App. XC.

(7f) An ordinance imposing a license tax for privilege of doing business in the city by carrying passengers or freight from the city to other points in the State is not an invalid regulation of commerce. Alabama Great Southern R. R. Co. v. City of Bessemer, 7 I. C. C. App. XCII.

(7g) A State statute imposing a license tax on local business of an express company, but which does not require a license for doing interstate business, is valid. Osborne v. St. of Florida 7 I. C. C. App. XCV.

(7h) A state statute forbidding the deduction from personal assets of debts owed for imported property in the original packagees, and therefore not subject to taxation because of the Federal Constitution, is not invalid as an attempted evasion of such Constitution, but merely prohibits a double exemption. People, ex rel. Moses Bijur v. Barker., 8 I. C. C. App. IV.

(7i) The territorial law of Oklahoma of march 5, 1885, making cattle subject to taxation which are kept or grazed on the Indian reservation of said territory, is not in conflict with the power of Congress to regulate commerce, as such a tax is too remote and indirect to be a tax or burden on interstate commerce, or an interference with the power of Congress. The court says: It is not perceived that local taxation by a State or territory of property of others than Indians would be an interference with congressional power under the clause giving Congress the power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes. Thomas v. Gay & Reed., 8 I. C. C. App. VIII.

(7j) The words "doing any business," as used in Pa. act, April 22, 1874, Pub. Laws, 108, does not include the taking of orders or making sales by sample by agents of a foreign corporation coming into the state for such purpose, as a contrary construction would make the act offend against the Federal Constitution as imposing unlawful restriction on interstate business. Mushon

& Co. v. Pootsville Lumber Co., 8 I. C. C. App. XXXII.

(7k) The determination of the internal revenue department that a package is a proper and original package for purposes of taxation does not show that it is an original package of commerce. McGregor v. Cone., 8 I. C. C. App. XXXVIII.

(7l) The subjection to taxation, as part of its capital stock, of the goods of a foreign corporation which it employs within the State by State statute, does not constitute an illegal interference with interstate commerce. People of the St. of N. Y. ex rel., N. England Loan & Trust Co. v. Roberts., 8 I. C. C. App. XXXVIII.

(7m) A tax on the capital stock of a foreign transportation company doing business in the State appointed by the mileage method does not violate the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. Commonwealth of Penn. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 8 I. C. C. App. XCI.

(7n) State statutes can have no application to interstate or foreign commerce in view of the full exercise of the power to regulate such commerce by the act of Congress of February 4, 1887. Gulf, Colorado, & Santa Fe R. R. Co., v. Miami Steamship Co., 8 I. C. C. App. XLVII.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(7o) At a conference of representatives of the States in which the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient lines operate, and of connecting carriers, a large number of counties in Texas expressed willingness to assess the Orient for taxation purposes at the nominal value of $100 per mile. Other States should follow the lead of Texas in this respect; in fact, complete exemption from all taxes until the Orient can earn something is demanded in public interest. The commission earnestly recommends this course to the respective State authorities. Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Division, 73 I. C. C., 319, 329.

(7p) A tax by the state, in accordance with its law on the cars run in the state belonging to a foreign corporation engaged in leasing tank cars to shippers, by taking as their assessed value a sum bearing the same ratio to the value of all its cars that the miles of railroad in Georgia over which the cars move bears to total mileage so traversed in all states, a plan arbitrary, and resulting in grossly excessive valuation, violates the Fourteenth Amendment as to due process of law, and unduly burdens interstate commerce. Union Tank Line v. Wright 39 Sup. Ct. 276.

(7r) Under the commerce clause of the United States Constitution, it is essential that a state tax shall not directly burden interstate commerce, and shall not discriminate against interstate commerce. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Doughton (1923) 43 Sup. Ct. 620.

(7s) The North Carolina income tax levied on the net income of carriers, ascertained by making certain deductions from the net operating income, as determined by the accounts with the Interstate Commerce Commission, but not considering the nonoperating income and charges which fixed the net income of the companies operating the property, but not the income from the property itself, is not a tax on the gross receipts from interstate commerce, which admittedly would be void. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Doughton (1923) 43 Sup. Ct. 620.

(7t) A state statute, imposing a tax on the net income of interstate carriers and purporting to base it on the accounts filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, is not invalid because it departs in some particulars from the system of accounting prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, since the Commission's standard form is not immutable, and the Commission is not intrusted with the function of determining whether a tax burdens interstate commerce. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Doughton (1923) 43 Sup. Ct. 620.

(a) The duty enjoined by the Act of Congress of Aug. 7, 1888, §2, upon the Pacific railroad companies, of affording equal facilities to all connecting lines of telegraph without discrimination against any, should be enforced in the mode prescribed by §3,—of application to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is required to proceed by mandamus, rather than by bill in equity, as the remedy provided is exclusive. IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) A telephone company being a public servant, subject to the provisions of a law that forbids undue preferences and unjust discriminations on any grounds whatsoever, it is manifest that nothing but a difference in the service rendered or in the facilities furnished will justify any difference in the charges exacted. Shoemaker v. C. & P. Telephone Co., 20 I. C. C. 614, 621.

(c) A difference in telephone charges for the same service is not justified by the fact that lower rates were accorded old subscribers; nothing but a difference in service rendered or facilities furnished will justify a difference in rates. Shoemaker v. C. & P. Tel. Co., 20 I. C. C. 614, 621.

(d) Demanding higher charges of new telephone subscribers than demanded of old subscribers for the same service and facilities may constitute unlawful discrimination and preference. Shoemaker v. C. & P. Tel. Co., 20 I. C. C. 614, 621.

(e) It must appear that the discrimination in the respect alleged affects the relative aggregate charges to the limited and unlimited service subscribers, respectively, on their interstate class before the Commission would have any jurisdiction over the subject matter. But a case may arise in which unreasonableness or discrimination in telephone charges or services will so affect interstate transmission as to fall within the Commission's regulating powers. Local Commercial Telephone Service in Pittsburgh, Pa., 27 I. C. C. 622, 624.

(f) It is clearly a telegraph company's right to adopt such methods of bookkeeping as it deems advisable, and an allegation of unjust discrimination or undue prejudice can not properly be predicated upon the fact that the company charges a competing cable company for the service performed by it a rate or division which is greater in amount than the sum which the company arbitrarily credits to itself for performing the same service on messages which it receives from its own cables. Commercial Cable Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 45 I. C. C. 33, 37.

(g) The existence of friendly relations in one instance and their apparent absence in another can not be accepted as such a difference in conditions as to justify a difference in charges which otherwise would be condemned as unlawful. Commercial Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 45 I. C. C. 33, 38.

(h) Section 4 of the interstate commerce act, which the complainant alleges is violated by defendants, will, upon examination, be seen not to apply to the transmission of messages. The complainant not having made a prima facie case, the Commission declines his final suggestion to institute inquiries under its broad authority as to the reasonableness and fairness of the defendant's rates. The breadth of those powers suggests that they should not be used captiously or vexatiously. Whitaker v. Western Union Telegraph Co. 59 I. C. C. 286, 289.

(i) Complainant attacked failure of defendant to install and equip a telegraph office at St. Clairsville, O., as unduly prejudicial, and that the present charge of 10c on all messages sent or received at that point is unjustly discriminatory. St. Clairsville is on the National Road about 12 miles west of Wheeling, W. Va. telegrams are now telephoned from or to the office of defendant in Wheeling; they are received and delivered by an agent of defendant at St. Clairsville. Telegrams can be sent from 7 a. m. until 9:30 p. m. and later. On telegrams to and from St. Clairsville the Ohio rate is applicable plus 10c per message for the telephone service. The Ohio rate in many cases is less than the West Virginia rate. The attention of the Commission has not been directed to any provision of the act which would authorize the Commission to require the establishment or reinstallation of a telegraph office. HELD, complaint-dismissed. Davis v. W. U. Tel., 88 I. C. C. 489.

(j) A contract by a telephone company to furnish free telephone service to certain customers for a limited time would be invalid as a discrimination under the Pennsylvania law. Pittsburgh & Allegheny Telephone Co. v. Stinson Printing Co. (Penn., 1924) 123 A. 818.

(k) Small municipalities and residence communities forming the suburbs of a large city, the inhabitants of which suburban communities have their social and commercial interests in the metropolitan center cannot be said to have separate community interests, and where a telephone business has been built up to include such city and its suburbs, with free call service throughout the entire district, the telephone company may not thereafter separate the suburbs into separate exchange areas, and make toll charges for calls beyond the boundaries of each area, and to do so amounts to unjust discrimination. City of Cincinnati v. Public Utilities Commission, (Ohio 1922), 137 N. E. 36.

(l) Where a press agency leased wires from a telegraph company, which later leased other wires to other news agencies at lower rates, in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, the press agency, having continued to accept the services, was liable, at least on a quantum meruit, for the reasonable value thereof, but the telegraph company could not recover more than the rate given the press agency's competitors. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Association Press, 162 N. Y. S. 4.

(m) Where a telegraph company leased wires to a press agency at certain rates, and thereafter made similar contracts, under similar circumstances and conditions, with other news agencies, at lower rates, although the contracts were for service between different points than the service contemplated in the first lease contracts, there was a "preference or advantage to a locality," within the Interstate Commerce Act, §1, providing that the act shall apply to telegraph companies; section 3, providing that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any locality in any respect. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Associated Press, 162 N. Y. S. 4.

(n) Where a telegraph company leased wires to a press agency, and thereafter leased other wires for a like service and under similar conditions to other news agencies, with whom there was a keen rivalry, at lesser rates, although the service under any contract made at a lesser rate was not between the same points as the service provided for in the first contracts, there was a "preference" given to the later lessees, to the undue and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage of the first lessee, in violation of Interstate Commerce Act, §1, giving it application to telegraph companies, and section 3, making it unlwful for any common carrier subject to the act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any person, company, firm, corporation, locality, or particular description of traffic. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Associated Press, 162 N. Y. S. 4.

(o) Discriminatory contracts by telegraph companies to the prejudice of one party are forbidden by the common law. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Associated Press, 162 N. Y. S. 4.

II. CHARGES AND REGULATIONS.

§2. In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) As a telegraph service along its right of way is essential to the safe operation of its trains, a railroad company or a group of separately incorporated roads generally recognized as a "railway system," may lawfully contract to furnish free or reduced-rate transportation to a telegraph company for such of its officers, men, materials, and supplies as are required in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of such a telegraph line and service upon its own right of way; and the legality of such free or reduced-rate transportation is not affected by the fact that the telegraph company may also use such telegraph line in connection with its telegraph service to the public. But such a railroad company or system of roads cannot lawfully contract, in consideration of free telegraph service at reduced rates over wires beyond its own right of way, to furnish free or reduced-rate transportation for the officials, employees, laborers, materials, or supplies of a telegraph company in conection with the construction, maintenance, or operation of a telegraph line and service off the line of such railroad company or system of railroads and upon the line or lines of another carrier or system. Railroad-Telegraph Contracts v. 12 I. C. C. 11.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) It is not proper to use commercial rates as a basis for estimating the amount of telegraph expense when some of the messages were transmitted over lines of a railroad. Central Commercial Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 33 I. C. C., 164, 167.

(c) Congress has, in section 1 of the act, provided that messages may be classified into day, press and such other classes as are just and reasonable, and that different rates may be charged for the different classes. It is plain that both classification and charge are to be made in the first instance by the carrier, and it follows by necessary implication that the carrier is to define the classes and formulate such rules and regulations pertaining thereto as shall be just and reasonable. The initiative is with the carrier. White v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 33 I. C. C. 500, 501.

(d) Through calls at combination rates require fewer terminal services than separate calls under rates combined, and combination thru rates that include charges for terminal service not performed are reasonable. Malone v. New York Telephone Co., 40 I. C. C. 185.

(e) Telephone calls may be classified and a through rate for one kind of service is not necessarily unreasonable merely because it exceeds an aggregate of intermediate rates for a different kind of service. Malone v. N. Y. Telephone Company, 40 I. C. C. 185.

(f) The Act expressly authorizes reasonable classification of telephone messages and charges, and as toll service differs substantially from local service it may reasonably be rated higher. The single fact, therefore, that defendants charged more for toll calls than for local calls is not enough to prove that the through rate charged for complainant's calls was unreasonable. Malone v. New York Telephone Co., 40 I. C. C. 185, 187, 188.

(g) The combination of local rates to a particular basing point with toll rates from the basing point would discriminate in favor of persons making long distance calls from the points taking the combination rates against persons calling from the basing point, especially where the charges for the time consumed over the initial periods allowed are computed on different bases. Malone v. N. Y. Telephone Co., 40 I. C. C. 185, 188.

(h) The intermediate rates between two points whose aggregate can not legally be exceeded by a joint rate between the same points must apply to the same kind of service as the joint rate. Furthermore, purely intrastate rates can not lawfully be included among the rates aggregated unless they are available for interstate application. Malone v. N. Y. Telephone Co., 40 I. C. C. 185, 188.

(i) Toll service must be more costly to perform than local service, especially as there is no return to the telephone company unless the person called responds. Malone v. New York Telephone Co., 40 I. C. C. 185, 187, 189.

(j) If, as a matter of law, the rate charged and collected for an unrepeated message carries with it the same protection to the sender or recipient and imposes upon the telegraph company the same liability and degree of care as the rate for a repeated message, then the express authority by the Congress to maintain classifications of repeated and unrepeated messages, with the different rates attached thereto, is without significance or effect; for no useful purpose would have been served in authorizing the two classifications taking different rates without recognizing the fundamental differenc between them that for years has been well understood and maintained. It seems clear, therefore, that the Congress in recognizing, by the amendment to Section 1, these classes of messages with the different charges attached, has also recognized a distinction in the carrier's liability under them, and has sanctioned this distinction for future, subject of course, to the general provisions in the Act requiring all rates, and all rules and regulations affecting rates, to be reasonable and uniform in their application, under like circumstances, for the different kinds of service offered. Such classification of its messages, with the different rates and liabilities attaching to them, having affirmative recognition in the Act itself, it follows that when lawfully fixed and offered to the public they are binding upon the carrier, and upon all those who avail themselves of its services, until they have been lawfully changed. Unrepeatedly Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 678.

(k) Congress has expressly authorized unrepeated telegraph rates with restricted liability attached, and such rates are not therefore contrary to public policy. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 679.

(l) The fact that the deferred service is so generally accorded at half rates would seem to warrant the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that those rates are not unremunerative. Commercial Cable Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 45 I. C. C. 33, 36.

(m) The requirement of adherence to established rates and charges, as provided in the act, applies as strictly to telegraph companies as to other common carriers and can not be questioned. Limitations of liability in transmitting telegrams, 61 I. C. C. 541, 546.

(n) The Commission is not prepared to concede that a public service corporation may rely upon its financial condition as a justification for refusal to establish reasonable rules and regulations. Limitations of liability in transmitting messages. 61 I. C. C. 541, 550.

(o) Complainants alleged defendant has refused to apply press rates on numerous messages relating to news articles tendered at Washington, D. C., and that the charges assessed on such messages were unjust, unreasonable and unduly prejudical. The commercial rates were charged. Messages are classified by defendant into commercial, press, day, and night and various other classes. Commercial messages are those transmitted for the general public. Press messages are those for newspapers. Day press rates are one third of the day commercial rates. Night press rates are one sixth of the day commercial rates. For many years news articles for publication have been accorded rates lower than commercial messages. Queries are necessary to facilitate the gathering and spreading of news and are so intimately connected with the news articles to which they refer that they have been given the same rates. A query to a newspaper, the only kind here to be considered, in substance is a brief description or summary of a news article followed by numerals, the latter indicating the number of words contained in the article. Those tendered by press associations often contain summaries of several different news articles numbered consecutively to facilitate ordering. They identify but do not "puff" the authors, emphasize the desirability of an article by describing its subject. Defendant distinguishes messages which state the number of words and not the price from those which quote the price. As to the former, business arrangements concerning dispatches have been completed prior to the sending of the message and the purpose of the message is to enable the newspaper to determine whether it has space available and desires to publish the particular dispatches. These are accepted as queries. As to the latter such business arrangements have not been completed and the purpose of the message is to negotiate a business arrangement with respect to particular dispatches. On these the commercial rates are charged. HELD, under defendants rules, the typical message used was not a query, because, while it related to newspaper articles to be transmited, it did not relate strictly thereto. It was primarily a commercial message. HELD, rate charged not unreasonable or unduly prejudicial, complaint dismissed. Consolidated Press Association v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 73 I. C. C. 479.

(p) Commercial rates charged on certain messages relating to news articles and tendered for transmission to newspapers found applicable and not unreasonable or unduly prejudicial. Such messages found not entitled to lower press rates since they were not queries within the meaning of the tariff. While they related to newspaper articles to be transmitted, they did not relate strictly thereto as provided in the rules. Consolidated Press Asso. v. W. U. T. Co., 73 I. C. C., 479.

(q) Rates should not be increased, neither should toll charges be made, for the mere purpose of reducing prolonged conversations over telephone lines about unimportant matters. City of Cincinnati v. Public Utilities Commission, (Ohio 1922), 137 N. E. 36.

(r) Telephone companies are not subject to unusual hazards and they are permitted to enjoy a practical monopoly, and rates of return must therefore be on a conservative basis. City of Cincinnati v. Public Utilities Commission, (Ohio 1922), 137 N. E. 36.

(s) A telephone company is entitled to the benefit of the increase in value of property since it was acquired, in fixing the value of such property as the basis of ascertaining proper rates. City of Cincinnati v. Public Utilities Commission, (Ohio 1922), 137 N. E. 36.

(t) A telephone company held not entitled to add its depreciation reserve account of a sum amounting to approximately 30 per cent of its entire outstanding capital stock as a basis for rates, in view of testimony that the plant and equipment was in good physical condition, and that an 8 per cent accrued depreciation was reasonable; such accumulated reserve having been permitted to reach beyond what was necessary for replacement of capital in respect to past capital outlay expired in the process of carrying on the business, constituting unappropriated surplus. City of Cincinnati v. Public Utilities Commission, (Ohio 1922), 137 N. E. 36.

(u) A telephone utility may be required to operate a part of its system under a schedule of rates and charges which will not produce a fair return on the portion of its property used in that part of its system, provided the return on the property as a whole does not thereby render the business as a whole unprofitable. City of Cincinnati v. Public Utilities Commission, (Ohio 1922) 137 N. E. 36.

(v) Under the Act, §6, providing that a common carrier subject to the Act shall file with the Commission and print and keep open to public inspection schedules showing all rates, fares, and charges which shall plainly state any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part of the aggregate of such rates, fares, and charges, or the value of the services rendered, a telegraph company cannot assert the validity, and binding force of its rate or regulation under the interstate commerce law when it has not complied with the plain requirement of such law by filing its rates and regulations with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Piper, (Tex. 1917, 191 S. W. 817.

(w) "Going concerns" value should be considered in determining the value of a telephone plant for the purpose of ascertaining the sufficiency of the rates therefore prescribed by the Public Utilities Commission. Denver v. Denver Union Water Co., 246 U. S. 178, 179, 38 Sup. Ct. 278, 62 L. Ed. 649. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. v. Public Utilities Commission (Kan., 1924) 223 Pac. 771.

§2½. Private Wire Service.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Commission upon its own motion entered upon an investigation of the rules and practices connected with "private-wire service." The three respondents entered into contracts with persons for what was popularly known as "private" or "leased" wires. These terms were not strictly accurate. Respondents did not lease any particular wire, but merely furnished "circuits" under contracts providing for the location of the terminals in the offices of the lessee. Other stations, known as "drops," might be located at points on the circuit intermediate to the terminals. Respondents maintained the equipment; the operators were employes of the lessee. The private wire service was either telegraphic (Morse service) or telephonic (talking service). Under contracts for Morse service a circuit was provided each morning at a stated time for the exclusive use of lessee, who transmitted messages through his own operators, without interference by the lessor. Where the service was interrupted the lessee might send messages over the public wires at one-half the usual charges. The Morse-service mileage on the lines of the three respondents was: In private wire service, 205,729; in public wire service, 1,672,199. The annual revenues were: From private wires, $3,929,510.25; from public wires, $55,903,203.12. Full talking service consisted of the use of a telephone circuit with terminals, drops, and other facilities, between stations named, during each day or night. In half talking service the circuit was released after each conversation, the aggregate service being limited to 300 minutes per day. The contract for "short talking periods gave the lessee the circuit at a certain fixed time or times each day. The rate for private wire Morse service was usually $20 per mile per annum. Full talking service, 24 hours daily, $40; day service, $40; night service, $20. Half talking service, first 100 miles, $25; each additional mile, $20. Short period talking service, from $2 to $10 per hour, according to time of day. The usual message and answer speed between New York and Chicago was from 2 to 4 minutes. An industrial concern with its financial office 1,000 miles from its plant could obtain almost immediate message, and, answer service between the two, an achievement impossible over the public wires. Publicity being absent in the case of private wires, the use of codes was unnecessary. Application for private wires were approved only to the extent that surplus facilities were available. In case of prostration of telegraph wires the private-wire service was restored more rapidly than the public service, and public wires were appropriated for private use on such occasions. Provisions restricting the use of the wire to the lessee's own business so as to prevent the transmission of "contraband," were practically dead letters. All three respondents put terminals or drops in the offices of the lessees "correspondents" at the lessee's direction. Effective censorship of the matter transmitted was practically impossible. Subletting was common, as also free use of the wire by "correspondents" among themselves. Greater possibility of abbreviation and the use of expressions peculiar to a particular business enhanced the advantages accruing to its users was that operators at the drops along the route could listen in on messages passing between the terminals, thus increasing the capacity of the wire. On a short industrial route of 53 miles considered the average expense per message was 2.5c; while the public rate for 10 words between the same points was 25c. On a broker's private wire from Chicago to San Francisco, 2466 miles, the expense per message was 37c; public rate 75c. HELD (1) that the fact that in Morse service the lessees furnished their own operators did not divest respondents of their status of common carriers as to messages sent over the private wires; (2) that the Morse service was not a wholesale service, the rate being based on mileage and not on volume of business; (3) that the Morse service differed from other classes of service and, stripped of certain abuses, might properly be placed among "such classes as were just and reasonable" into which respondents were authorized by the Act to classify messages transmitted by them; (4) that the Morse service was not shown to be prejudicial to users of respondents' public telegraph service; (5) that the provision that in time of interruption to the private wires, the public wires could be used at one-half the regular rates was preferential and must be eliminated; (6) that in the case of private-wire service some reasonable restrictions were necessary in the interest of the public; (7) that respondents were justified in inserting in the contract for private-wire service a provision restricting the use of instruments and facilities to the transmission of messages concerning the business of the lessee and providing against transmission of messages for others; (8) that respondents were furnished the more reasonable service at a relatively lower charge, contrary to recognized principles of classification; (9) that there was no essential difference between private wire talking service and the toll service furnished by Bell Company; and (10) that the classification of messages into private-wire talking service was an unreasonable classification. Private Wire Contracts, 50 I. C. C. 831.

(b) Private-wire equipment is a part of the quasi-public facilities of a common carrier, was as a rule installed as such, and is entitled as a matter of law to be located under the right of eminent domain. Private Wire Contracts, 50 I. C. C. 731, 740.

(c) The lawfulness of the so-called private-wire service depends upon whether or not private-wire messages are among "such other classes as are just and reasonable" into which respondent carriers are authorized by section 1 of the Act to classify messages transmitted over their lines. Private Wire Contracts, 50 I. C. C. 731, 756.

(d) While the private-wire service in a sense be a surplus or by-product service, the rates for the transmission of mesages by common carriers can not properly be based upon the theory that one class of service carries the burden of expense and that revenue derived from another class is practically net revenue. This theory carried to its logical conclusion, would permit a railroad to charge the first passengers, up to a given number, entering a car a fare sufficiently high to cover expenses and yield a profit and charge passengers over this number a lower fare on the principle that they were receiving surplus transportation. Private Wire Contracts, 50 I. C. C. 731, 758.

(e) The telegraph companies are justified in inserting in the contract for private-wire service a provision restricting the use of instruments and facilities provided to the transmission of messages concerning the business of the lessee, and providing that messages shall not be transmitted for other persons or firms. It is not unlawful for two or more persons to unite in securing private-wire service where all are named as lessees. Private Wire Contracts, 50 I. C. C. 740, 764.

(f) One who uses a station on a private branch telephone service of his corporation for his own purpose and on his own private business notwithstanding that said service is expressly limited by contract with the telephone company to the business of said corporation, all in accordance with the order of the State Railway Commission, cannot make an injury to such private business of his own, caused by a deprivation of the continuance of such personal and private use by him, a basis for the recovery of damages from the company. McGrew v. Nebraska Telephone Co., (Nebr. 1922), 190 N. W. 783.

III. CONTROL AND REGULATION.

See Control and Regulation.

§3. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Intercourse by telegraph between States is interstate commerce, and State has no authority to regulate same. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 306 S. P. cited in Wabash etc. R. Co. v. People (U. S. Sup. Ct.) I. C. R. 37.

(b) Indiana Statute regulating mode in which messages sent by telegraph companies, doing business in that State, shall be delivered in other States is void. Western U. Tel. Co. v. Pendleton (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 306, S. P. cited in Wabash etc. R. Co. v. People (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 37.

(d) Indiana Statute regulating mode in which messages sent by telegraph companies, doing business in that State, shall be delivered in other States, is void, as an interference with interstate commerce. Western U. Tel. Co. v. Pendleton (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 1 I. C. R. 306.

(e) The Statute of Indiana, which attempts to regulate the mode in which messages sent by telegraphic companies doing business in said State shall be delivered in other States, is void, such regulation being an interference with the freedom of interstate commerce. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton 1. I. C. R. 306.

(f) The telegraph is an instrument of commerce. Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 2 I. C. R. 59.

(g) The property of a telegraph company, situated within a State, may be taxed therein as all other property is taxed; but its business of an interstate character cannot be taxed. Leloup v. Port of Mobile (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 2 I. C. R. 134.

(h) Where a telegraph company is doing the business of transmitting messages between different States, and has accepted and is acting under the telegraph law passed by Congress July 24, 1866, no State within which it sees fit to establish an office can impose upon it a license tax, or require it to take out a licenses for the transaction of such business. Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 2 I. C. R. 134.

(i) Telegraphic communications are commerce, as well as in the nature of postal service, and, if carried on between different States, are interstate commerce, and within the power of regulation conferred upon Congress, free from the control of State regulations, except such as are strictly of a police character; and any State regulations by way of tax on the occupation or business, or requiring a license to transact such business, are unconstitutional and void. Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 2 I. C. R. 134.

(j) Where a telegraph company transmits messages between different States, and has accepted, and is acting under the telegraph law passed by Congress July 24, 1866, no State in which it does business can require it to take out a license for the transaction thereof. Leloup v. Port of Mobile (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 134.

(k) The privilege of a telegraph company which is a business agency of the general government, to maintain its wires along the structure of an elevated railroad in the streets of a city, such railroad being an independent post road of the United States, cannot be destroyed by state legislation. Western U. Teleg. Co.

v. New York (C. C. S. D. N. Y.), 2 I. C. I. 533.

(l) State legislation compelling electric wires in the streets of a city to be placed under the surface of the streets, although such streets, being letter-carrier routes, are all post roads, is an exercise of police power, and is not an unlawful attempt to regulate commerce, or an invasion of the rights of a telegraph company as a business agency of the general government, under the Act of Congress of July 4, 1866 (U. S. Rev. Stat. tit. 65), to operate its lines over "any post road of the United States. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. New York (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 2 I. C. R. 533.

(m) A statute confirming a contract between commissioners for placing electric wires under ground and a subway company, to lay subways for such wires, is none the less an exercise of police power because it gives to such company special privileges, but no exclusive privileges or franchise. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. New York (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 2 I. C. R. 533.

(n) Telegraphic communications carried on between different States are interstate commerce; and any state tax on the business is unconstitutional. Leloup v. Port of Mobile (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 134; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pennsylvania (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 2 I. C. R. 241; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Seay (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 2 I. C. R. 726.

(o) Interstate messages are elements of commerce between the States and not subject to legislative control of the States while state messages are elements of internal commerce solely within the limits and jurisdiction of the State, and therefore subject to its taxing power. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Seay, 2 I. C. R. 726.

(p) Telegraph companies which have accepted the provisions of the Act of Congress of July 24, 1866, sections 5263 to 5268, Rev. Stat. U. S., cannot be taxed by a State for any messages, or receipts arising from messages, from points within the State to points without, or from points without the State to points within; but such taxes may be levied upon all messages carried and delivered exclusively within the State. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Seay, 2 I. C. R. 726.

(q) A privilege tax on telegraph companies, graduated according to the value of the property of the company measured by its mileage, and imposed in lieu of all other taxes, although incidentally affecting interstate commerce, is not unconstitutional as an interference with such commerce. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Adams (Miss.), 4 I. C. R. 416.

(r) An ordinance of a city imposing a license fee upon every telegraph company or agency doing business in the city, for business done exclusively in the city, not including business done to and from points without the state, or business done for the government, its officers or agents,—is not void as an interference with interstate commerce. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Charleston (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 4 I. C. R. 637.

(s) Messages of a telegraph company sent and delivered entirely within the state are subject to its taxing power. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. City Council of Charleston, 4 I. C. R. 637.

(t) The duty enjoined upon the Union Pacific Railroad Company by the Act of Congress of Aug. 7, 1888, § 1, of operating by itself alone through its own corporate officers its telegraph lines, may and should be enforced by mandamus if in fact violated. Union P. R. Co. v. United States (C. C. App. 8th C.) 4 I. C. R. 705.

(u) A territorial act which regulates the order of receipt and transmission of telegraphic messages, and prescribes a penalty for its violation, but which does not attempt to regulate the delivery of messages outside the territory, or of messages sent from without the territory is not a regulation of interstate commerce. Butner v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Okla.), 4 I. C. R. 770.

(vw) Paragraph 543 of the Oklahoma Statutes of 1890, imposing a penalty of $50 upon carriers of messages for certain breaches of duty, does not apply to a failure to deliver a message, but only applies to the failure to receive or transmit messages in the order presented. It is a penal statute, and must be strictly construed. Butner v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 4 I. C. R. 770.

(x) An act of the territorial legislature which regulates the order of recepit and transmission of telegraphic messages, and prescribes a penalty for its violation, but which does not attempt to regulate the delivery of messages outside the territory, or of messages sent from without the territory, is not in conflict with the constitutional provision giving to Congress the right to regulate commerce between the state and territories. Butner v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 4 I. C. R. 770.

(y) A state statute prescribing a penalty for failure to deliver a telegram, where the regulations of the company itself require the delivery, is not unconstitutional as a regulation of interstate commerce. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Tyler, 4 I. C. R. 481.

(z) Where a telegraph company is engaged in both interstate and intrastate business, an ordinance levying an occupation tax on that portion of such business which is carried on wholly within the state is not repugnant to section 8, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, since it in no way interferes with, or regulates, interstate commerce. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Fremont, 5 I. C. R. 46.

(aa) The Georgia statute imposing upon telegraph companies a penalty for failing to transmit messages may be enforced in case of an interstate message, where it is not started towards its destination, and the entire negligence therefor occurs within the territory and jurisdiction of the state. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Michelson (Ga.), 5 I. C. R. 236.

(bb) A telegraph company which has a continuous line between points in the same state over which it might transmit a message received for that purpose, but which passes through another state on the route, cannot claim that the message is interstate commerce and therefore exempt from state authority limiting the charge for transmission, although the company does not in fact transmit the message the whole distance, but delivers it at an intermediate point in another state to another company because its own line for the remainder of the distance is fully occupied by other business. Leavell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 5 I. C. R. 358.

(cc) According to the principle ruled by this court in the cases of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. James, 90 Ga. 254, and Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Michelson, 94 Ga. 436, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 236, there is nothing in that provision of the Constitution of the United States which confers upon Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states, prohibiting the general assembly of this state from enacting a law subjecting telegraph companies to penalties for acts of negligence occurring entirely within the limits of Georgia, although such acts may be committed in dealing with messages which are to be transmitted to points in other states. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Howell, 5 I. C. R. 516.

(dd) The provision of the United States Constitution, conferring upon Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states, does not prohibit the legislature of a state from enacting a law subjecting telegraph companies to penalties for acts of negligence occurring entirely within the limits of the state, although such acts are comitted in dealing with messages to be transmitted to points in other states. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Howell (Ga.), 5 I. C. R. 516.

(ee) The attorney general of the United States in a suit to enforce the duty imposed upon the Pacific railroad companies by Act of Congress of Aug. 7, 1888, § 2, of affording equal facilities to all connecting lines of telegraphs without discrimination, has, if such suit can be maintained, the burden of showing that some telegraph company has placed itself in a position to demand of the railway company the same facilities accorded to other companies, and that such demand has been refused, as it cannot be presumed that the railroad company intends to disregard its duty. Union P. R. Co. v. United States (C. C. App. 8th C.) 4 I. C. R. 705.

(ff) Telegraph messages between points in the same State do not constitute interstate commerce because of the fact that they traverse another State on their route. The court places its decision upon the reasoning in Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 145 U. S. 192, 36 L. ed. 672, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 87. St. of N. Carolina ex rel Ry. Commission v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 7 I. C. C. App. XX.

(gg) A state statute providing a penalty for failure to promptly deliver a telegram is not, even when applied to messages transmitted from another state, repugnant to the commerce clause of the United States Constitution. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Bright 7 I. C. C. XLV.

(hh) Forwarding money by telegraph to another State to be wagered on a horse race to take place in a third State may be made a criminal offense in the State from which the money is sent, although it is lawful to make such wagers in the State in which the wager is made. The court says: The act in question would seem to be in furtherance of the obligation which rests upon the general assembly of Virginia to pass laws to suppress a recognized vice. There is no question that police power must be exercised in subordination to the Constitution of the State and a fortiori that it must not be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States. Now, as the proper discharge of the functions and duties intrusted to the national and State governments is necessary to the highest efficiency of both, it follows that in the development and growth of the two systems thus blended and interwoven, and operating directly, each by its own force, upon the same individuals, wisdom and prudence must prevail in order that the happiest and best results may be achieved. In the case before us, there would seem to be no reason why any antagonism or conflict should result from the exercise, within their appointed limits, of the power on the part of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, and the duty of the State to suppress a recognized offense against good morals. Ex parte Richard Lacy 7 I. C. C. App. LVIII.

(ii) A grant by a railroad company whose line is a military and post road of exclusive franchises along its right of way for telegraph purposes violates U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5263, providing that any telegraph company shall have the right to construct lines of telegraph over any portion of the public domain of the United States and over and along any of the military and post roads and over and across navigable streams of water, although part of the line is through property obtained by purchase or condemnation. The court says that in each case it has been held that the section of the Revised Statutes referred to is in its nature prohibitive as to the force and effect of any contract entered into by a railroad company granting an exclusive privilege and franchise over and along its right of way over and through the public domain to any single telegraph company, where such railroad has acquired its right of way under and by virtue of an act of Congress, or which are or may be declared military post roads by act of Congress; and the court refers to Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 1; Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L ed. 708; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 63 Fed. Rep. 513. Union Trust Company v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Co. (Postal Telegraph Cable Co.), 7 I. C. C. App. LXVI.

(jj) A State statute cannot invalidate a provision in a contract for the transmission of a telegram that notice of claim for damages must be given within sixty days after breach of contract, so far as to apply to messages sent into and received from another State. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Burgess (Tex. Civ. App.), 8 I. C. C. App. XXXIII.

(kk) Restrictions on sending prepaid telegrams or telephone messages, made by a by-law of a live-stock exchange, when these restrictions are merely for the regulation of the business of the members, and do not affect the business of the telegraph company, are not void as regulations of interstate commerce. Hopkins v. U. S. 8 I. C. C. App. XVIII.

(ll) A city ordinance providing for the levying and collecting of a license fee for each telephone instrument operated and maintained by a telephone company and used exclusively within the limits of the city, for which a rental charge is made for local business, does not apply to or affect in any manner the business of the telephone company which is interstate in character, where a separate charge is made by the telephone company upon its patrons for all communications outside the city. Ogden City v. Crossman, 8 I. C. C. App. XXXI.

(mm) A State statute making a telegraph company liable to the party aggrieved for unreasonable delay in delivering a message is not an unlawful interference with interstate commerce as applied to a message sent from a point without to a point within the State over the line of a company which has filed with the Postmaster General its written acceptance of the restrictions and obligations imposed by act of Congress of July 24, 1866. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Mellan 8 I. C. C. App. XLV.

(nn) A State statute imposing a penalty for lack of due diligence in delivering a telegram, if made in a reasonable exercise of the police power of the State, is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce as applied to interstate messages, in the absence of any legislation by Congress on the subject. The court said: The statute in question is of a nature that is in aid of the performance of a duty of the company that would exist in the absence of any such statute, and it is in no wise obstructive of its duty as a telegraph company. Can it be said that the imposition of a penalty for the violation of a duty which the company owed by the general law of the land is a regulation of or obstruction to interstate commerce within the meaning of that clause of the Federal Constitution under discussion? We think not. No tax is laid upon any interstate message, nor is there any regulation of a nature calculated to at all embarrass, obstruct or impede the company in the full and fair performance of its duty as an interstate sender of messages. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. James, 7 I. C. C. LXXI.

(oo) A municipal corporation is not precluded from requiring a telephone company to remove its poles from a main street to an alley, on the ground that the corporation is engaged in interstate commerce, and that such requirement will not be an interference therewith. Mich. Telephone Co. v. City of Charlotte, 8 I. C. C. App. LXXVIII.

(pp) A telegraph company is subject to such reasonable police regulations with reference to domestic transmission of messages as a State may see proper to impose to secure convenience to the people, notwithstanding that it is a foreign corporation, is engaged in interstate transmission of messages, and secured its right to erect its lines along the post roads in the State under an act of Congress. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Miss. R. R. Commission, 7 I. C. C. App. XCIII.

(qq) The commerce clause of the United States Constitution is not infringed by a State statute providing that any telegraph company doing business in the State which fails to transmit a message as provided in the statute shall forfeit $100 to the person sending or wishing to send the message; nor by a statute providing for a like forfeiture where the company fails to deliver the message promptly to the person to whom it is addressed after its arrival at destination, where the regulations of the company require such delivery. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Powell 7 I. C. C. App. CVI.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(rr) The Act to Regulate Commerce expressly authorizes reasonable classification of telephone messages and charges. Toll service differs substantially from local service and may reasonably be rated higher. Malone v. N. Y. Telephone Co., 40 I. C. C. 185, 187, 188.

(ss) Although certain of its provisions are inapplicable, the general principles of the Act, as amended, together with many of its details, extend to telephone and telegraph companies engaged in the transmission of interstate messages. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670.

(tt) The provisions of section 2 in its present form found inapplicable to telephone and telegraph companies. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 673.

(uu) The control of the Commission, after full hearing upon complaint, over the rates, charges and practices of telephone and telegraph companies is and has been regarded, by the Commission, as being almost as complete and comprehensive as it is over the rates and practices of the several other classes of carriers that are subject to its jurisdiction. No embarrassment or difficulty has been found in applying the general provisions of the Act, as well as many of its details, to common carriers serving the public in the transmission of messages over telephone and telegraph lines between Interstate points. Under section 20 the Commission has also prescribed systems of accounts for interstate telegraph and telephone companies, which all such companies are now observing; under the provisions of that section they also file annual and other reports with the Commission. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 673.

(vv) Section 15 requires carriers to adopt, conform to, and observe, for the future, the regulations and practices prescribed by the Commission as just, fair, and reasonable. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 673.

(ww) Telephone and telegraph companies observe system of accounts and file annual reports prescribed by the Commission under section 20. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 673.

(xx) But some of the provisions of the Act, notably sections 2 and 4, that were neither modified nor amplified but were left unchanged by the amendatory legislation of June 18, 1910, have been found inapplicable in their present form to telephone and telegraph companies. Section 6 is also inapplicable, in large part at least. It deals with the form and manner of filing, publishing and posting the rates, charges, rules and regulations of common carriers; but on its face section 6 relates only to carriers engaged or participating "in the transportation of passengers or property," its terms are too definite to permit the Commission to extend its application by construction to telephone and telegraph companies; and, although the rates, charges, rules and regulations of such companies may be stated briefly perhaps, and with less expense, than the rates and regulations of any other class of carriers under the Commission's jurisdiction the Commission has felt, as stated in its annual reports to the Congress for 1911 and subsequent years, that no authority has been given to the Commission under section 6 to require such companies to comply with its provisions when fixing and establishing their rates and charges. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 673, 674.

(yy) Section 6 does not apply to telephone and telegraph companies. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 674.

(zz) Under the Act, as has many times been said, the right to initiate their rates rests with the carriers. As section 6 does not apply to telephone and telegraph companies, it may well be said that in a special sense and to a special extent such companies do initiate their charges. But it has not been thought or even suggested that a telephone or telegraph company, after having fixed and established a charge for a particular service, or a regulation pertaining to or affecting the rate or service, may depart from the charge, or from the regulation affecting the charge, at its discretion or until the charge or regulation has been lawfully changed by it. The courts have often said that the vital feature of the Act to regulate commerce is to secure equality and uniformity as to all persons availing themselves of the services of common carriers and to destroy any favoritism by such carriers among those requiring their services. This principle, founded in common right as well as in common justice, runs all through the Act and through the supplementary legislation enacted in aid of the enforcement of the Act. It can not therefore be doubted, that even though section 6 is inapplicable to telephone and telegraph companies, their rates and charges are nevertheless binding upon such companies, when they have lawfully been fixed and offered to the public; and the rates and charges must be observed together with the rules and practices affecting the rates and charges until they have lawfully been changed either voluntarily or under orders of the Commission. Having been declared to be common carriers, and having been subjected to the general provisions of the Act, it is manifest that telephone and telegraph companies may not lawfully accept or exact of one person either less or more than they demand of another person for the same service. To secure such uniformity in their dealing with the public was doubtless one of the purposes of the Congress in subjecting telephone and telegraph companies to the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce; and the Commission thinks the language used by the Congress is doing this was sufficient to accomplish the end sought. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 674, 675.

(3a) Congress subjected the telephone and telegraph companies to the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce to secure uniformity in their dealing with the public. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 675.

(3b) Telephone and telegraph compan observe system of accounts and file annual reports prescribed by the Commission under section 20; but that part of the section 20, known as the Carmack Amendment, held inapplicable. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 673, 677.

(3c) Lack of uniformity among the courts, when dealing with rates and rules for transmission of interstate messages, may explain the legislation by which the Congress has put all telephone and telegraph companies engaged in interstate transmission of messages under jurisdiction of Commission. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 677.

(3d) Congress, by amendment to the Act, has recognized the three classes of messages, such classification when lawfully fixed and offered to the public are binding upon the telegraph companies as well as upon those who avail themselves of the service. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 678.

(3f) Telegraph companies have here the direct authority and sanction of Congress to classify their messages into repeated and unrepeated and to charge different rates for each. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 679.

(3g) Congress, by the language used in the amendatory Act of 1910, has manifested a definite intention to place under the jurisdiction and control of this Commission the rates and practices of interstate telegraph companies, as well as the rules, regulations, conditions and restrictions affecting their interstate rates. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 679.

(3h) The Commission has authority to require a telegraph company, in imposing charges for transmitting messages received from cable companies, to avoid discrimination as between competing cable companies. Commercial Cable Co. v. W. U. Teleg. Co., 45 I. C. C. 33, 39.

(3i) Telephone and telegraph companies are common carriers engaged in the transmission of intelligence and, as to their interstate business, are subject to the provisions of the Act. Private Wire Contracts, 50 I. C. C. 731, 757.

(3j) The fact that in Morse service the lessees furnish their own operators does not divest respondents of their status of common carriers as to messages sent over the private wires. Private Wire Contracts, 50 I. C. C. 740, 759.

(3k) However it is beyond the Commission's power to require the telegraph companies and the Bell Company to increase their charges for private-wire service. Private Wire Contracts, 50 I. C. C. 731, 765.

(3l) The provisions of section 4 of the act not applicable to the transmission of telegraph messages. Whitaker v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 59 I. C. C. 286, 298.

(3m) By the Interstate Commerce Act, and section 2, 12, which make that act applicable to interstate telegraph business and make interstate telegraph companies common carriers of messages, who are required to publish their rates and regulations subject to control by the Interstate Commerce Commission, Congress occupied the whole field of regulating interstate telegraph business, and therefore Const. Okl. art. 23, §9, making void any contract stipulating for notice or demand other than such as provided by law, as a condition precedent to liability, does not invalidate a clause in a contract for the sending of a telegram from the point in Oklahoma to a point in Kansas, which provides that the company shall not be liable for damages unless the claim is presented in writing within 60 days after the message is filed with the company for transmission. Gardner v. Western Union Telegraph So., 231 Fed. 405.

(3n) The course by which a message was transmitted in the ordinary course of business by a telegraph company between two points within the state determines its character as an interstate or intrastate transaction, and it is interstate where it actually was sent through a portion of another state, though it was not necessary to send it across the state boundaries. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Speight, 41 Sup. Ct. 11.

(3o) Where the New York Stock Exchange agreed to furnish quotations to telegraph companies and they were authorized to furnish the same to subscribers subject to discontinuance on objection by the exchange, the distribution of such quotations in Massachusetts constituted interstate commerce, even though the quotations were sent in the ordinary course of telegraphy in Morse code to a point in Massachusetts where they were translated into English and transmitted by an operator to the tickers in the offices of the subscribers. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Foster, 38 Sup. Ct. 438.

(3p) The question whether a regulation by an interstate telegraph company requiring notice of claim to be given within 60 days is reasonable is for the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine. Gardner v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 231 Fed. 405.

(3q) Permits granted by the Secretary of the Interior to a power company to construct and maintain an electric power transmission line across a certain Indian reservation, under Act. Feb. 15, 1901 (Comp. St. §4946), authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant such permission, and making the permission revocable in the discretion of the Secretary or his successor, and to construct telephone lines across the reservation, under Act March 3, 1901, §3, under which the company had constructed and had for many years maintained a costly plant, were not terminated by the issuance of patents to persons who had made homestead filings on land within the reservation, across which the power and telephone lines had been constructed with notice of the existence of such transmission and telephone lines, in the absence of revocation of permits by the Secretary of the Interior. Swendig v. Washington Water Power Co., 281 Fed. 900.

(3r) That transmission of intelligence by wire is commerce, either state or interstate, is definitely settled and no longer questioned. W. U. Telegraph Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 464, 26 L. ed. 1067; Western Union Telephone Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 7 Sup. Ct. 1126; 30 L. Ed. 1187; W. U. Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 654, 16 Sup. Ct. 934, 40 L. Ed, 1106; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Tyler, 90 Va. 299, 18 S. E. 281, 44 Am. St. Rep. 910; Reed v. W. U. Tel. Co., 56 Mo. App. 173; Ames v. Kirby, 71 N. J. Law 445, 59 Atl. 559; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Hughes, 104 Va. 246, 51 S. E. 227; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Bolling, (Va., 1917), 91 S. E. 154.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Power to regulate interstate rates, and the like, as affecting railroads and telegraph companies which are engaged in interstate commerce, has been conferred by Congress upon the Interstate Commerce Commission and such control cannot be interfered with by state laws. Dunning v. Western Union Telegraph Co., (Nebr., 1922), 187 N. W. 890.

(b) Until the Interstate Commerce Commission, through pending investigations, shows amount reserved for depreciation by telephone company to be excessive, prudence would dictate that the judgment of the company on that point should be permitted to stand; the percentage allowed for depreciation by the company not being unusual. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. v. City of Ft. Smith 294 Fed. 102.

IV. LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES.

§4. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Judicial notice will be taken of the fact that there is no inherent difficulty in stringing several independent lines of telegraph on the same poles. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 4 I. C. R. 705.

(b) The duty enjoined upon the Union Pacific Railroad Company by Act of Congress of Aug. 7, 1888, §1, of operating by itself alone through its own corporate officers its telegraph lines, may and should be enforced by mandamus if in fact violated. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 4 I. C. R. 705.

(c) Damages for mental pain and suffering alone, occasioned by the negligence of a telegraph company in failing to deliver a message announcing the death of a relative, cannot be recovered. Butner v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Okla.) 4 I. C. R. 770.

(d) The sendee of a telegraphic message cannot maintain an action against the telegraph company for neglect, delay, or nondelivery of the message, in the absence of showing that it was sent by his agent or was sent for his benefit, and that the carrier had actual or constructive notice that it was so sent for the benefit of the sendee. Butner v. Western P. Teleg. Co. (Okla.) 4 I. C. R. 770.

(ef) The terms "carelessly, wrongfully, and negligently failed and neglected" to deliver a message, used in a complaint, import ordinary and simple negligence, and nothing more. Butner v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 4 I. C. R. 770.

(g) A state statute prescribing a penalty for failure to deliver a telegram, where the regulations of the company itself require the delivery, is not unconstitutional as a regulation of interstate commerce. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Tyler (Va.) 4 I. C. R. 481.

(h) A person to whom a telegram is addressd can maintain an action for a penalty on account of failure to deliver it promptly, under Va. Code, §1292, expressly providing that the forfeiture shall be to him or to the person sending the dispatch. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Tyler, 4 I. C. R. 481.

(i) Failure to comply with special contract terms touching presentation of claims or making demand against a telegraph company for failure to transmit a message does not prevent a recovery of the statutory penalty, where the default sued for is failure to start the message. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Michelson (Ga.), 5 I. C. R. 236.

(j) A telegraph company receiving a prepaid telegram in Georgia for transmission to a point in another state, which was never delivered to the addressee, has the burden of showing that it was transmitted from the Georgia office with due diligence, and that nondelivery was due to default or some other cause arising beyond the limits of the state, in order to escape liability for the statutory penalty for negligence in transmission. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Howell (Ga.), 5 I. C. R. 516.

(k) Where a message, the charges upon which were duly paid in advance, was received by a telegraph company, at one of its offices in this state, for transmission to a point in another state, and was never delivered to the person to whom it was addressed, it is incumbent on the company, in order to escape liability for the statutory penalty for negligence in transmission from the Georgia office, to show that the message was in fact transmitted from that office with due diligence, and that the nondelivery to the sendee was due to some default or other cause arising beyond the limits of this state Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Howell, 5 I. C. R. 516.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(l) The sender of a telegram may more nearly estimate the possible damage in the case of error in transmission or delay than can the telegraph company. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 676.

(m) The so-called Carmack Amendment, which is part of section 20, inapplicable to telephone and telegraph companies. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 677.

(n) The silence of the Carmack Amendment with respect to telegraph companies and their liability for errors in the transmission of interstate telegraph messages can not be controlling with respect to the Commission's jurisdiction, if under other provisions of the Act the matters in controversy are brought within its cognizance. Unrepeated Message Case, 44 I. C. C. 670, 678.

(o) A general investigation has been made of the practice of the telegraph companies subject to the interstate commerce act in adjusting claims for damages arising from errors or delays in the transmission or delivery, or, from nondelivery, of interstate messages, and the reasonableness of their rules limiting liability on the several classes of messages, dependent upon the rates paid. The telegraph companies offer the sender his choice of three classes of messages, unrepeated, repeated, and valued, with different rates for each class, dependent upon the service to be performed and the liability to be assumed. In an unrepeated message it is stipulated that the company shall not be liable for mistakes, delays, or nondelivery beyond the amount received for sending it. In a repeated class of messages, the rate is one and one-half times the unrepeated message, and companies agree to assume liability to the extent of 50 times the rate paid, with a maximum liability in the case of the Western Union of $50. For the valued message, the rate charged is the repeated rate plus a surcharge of one-tenth of one per cent of the valuation. Western Union provides for limitation of liability of $50 and by Postal Company of repeated messages, 50 times the repeated rate. It is shown by the record that the practice of the Western Union in the settlement of damage claims is not in accord with the rules it has established, but is founded on a policy in which business considerations predominate. The practice is to adjust claims contrary to the rules, not only in the jurisdictions which heretofore have declined to sanction their validity but also in jurisdictions where they have been expressly upheld. It is frankly admitted that business considerations and equity dictate its policy. The policy of the Postal is the reverse of that of the Western Union. It is clear that the policy of the Western Union is contrary to both the spirit and the terms of the interstate commerce act and must therefore be condemned. There has been no change in the practice of the Western Union for 50 years. A repeated telegram differs from the ordinary telegram in that it is repeated back at each stage of transmission from point of origin to destination. Repetition of a message is a certain guard against errors in transmission, but is no protection against delayed delivery. The charge for an unrepeated message includes the cost incident to its receipt, transmission, and delivery, and a profit to the company. The repetition is but one additional element of the total service, and its cost therefore, a relatively small proportion of the original cost, while the charge is 50 per cent higher. The valued message appears to be of no practical use in the great majority of instances, because of the impossibility of anticipating what default, if any, there may be in the service and thus determining in advance what loss may ensue. So far as a large class of messages might be eliminated, as it never has been and probably never will be used to any considerable extent. The present record amply demonstrates the need for a substantial revision of respondents rules concerning their liability on interstate messages. The record herein offers no sound reason why telegraph companies should longer be permitted to avoid liability for their errors or negligence or be permitted to limit their liability for errors of negligence. HELD, present rules unreasonable; that the maximum liability in the case of a message for the transmission of which the unrepeated rate is charged should be not less than $500, and for a message received for transmission at the repeated rate, $5,000, which limitation the Commission finds to be reasonable as parts of the respective rates. Provision should be made for the transmission of valued messages under a liability limited to the value stated in writing by the sender of the message at the time it is offered for transmission upon payment of the repeated rate plus one-tenth of one per cent of the stated value in excess of $5,000. Limitations of liability in connection with the transmission of telegraph messages, 61 I. C. C. 541.

(p) Failure to perform service limits recovery to value of service only where there were no special circumstances tending to show that a telephone company was chargeable with knowledge of facts from which the likelihood of special damages should be inferred, and, in an action by a subscriber for damages on account of being unable to summon the fire department when his buildings took fire after interruption of service of which the company had timely notice, the subscriber can recover no more than the ordinary value of the service for which he paid; there being no recovery for the results of the unforseen situation which thereafter arose. Barrett v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., (N. H. 1922), 117 Atl. 264.

(q) A stipulation by a telegraph company limiting its liability in case of an unrepeated message to only the amount paid for its transmission, is valid under the Interstate Commerce Act. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Esteve Bros., 41 Sup. Ct. 584.

VI. CONTRACTS BETWEEN COMPANIES.

§6. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The condition of the business of the respective parties to a contract for a telegraph line on a railroad right of way several years after the agreement was made cannot control in determining the purpose of the parties in making it, nor its true interpretation. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 4 I. C. R. 705.

(b) The United States government as the holder of a lien upon the Pacific railroads and telegraph lines is entitled, under the Act of Congress of Aug. 7, 1888, to maintain a bill in equity to have its rights and equities in and to the telegraph property along the right of way of the Union Pacific Railway Company judicially ascertained, and to have the rights of other persons and corporations therein also ascertained and adjudicated, and, incidental thereto, to have set aside and annulled all provisions of contracts that are unlawful and in any manner impeach the security of the United States, cloud its title, or prejudice its rights. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 4 I. C. R. 705.

(c) The privilege granted to the United States Telegraph Company by Act of Congress of July 2, 1864, to enter into arrangements with the Pacific railroad companies for the construction and maintenance of a line of telegraph upon the railroad right of way, in discharge of the obligation of the railroad companies to construct and maintain such a line, must be presumed to have been conferred with full knowledge of the charter powers of the grantee to consolidate with other corporations engaged in like business, and is not personal so as to become lost by the merger of such telegraph company with the Western Union Telegraph Company, but passed to and became vested in the consolidated company. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 4 I. C. R. 705.

(d) The Pacific Railroad acts, requiring the railway companies to erect and maintain a line of telegraph along their right of way, do not impose upon the company the duty of maintaining a separate line of poles upon which to string its wires, where a telegraph company lawfully in possession of a line of telegraph on the railroad right of way, and operating the same for commercial and other purposes, by contract with the railway company provides that the latter may maintain upon the former's poles wires devoted to its exclusive use, and the latter has offices at convenient points and operates expressly required to send over such wires all such messages of a governmental or commercial character as are directed to be sent, and the right to string such additional wires as may be deemed essential or convenient. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 4 I. C. R. 705.

(e) The provisions of the contract of July 1, 1881 between the Union Pacific Railway Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company, giving the latter access to the former's station-houses, with some of its wires and the right to avail itself of the service of the employes of the railway company, at most afford to the telegraph company some facilities for competing with the railway company in the matter of transacting a commercial business, which it would not enjoy if compelled to maintain independent offices, and do not amount to a transfer or surrender of the telegraphic franchise of the railway company, which, notwithstanding them, retains its right and capacity to do a commercial business. Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 4 I. C. R. 705.

(f) The provisions of the contract of July 1, 1881, between the Union Pacific Railway Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company looking to the exclusive right of the latter to maintain a line of telegraph upon the railroad right of way, do not render the contract voidable on the grounds of public policy, as they do not bind the railway company absolutely to exclude other telegraph companies from the right of way, or withhold all facilities for the construction of competing lines, as they provide for the grant of such exclusive right only to the extent that the railway company may legally do so. Union P. R. Co. v. United States (C. C. App. 8th C.) 4 I. C. R. 705.

(g) The privilege granted to the United States Telegraph Company by Act of Congress of July 2, 1864, to enter into arrangements with the Pacific railroad companies for the construction and maintenance of a line of telegraph upon the railroad right of way, in discharge of the obligation of the railroad companies to construct and maintain such a line, must be presumed to have been conferred with full knowledge of the charter powers of the grantee to consolidate with other corporations engaged in like business, and is not personal so as to become lost by the merger of such telegraph company with the Western Union Telegraph Company, but passed to and became vested in the consolidated company. Union P. R. Co. v. United States (C. C. App. 8th C.) 4 I. C. R. 705.

(h) The privilege given the United States Telegraph Company to erect and maintain a line of telegraph upon the rights of way of the Pacific railroad companies by Act of Congress of July 2, 1864, providing that such telegraph company "and their associates" may construct a line of telegraph between the Missouri River and San Francisco, and authorizing such railroad companies to enter into an agreement with it for the transfer of its line to the line of the road in fulfillment of the obligation of the railroad companies to construct and maintain a line of telegraph,—is not personal, but may be shared by another corporation becoming lawfully associated with the United States Telegraph Company in the work of constructing a transcontinental line,—especially one with which such telegraph company became lawfully united by the process of consolidation. Union P. R. Co. v. United States (C. C. App. 8th C.) 4 I. C. R. 705.

(i) The United States government as the holder of a lien upon the Pacific railroads and telegraph lines is entitled, under the Act of Congress of Aug. 7, 1888, to maintain a bill in equity to have its rights and equities in and to the telegraph property along the right of way of the Union Pacific Railway Company judicially ascertained, and to have the rights of other persons and corporations therein also ascertained and adjudicated, and, incidental thereto, to have set aside and annulled all provisions of contracts that are unlawful and that in any manner impeach the security of the United States, cloud its title, or prejudice its rights. Union P. R. Co. v. United States (C. C. App. 8th C.), 4 I. C. R. 705.

(j) The Pacific Railroad Acts, requiring the railway companies to erect and maintain a line of telegraph along their right of way, do not impose upon the company the duty of maintaining a separate line of poles upon which to string its wires, where a telegraph company lawfully in possession of a line of telegraph on the railroad right of way, and operating the same for commercial and other purposes, by contract with the railway company provides that the latter may maintain upon the former's poles wires devoted to its exclusive use, and the latter has offices at convenient points, and operators expressly required to send over such wires all such messages of a governmental or commercial character as are directed to be sent, and the right to string such additional wires as may be deemed essential or convenient. §1. Jurisdiction of Commission.

(a) In proceedings involving issuance of an order concerning the publication and enforcement of transportation or terminal charges, rules and regulations, investigation is useful to enable the Commission to determine what, if any, administrative order should be directed to defendant carriers, and whether such order should be made to apply to all carriers subject to the regulating statute. American Warehousemen's Asso. v. I. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 556, 560.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Terminal tracks are a part of the railroad which is subject to the provisions of the Act and to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and in exercising the powers vested in the Commission to establish through routes and joint rates the terminals stand, to all practical intents and purposes, in the same light as any other part of the railroad. I. & S. W. Ry. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 42 I. C. C. 389, 393.

(c) By section 1 all terminal facilities of every kind used or necessary in the transportation or delivery of property, moving as defined therein, are included in the term "railroad" as used in the Act. Guyton & Harrington Mule Co. v. L. & N. R. R., 50 I. C. C. 546, 549.

(ca) Paragraph (4), section 3 of the act, under which the commission may require the use of one carrier's terminal facilities by another is satisfied by a showing that it is in the public interest and that it would be practicable for the terminal carrier to switch between its industries and the line carrier. Interpretation given expression and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. required to extend the use of its terminal facilities at Hastings, Minn., to the C. B & Q. R. R. Hastings Commercial Club v. C., M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 69 I. C. C., 489.

(cb) The object of that part of section 3 of the act which relates to the interchange of traffic, between connecting carriers, was to make more flexible the use of existing terminal facilities, and while the power granted the commission is to be exercised upon careful consideration of each situation, it is but an extension of the general principle that the interest of the public imposes important qualifications on the manner of use of the property employed in the carrier serivce. Hastings Commercial Club v. C., M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 69 I. C. C. 489, 493.

(cd) Where Congress had formerly safeguarded the carrier in the exclusive use of its terminals it now recognizes that there is a broader interest than that of the individual carrier whose property rights happened to be involved, viz, that of the public. Hastings Commercial Club, v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 69 I. C. C. 493.

(d) It is apparent that the limitation put upon the authority of the Commission to establish through routes and joint rates does not apply where it finds it to be in the public interest to require one carrier to afford another carrier the use of its terminals. Port Arthur Chamber of Comerce v. T. & F. S. Ry., 73 I. C. C. 361, 363.

(e) In determining what is "in the public interest" in a given case, as antecedent to the affirmative exercise of the broad grant of power, giving the commission the right, when in the public interest, to allow one carrier to use the terminals of another, the commission must take into consideration not only the interests of the particular shippers located at or near the terminal involved but also the interests of the carriers and of the general public. York Mfrs. Asso. v. P. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 40, 49.

(f) In view of the parenthetical clause in paragraph (4) of section 15 of the act, the limitation put upon the commission's authority to establish through routes and joint rates does not apply where the commission finds it to be in the public interest to require one carrier to afford another carrier the use of its terminals. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. F. S. Co., 73 I. C. C., 361, 363.

(g) The interstate commerce act formerly provided that section 3 should "not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business." As amended by the transportation act, 1920 that proviso was omitted and a paragraph inserted under which the commission may require the use of one carrier's terminal facilities by another when in the public interest, where it is practicable and does not substantially impair the ability of the terminal carrier to handle its own business. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C., 367, 370.

(h) The Commission may require the use of one carriers terminal facilities by another when in the public interest, where it is practicable and does not substantially impair the ability of the terminal carrier to handle its own business. Team Track switching at Argentine 73 I. C. C. 367, 370.

(i) Paragraph (4) of section 3 of the act, in substance, authorizes the commission when found "to be in public interest and practicable," to require joint use of terminals at reasonable compensation to carrier owning such terminals. Authority of commission under this paragraph is dependent upon showing of public interest. Miller Paper Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 314, 317.

(j) A track connecting the lines of two carriers within a city for the interchange of traffic is not excepted from the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission by Interstate Commerce Act, providing that the authority of the commission, conferred by previous paragraphs of the section, shall not extend to spur, industrial terminal, switching, or side tracks located wholly within one state. People v. Public Service Commission, (Ind. 1922), 135 N. E. 195.

II. DUTY TO PERFORM TERMINAL SERVICE.

§2. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) When a new railroad makes a physical connection with an old railroad, at a point other than the established yard or depot of the old road, but neither company has any yard, station, depot, or ground, at the point of connection; nor any buildings, sheds, or platforms there, for the reception and accommodation of freights, to be handled and exchanged at that point; nor any clerks or employes, stationed there for the inspection of cars, reception of freights, etc.; an interchange of traffic at such a point cannot be made in a proper and convenient way to either company; and no authority is conferred upon the Commission, or upon this court, to compel the old company to provide at said point of connection the same or equal facilities, which it had previously provided at its regular, established, yards and depots, Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(b) The second clause of the third section, provides that "Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities, for the interchange of traffic, between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding and delivering of passengers and property, to and from their several lines, and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges, between such connecting lines, etc." but neither this, nor any other provision of the Law, requires of the common carrier of interstate commerce, the duty of either forming new connections, or of establishing new stations for the reception and delivery of freights. The Act to Regulate Commerce deals with such common carriers as it finds them, and leaves to them full discretion as to what extensions they will make of their lines, the connections they may form, and the yards and depots they may choose to establish. When railroad companies, in compliance with their charter obligations, have provided themselves with convenient, suitable, and ample, stations and depots, for the accommodation of their business, the law imposes upon them no duty, either to the public or other railroad lines, of making new stations, yards, or depots, even though such additional constructions might be for the convenience of the public, or of other carriers—Congress has certainly not undertaken, even if it possessed the power, to deal with such matters. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(c) Where a new railroad makes a physical connection with an old railroad, at a point other than the established yard, or depot of the old road, and there are no facilities at said connection, for receiving, forwarding, or delivering freight, individual shippers, or consignees of freight, have no right to require the old company to receive or deliver their traffic, at such point of connection; and the new company, or other companies using its tracks, cannot properly demand, or require of the old company, to concede to it, or them, rights and facilities, which the old company is under no obligation, or duty, to grant, or provide for individual owners or shippers of interstate commerce. This would be conferring upon common carriers engaged in transporting interstate traffic, rights and privileges superior to those intended for the benefit of such commerce itself. The law was not designed to advance the interests of carriers; but was intended for the benefit and advantage of the commerce they transported; and the provisions of the Act all look to that as its object and purpose. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(d) It is of no importance to the question involved that after freight carried by petitioner's road reached High Bridge, in New York, its delivery from that point to the pier, which constituted the terminus of the carriage, was made by an agent or contractor employed for the purpose. Petitioner, being carrier for the whole distance, was entitled to the prileges given by the Statute accordingly. New York & N. R. Co. v. N. Y. & N. E. R. Co. 3 I. C. R. 542.

(e) A common carrier is not in every case under legal compulsion to furnish the same terminal facilities for all descriptions of traffic; it is sufficient if reasonable provision is made in this regard, and what is reasonable in a given instance depends largely upon the conditions and surroundings of the particular locality. Palmer's Dock Hay & Produce Board of Trade v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 9 I. C. C. 61.

(f) The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, whose terminal in Brooklyn is connected with its railroad terminus in Jersey City, by means of water carriage across New York harbor, does not unjustly discriminate against hay in carloads by discontinuing "track delivery" for hay in carloads at its station in Brooklyn, though it continued to make such delivery for other railroad traffic, where such action was taken to relieve a state of chronic congestion at the Brooklyn station, resulting largely from consignments of hay thereto, and where it still continued to deliver carload hay alongside the wharves in Brooklyn as it does within the lighterage districts in New York. Palmer's Dock Hay & Produce Board of Trade v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 9 I. C. C. 61.

(g) A carrier may not reasonably be required to accept and deliver free of charge traffic moved by its competitor. Laning-Harris Coal & Grain Co. v. A. T. & S. F. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 479.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(h) It is the duty of carriers to make reasonable effort to provide adequate terminal and other facilities. The reasonableness of the effort must be measured by the circumstances and conditions affecting the undertaking. Lighterage and Storage Regulations at New York, 35 I. C. C. 47, 53.

(j) Under Interstate Act 1887, §3 (Comp. St. §8565), requiring equal facilities for interchange of traffic, and Transportation Act 1920, §405 (Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, §8565), authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to require the use of terminal facilities of one carrier by another, if it is in the public interest and practicable to do so, where it was not shown to be in the public interest and practicable to do so, where it was not shown to be in the public interest to require the use of terminal facilities of one railroad by another, the Commission could not order the practice in a certain zone of each carrier using the other's tracks as if they were common property extended to other parts of the city. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. United States. 295 Fed. 523.

(k) Where the practice has grown up between two railroads of using each other's tracks as common property within a certain zone in a city, the industries located along the tracks of either company in such zone are in law considered as being located on the individual tracks of both companies, and the industries outside the zone as being located on the tracks of one of the companies only, the industries within the zone in legal effect not being similarly situated to those outside the zone, and the advantages enjoyed by them were not an undue or unreasonable preference, under Interstate Commerce Act 1887, §3 (Comp. St. §8565)

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. United States. 295 Fed. 523.

(i) The use of tracks or terminal facilities referred to in section 3 is not limited to physical entry upon such tracks or terminal facilities by the power, equipment, or employees of another carrier. Louisville Board of Trade v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C. 679, 690.

Co., (La. 1919), 81 So. 314.

§3. Duty to allow use.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The fact that a railroad company interchanges traffic with certain railroads, at its regular established yard or depot (where it has provided all reasonable proper, and equal facilities for that purpose), and refuses to interchange traffic with a new road, at a point of connection where no such facilities exist, does not constitute any "discrimination," or any "undue, or unreasonable preference or advantage," in favor of the railroads, with which such interchange is made. The third section of the Act does not mean that whatever facilities a railroad company may furnish, or provide, for the interchange of business with connecting lines, at any one place (such as its regularly established and properly equipped depot), it is bound to provide for any, and all other railroads, at such other and different points as they may select in making their connection. On the contrary said section means, that where a railroad subject to the provisions of the Act has provided and established, at any given place, its facilities, in the shape of yards, stations, and depots, for the interchange of traffic, or for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property, and there affords such facilities to some of its connecting lines, it shall not deny to other connecting lines at that point, the same proper, reasonable, and equal facilities. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. C. R. 351.

(b) It by no means follows because certain facilities for the interchange of freight are furnished by a railroad to another connecting line or lines at one point, upon certain terms, conditions and considerations, and where ample accommodations for the transaction of such business are provided and maintained at the joint expense of the companies using them, that another company, making a physical connection with the road (furnishing such facilities) at another, different, and distant place, is entitled to demand at said different point of connection, the same, or equal facilities. The company making the physical connection, at a point other than that at which the established road has already provided its facilities, and conducts its interchange, with other connecting lines, cannot demand or require an interchange at such point of physical connection, without first furnishing at such point, reasonable, and proper facilities, for the interchange sought. It cannot rely upon the terminal facilities at another point of the road, with which it has formed the physical connection; nor can it compel the road, with which the connection is made, to join with it, in the expense of providing at that point the facilities necessary and proper for the interchange. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(c) No provision of the Act confers equal facilities upon connecting lines, under dissimilar circumstances and conditions. On the contrary, even as to interstate commerce itself, the distinction is recognized throughout the law, between discriminations and preferences which are just and reasonable, and those which are unjust and unreasonable, according as they are made, or given, under similar or dissimilar circumstances and conditions. All discriminations and preferences are not forbidden, or made unlawful; but only such as are unjust, or undue, or unreasonable. In each, and every case, therefore, the question whether discrimination is unjust, or a preference is undue, or unreasonable, either as to the common carrier, or the commerce it may transport, involves a consideration of the circumstances and conditions, under which such discrimination, or preference, is made or given. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(d) An interchange of traffic at a new point of connection between railroads, where there are no buildings, sheds, platforms, or other facilities, for the proper care, protection, and handling of freight, and no clerks, or employes, stationed there to look after, and attend to the business, cannot possibly be carried on, without requiring the old road to concede the use of its track and terminal facilities to the new road, or without imposing upon the old road the trouble, inconvenience, and expense of handling the traffic interchanged between them; and neither the Commission, nor this court, has any authority to require the old road to concede the use of its tracks and terminal facilities, in order to accomplish an interchange of traffic; nor can this court, or the Commission, impose upon the old road the duty of making such interchange, at its own expense, over its own tracks, with its own engines, at its own yard, and with its own employes. Such interchanges between railroads are arranged by mutual agreements, fixing the compensation to be paid for services, and for the use of improvements, and providing for "prorating," the expense incident to such interchange. But if the parties cannot themselves agree upon such terms, neither this court nor the Commission can make an agreement for them, under the existing law, and under circumstances such as exist in this case. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. 2 I. C. R. 351.

(e) The provision in the third section section of the Act, to the effect that a common carrier shall not be required "to give the use of its tracks and terminal facilities, to another carrier engaged in like business," is a limitation upon, or qualification of, the duty of affording all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities, for the interchange, or for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering, of traffic to, from, and between, connecting lines; and therefore it is left open to any common carrier to contract, or enter into arrangements, for the use of its tracks and terminal facilities, with one or more connecting lines, without subjecting itself to the charge of giving an undue, or unreasonable preference or advantage to such lines, or of discriminating against other carriers who are not parties to, or included in such arrangements. No common carrier can, therefore, justly complain of another, that it is not allowed the use of that other's tracks and terminal facilities, upon the same or like terms and conditions, which, under private contract or agreement, are conceded to other lines. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(f) The provision of section 3 of the Act of Congress of Feb. 4, 1887, that common carriers shall afford equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their lines, but need not give the use of their tracks and terminal facilities to other carriers, does not affect a contract made by a railroad upon being given permission to use the streets of a city for its tracks, that it will pass the cars of other railway companies over its tracks when necessary to reach their customers' warehouses, and that it will not exceed a certain rate in its charges for switching. State of Iowa v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 425.

(g) The tracks and terminal facilities of a railroad company can be used by a connecting company for the exchange of interstate freight only with the consent of the former. Anthony Salt Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Com.), 4 I. C. R. 537.

(h) No common carrier can justly complain of another because it is not allowed the use of the tracks and terminal facilities of such other in the same manner and to the same extent a third carrier is. Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (C. C. W. D. Ark.), 4 I. C. R. 537.

(i) The fact that one connecting railway company has a contract for the interchange of interstate freight which involves the use of the receiving railway's tracks and terminal facilities will not authorize a court of equity to compel the receiving railway to grant a like contract or concession to another connecting company. Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 537.

(j) A connecting railway company desiring an interchange of passengers and freight cannot demand as a matter of right an interchange of freight at the point of physical connection without first furnishing at such point reasonable and proper facilities for the interchange sought and cannot rely upon the terminal facilities at another point or compel the receiving railway to go to any expense of providing proper facilities at the point of physical connection. Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 537.

(k) The provision of §3 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, that "this shall not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business," refers to facilities for interchanging traffic between connecting lines. Chicago Fire Proof Covering Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 316.

(l) Defendant, a common carrier of interstate commerce, is not in every case under legal compulsion to furnish the same terminal facilities for all descriptions of traffic; it is sufficient if reasonable provision is made and depends largely upon the conditions and surroundings of the particular locality. Palmer's Dock Hay & Produce Board of Trade v. Pennsylvania R. R., 9 I. C. C. 61, 66.

(m) The Act in specific terms provides that one carrier shall not be obliged to give the use of its tracks and terminals to another carrier engaged in like business. The defendant company could not deliver cars to any industry except upon its own rails without the consent and cooperation of the carrier or carriers upon whose rails the industry sought to be reached is located or via whose rails it is reached. Laning Harris Coal & Grain Co. v. A. T. & S. F. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 479, 480.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(n) It is the duty of carriers to make reasonable effort to provide adequate terminal and other facilities. Lightrage and Storage Regulations at New York, 35 I. C. C. 47, 53.

(o) If the law requires that terminals be opened, no showing of prospective loss can deter an order to that effect. Louisville Board of Trade v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C., 679, 688.

(p) The proviso in section 3 protects the carrier that has secured and built up valuable terminals, without which its railroad would be of little use, against having those terminals utilized by a competing carrier that has not provided itself with adequate terminals and that desires to thus secure the line haul which the carrier owning the terminals is prepared to perform and which the other carrier cannot secure unless it can have the use of the terminals of its competitor. Louisville Board of Trade v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C., 679, 689, 690.

(q) The use of tracks or terminal facilities referred to in section 3 is not limited to physical entry upon such tracks or terminal facilities by the power, equipment, or employees of another carrier. Louisville Board of Trade v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C. 679, 690.

(r) The use by a shipper of a carrier's yard and station property as a place of business to which he may invite the general public to come and make purchases directly from the car is not a service of transportation, nor does such a practice affect the service of transportation offered by a carrier to the public. On the contrary, it stands wholly apart from any duty the carrier owes to a shipper; and in forbidding the practice for the future the carrier is simply asserting that control over its property, as a private property, which the courts have held it enjoys, as fully as the private individual, with respect to "those of the general public who have no occasion to use it for purposes of transportation." The Car Peddling Case, 45 I. C. C. 410, 502.

(s) Section 3 protects the carrier which has secured and built up terminals against having those terminals utilized by a competing carrier that has not provided itself with adequate terminals and that desires thus to secure a line haul which the carrier owning the terminals is prepared to perform and which the other carrier cannot secure unless it can have the use of the terminals of its competitors. K. C. & M. Ry. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. 46 I. C. C. 464, 466.

(t) Under section 3 a carrier is protected against having its terminals utilized by a competing carrier that has not provided itself with adequate terminals and thus desires to secure a line haul which the carrier with terminals is prepared to perform. Kansas City & Memphis Ry. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R., 46 I. C. C. 464, 466.

(u) Any reasonable action upon the part of the carriers to keep freight cars moving and to eliminate terminal congestion is manifestly in the public interest, and should not only be approved but encouraged by the Commission Export Free Time, 47 I. C. C. 162, 196.

(v) Should the cost of an unusual and expensive terminal service, performed with special equipment not owned by the carriers, be absorbed by them? Unless the transportation rates were made to include such special service it is clearly not incumbent on the carriers to absorb these costs out of their revenues. Handling of Heavy Articles, 47 I. C. C. 323, 334.

(w) Carriers can not be compelled to give the use of their terminal facilities to competing lines, but this does not mean that they may not be required to perform, upon just and reasonable terms, switching service between connecting lines and industries located on their own rails. Switching Absorptions, 47 I. C. C. 583, 586.

(x) There can be no justification for a policy that permits certain terminals to be congested with a surplus of freight while at the same time a near-by terminal has not enough traffic to keep it busy. N. Y. Harbor Case, 47 I. C. C. 643, 733.

(y) Complainant sought under section 3 of the act to have the service of the C. B. & Q., extend to the city of Hastings, Minn., by the use of the terminal facilities of the C. M. & St. P. The city of Hastings, with a population of about 5,000 is situated on the south bank of the Mississippi River, 28 miles south of Minneapolis, and is connected with the north bank by the high bridge, used for wagon and pedestrain travel. Shipments are trucked between the industries of Hastings and the Burlington over the high bridge. The Milwaukee and the Burlington use jointly a double track south from Minneapolis to a point in the newer part of Hastings. The distance from the end of the Milwaukee yard limits to the Burlington connection is about a mile. In February and March, 1919, about 250 car loads of ice were interchanged to the Burlington. The record indicates that it would be to the decided interest of Hastings to have the Burlington traffic handled over the Milwaukee terminals, and the Commission finds that such service would be in the public interest within the meaning of the statute. The other test is whether the use of the Milwaukee terminal facilities by the Burlington is practicable, without substantially impairing the ability of the Milwaukee to handle its own traffic. The Commission is of the opinion that the terminal switching service of the Milwaukee at Hastings is a part of its terminal facilities, and that the Commission may require the use of such terminal facilities by another carrier or carriers under the conditions prescribed in the act. HELD, defendants will be expected to arrange promptly for the use of the Milwaukee terminal facilities, including main line tracks, by the Burlington from its point of connection with the Milwaukee on the north bank of the river at Hastings to the town of Hastings on the south bank and to the side tracks of the respective industries. Hastings Commercial Club v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 69 I. C. C. 489.

(z) Use of the terminal facilities or main-line tracks of the Pennsylvania R. R., at York, Pa., by the Western Maryland Ry., not shown to be in the public interest. York Mfrs. Asso. v. P. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 40.

(aa) In determining what is "in the public interest" in a given case, as antecedent to the affirmative exercise of this broad grant of power, the commission must take into consideration not only the interests of the particular shippers located at or near the terminal involved but also the interests of the carriers and of the general public. York Mfrs. Asso. v. P. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 40, 49.

(bb) Practice of the Pennsylvania R. R. and the Western Maryland Ry. of each extending to the other the use of its tracks to effect terminal receipt and delivery of freight within a limited zone in York, Pa., while refusing to extend such use at other industries similarly located within the city but without the zone, found to result in undue prejudice. York Mfrs. Asso. v. P. R. R. Co., 73 I. C. C., 40, 50.

(cc) Arrangement sought whereby the Kansas City Southern would be required to interchange traffic with its competitor, the Southern Pacific, at Port Arthur, Tex., legally possible only through a condemnation of the terminals of the K. C. S. for use by the S. P., which has access thereto provided the traffic moves via Beaumont, Tex. HELD, prayer equivalent to establishment of a through route and joint rate embracing less than the full length of the K. C. S., and since no better service would accrue to Port Arthur interests or the general public, the K. C. S. should not be required to afford such facilities to other roads. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry., 73 I. C. C., 361.

(dd) Paragraph (4) of section 3 of the act applies to the opening of terminals by requiring a switching arrangement as well as by requiring a physical use. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 361, 362, 363.

(ee) Where a carrier has spent large sums in developing its terminal facilities at a given point it is entitled to use them to obtain the maximum amount of revenue compatible with reason and the public interest. It should not be required to afford such facilities to other roads at a nominal compensation, nor should control of its business be restricted by governmental regulation unless it appears that some compelling public interest would thereby lawfully be served. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 361, 364.

(ff) The interstate commerce act formerly provided that section 3 should "not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business." As amended by the transportation act, 1920, that proviso was omitted and a paragraph inserted under which the commission may require the use of one corrier's terminal facilities by another when in the public interest, where it is practicable and does not substantially impair the ability of the terminal carrier to handle its own business. Team Track Switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C., 367, 370.

(gg) Paragraph (4) of section 3 of the act, in substance, authorizes the commission when found "to be in public interest and practicable," to require joint use of terminals at reasonable compensation to carrier owning such terminals. Authority of commission under this paragraph is dependent upon showing of public interest. Miller Paper Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 314, 317.

(hh) Section 3 requires railroad companies to furnish "equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines." provided that this should not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier, engaged in like business." If the carrier, however, does not rest behind that statutory shield, but chooses voluntarily to throw the terminals open to many branches of traffic, it to that extent makes the yard public. Having made the yard a facility for many purposes and to many patrons, such railroad facility is within the provision of section 3 of the statute which prohibits the facility from being used in such manner as to discriminate against patrons and commodities. The carriers cannot say that the yard is a facility open for the switching of cotton and wheat and lumber, but cannot be used as a facility for the switching of coal. Whatever may have been the rights of the carriers in the first instance, whatever may be the case if the yard was put back under the protection of the proviso of section 3, the carriers cannot open the yard for most switching purposes and then debar a particular shipper from a privilege granted the great mass of the public. In substance that would be to discriminate not only against the tendering railroad but also against the commodity which is excluded from a service performed for others. L. & N. R. Co. v. U. S. 35 Sup. Ct. 696, 701; 238 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed.

(iijj) Two railway carriers who are joint owners of a considerable portion of the terminals in a certain city used by them in common, and who manage them as a whole and deal with them in the same way as they would if their title were joint in every part, may not be compelled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the equal facilities requirement of the Interstate Comerce Act, §3, respecting the interchange of traffic, which is qualified by the proviso that it "shall not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business," to discontinue as discriminatory their practice of refusing to switch interstate traffic to and from the tracks of a third carrier entering that city on the same terms which they contemporaneously maintain with respect to similar shipments to and from their own respective tracks in said city, although, instead of each carrier doing its own switching over the terminals used in common, they switch jointly through a single agency for both, each paying substantially as it would if it did its own work alone, since what is done is not reciprocal switching, but the use of a joint terminal in the natural and practical way. Louisville & N. R. R. v. U. S., 37 Sup. Ct. 61.

§3½. Employment of Agents.

See Agency.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) There is no reason why carriers at a common terminal may not intrust to a joint agent work allotted elsewhere to the carriers' immediate employes. New York Merc. Exch. v. B. & O. R. R., 36 I. C. C., 156, 162.

§4. Publication of Terminal Charges.

See Tariffs.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Terminal companies to publish tariffs. Enterprise Transportation Co. v. Pa. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 326.

(b) A terminal charge altho absorbed must be published in tariff. Leonard v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C. 492.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(c) Separte charges should be made for (1) handling ore from rail of vessel to car; (2) handling ore from rail of vessel to storage yard; (3) storage of ore while held in storage yard; (4) handling ore from storage yard to car; (5) road haul from ore docks to point of interchange with the private industry tracks and placing it at point or points of unloading within the inclosure of the industrial plant. Iron Ore Rate Cases, 41 I. C. C. 181, 207.

(d) Under the provisions of section 6 of the Act all terminal privileges and facilities extended to shippers must be specifically authorized by tariff and can not be inferred. Rule 10 of Tariff Circular 18-A requires that if the charges of a switching or terminal road are to be absorbed by a connecting line the tariff of the connecting road must specifically state that its rate includes such terminal service and that the connecting road will absorb such charges of the switching road as is published and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. This rule further provides that if the switching road's charges are to be added to the charges of a connecting road the tariff of such connecting road must clearly state that the shipments are subject to switching charges named in tariffs on file with the Commission. Moore Stave Company v. Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Co., 41 I. C. C. 472, 473.

(e) While it is generally true that the published transportation rates cover receipt, transportation, and delivery, this can not be construed as preventing the publication of separate terminal charges for peculiar terminal services. Handling of Heavy Articles, 47 I. C. C. 323, 333.

(f) By section 6 carriers subject to the Act are required to file with the Commission schedules showing "all terminal charges * * *, all privileges or facilities granted or allowed and any rules or regulations which in anywise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates, fares, and charges, or the value of the service rendered to the * * * shipper, or consignee." §5. Reasonableness of charges.

See Bridge Tolls; Evidence §57½; Reasonableness of Rates.

(a) The imposition at one city of a terminal charge on live stock, while no such charge is imposed on dead freight, is not necessarily an unjust discrimination against live stock within the Act to Regulate Commerce, §3. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513.

(aa) The imposition of a terminal charge for the shipment of livestock to one market, if just and reasonable, is not an undue preference within the Act to Regulate Commerce, §3, because no terminal charges are imposed for livestock shipped to a competing city. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513.

(b) A decision of the Supreme Court sustaining the view of the Commission as to the illegality of certain terminal charges, but dismissing the proceeding on account of a subsequent reduction in the through rate, which had been made from certain territory, and which reduction amounted to more than the terminal charges involved, and authorizing the Commission to commence proceedings to correct any unreasonableness in the rate resulting from the additional terminal charge, as to any territory to which the reduction referred to did not apply,—does not estop the Commission from further proceeding and investigation as to the legality of a terminal charge for the future, without the institution of a new proceeding, as the Commission is not functus officio; and the mere use by the Supreme Court in its decree of the word "commencing," with reference to further proceedings, is not construed to require the formal institution of a new proceeding. The case will, therefore, stand reopened for further investigation and order, with leave to complainant to show to what territory the through rate reduction applied. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & O. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 83.

(c) Upon the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record, HELD, that the terminal charge of $2 per car exacted by defendants for the delivery of live stock at the Union Stock Yards in Chicago with respect to shipments from points without the State of Illinois is unjust and unreasonable and unduly discriminatory, and that such charge should not exceed $1 per car. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., et al., 12 I. C. C. 507.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) Reasonable compensation for terminal service may be tested to some extent by charges for similar service in the same general territory and under similar conditions. In re Wharfage Charges at Galveston, 26 I. C. C. 695, 702

(e) Rail carriers are not warranted in giving any advantage out of the rates to a competitive port except such as will fairly measure the greatest service the terminal facilities at such port may perform. In re Wharfage Charges at Galveston, 26 I. C. C. 695, 704.

(f) Rates covering substantial distances are practically never balanced to such a degree of nicety as to reflect differences resulting from small variations in switching and line movements over the different routes. Brown v. B. & M. R. R., 27 I. C. C. 47, 53.

(g) Expense of providing terminals in large cities and of operating those terminals may offset greater volume of business handled. Iowa State Board of R. R. Com'rs v. A. E. R. R. Co., 28 I. C. C. 193, 200.

(h) That a rate increase is for the purpose of securing a greater division, deemed a fair return, to a terminal line, is no justification for the increase. Rates on Crushed Stone, 29 I. C. C. 136, 137, 138.

(i) It has been frequently recognized by the courts and the Commission that the terminal facilities of a carrier are of special value to it, and this fact may be reasonably reflected in the amount of compensation derived from the use of those terminals by connecting lines. Switching at Arcade, N. Y., 30 I. C. C. 501, 503.

(j) If a carrier holds itself out as ready to permit the use of its tracks at a certain charge, it follows that having elected to perform the service, the charge therefor must be reasonable, and the Commission may determine what is the reasonable charge. The concluding proviso of section 3 can impose no obligation to prevent absorption. In determining what is a reasonable rate for such a service the Commission should take into consideration the circumstance that the use of the rate means that the terminal road is deprived of the line haul; but this means nothing more than that the charge should be an adequate one for the movement over the terminal considered by itself. The Act itself imposes no requirement on the Commission that in determining such a reasonable charge it must in some way or other take into calculation the factor that the charge may be absorbed by a competitor road. Seattle Chamber of Commerce v. G. N. Ry. Co., 30 I. C. C. 683, 690.

(k) In determining what is a reasonable rate for the interchange movement, the Commission should take into consideration the circumstance that the use of the rate means that the terminal road is deprived of the line haul. Seattle Chamber of Commerce v. G. N. Ry. Co., 30 I. C. C. 683, 690.

(l) With the growth of terminal areas and the consequent increase of terminal expenses, there may be a growing need for a separation of the charges for line hauls from the charges for terminal services, and a graduation of charges for terminal services so that each industry within the terminal area will pay in proportion to the service it receives in addition to the line haul, if such a system should in the future be deemed to be preferable to what now obtains; but before that could be done there would have to be a separation of the cost of the line haul from the cost of the terminal service, and a complete reconstruction of rates. Car Spotting Charges, 34 I. C. C. 609, 620.

(m) The Commission strongly favors the analysis of service and rates as an aid to their measurement and comparison. But it holds that, where a terminal service has heretofore been treated by the carriers as a part of the transportation service covered by the freight rate, and regularly performed by them, they may not now segregate that service and assign to it a separate charge without taking into consideration, in order to justify such charge, the entire through service of which it forms a part and the compensation heretofore received for such through service. Lighterage and Storage Regulations at New York, 35 I. C. C. 47, 61.

(n) Carriers can not segregate a terminal service heretofore treated as a part of transportation service covered by the freight rate, and assign to it a separate charge, without taking into consideration the entire through service of which it forms a part and the compensation heretofore received for such through service. Lighterage and Storage Regulations at New York, 35 I. C. C. 47, 61.

(o) In the absence of tariff provisions to the contrary the line-haul of a particular carrier includes the receipt or delivery of carload freight only at industries or other points located upon its own rails. The right to impose a reasonable and nondiscriminatory charge in addition to the line-haul rate for terminal services performed by connecting carriers has been affirmed by numerous decisions of the Commission and courts. Boardman & Co. v. S. P. Co., 37 I. C. C. 81, 85.

(p) Under a schedule of rates constructed upon the theory that under all circumstances and conditions rail carriers are bound to perform a service upon private spur and industrial tracks without charge in addition to the regular transportation or line-haul, a charge in addition to the charge for the line haul may be just and reasonable, and failure to impose such a charge might even be unjustly discriminatory. Boardman & Co. v. S. P. Co., 37 I. C. C. 81, 86.

(q) Compensation on a tariff rate or charge basis better befits an arrangement for the interchange of service than one for physical use. Louisville Board of Trade v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C., 679, 686.

(r) While it is generally true, that the published transportation rates in this country cover receipt, transportation, and delivery, this has not been construed, as preventing the publication of separate terminal charges for peculiar terminal services. Handling of Heavy Articles 47 I. C. C. 323, 333.

(s) Failure to accord adequate recognitions in the rate structure to the heavy and ever-increasing expense of terminal operation does not necessarily lead to conclusion that the carriers rates are unduly prejudicial or otherwise unlawful. N. Y. Harbor Case, 47 I. C. C. 643, 735.

(t) Where it is not known how much less cost attaches to the services rendered in reswitching and in handling less than carload traffic, for which the respective charges are $1.50 per car and 8 cents per ton, minimum $1 per car and the carrier is a means to increase earnings it should ascertain whether or not these classes of service are bearing their fair share of its expenses without undue burden upon interstate commerce. National Tube Co. v. Lake Terminal, 55 I. C. C. 469, 484.

(u) Terminal service presents one of the greatest operating problems which now confront the railroads of the country. They should be more efficiently performed, and it may be that their costs are not adequately reflected in the rates. New England Divisions, 62 I. C. C. 513, 529, 654.

(v) For services that a carrier may render or procure to be rendered off its own line, or outside the mere matter of transportation over its own line, it may charge and receive compensation. If a terminal charge be in and of itself just and reasonable it cannot be condemned or the carrier required to change it on the ground that it, taken with prior charges of transportation over the lines of the carrier or of connecting carriers, makes the total charge to the shipper unreasonable. That which must be corrected and condemned is not the just and reasonable terminal charge, but those prior charges which must of themselves be unreasonable in order to make the aggregate of the charge from the point of shipment to that of delivery unreasonable and unjust. I. C. C. v. Stickney, 215 U. S. 98, 105, 109, 30 Sup. Ct. 66, 54 L. ed. 112.

(w) A carrier is under no obligation to charge for terminal services. Business interests may justify it in waiving any such charge, and it will be considered therefore to have waived it unless it makes plain to both the shipper and the Commission that it is insisting upon it. I. C. C. v. Stickney, 215 U. S. 98, 105, 30 Sup. Ct. 66, 54 L. ed. 112.

See Reparation.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The decision of the Supreme Court sustaining the view of the Commission as to the unlawfulness and excessiveness of a terminal charge, but dismissing the proceeding on account of a subsequent reduction in the through rate, which amounted to more than the terminal charge, constitutes no bar to submission of proof before the Commission upon the question of reparation, covering the period elapsing prior to the reduction in the through rate referred to, which question had been properly held open by the Commission pending determination of the other branch of the case. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 83.

§6. What are public terminals.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where traffic is local to defendant and no traffic advantage over other lines can be gained by preferring either pier, to say that one and not the other may be considered the carrier's terminal would invite the fictitious creation of terminals as an expedient to secure favorable rates. National Dock & Storage Warehouse Co. v. B. & M. R. R., 38 I. C. C. 643, 650.

(b) The regulating statute lays a duty upon the carriers to furnish team-track and other terminal service only to an extent that is fully responsive to the reasonable requirements of the public; and this duty is neither subordinate to nor modified by the closing clause of section 3, which protects the carriers against the use of their terminals by others engaged in like business. Tulsa Traffic Asso. v. St. L. S. F. Ry., 49 I. C. C. 644, 647.

(c) Location of commercial industries the physical layout of the terminal tracks, the area of the terminal service, the volume of traffic and the reasonable requirements of the public, at Tulsa, Okla., are not at this time such as will justify compelling the defendant to open its team tracks to traffic brought to and taken from that point by other lines of railway. Tulsa Traffic Asso. v. St. L. S. F. Ry., 49 I. C. C. 644, 648.

(d) Terminal railroad association should properly be regarded as the individual terminals of each of its constituent lines. Swift & Co. v. Director General, 56 I. C. C. 309, 314.

(e) Cars and trains are facilities. Hastings Commercial Club v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 69 I. C. C. 489, 494.

(f) If that which aids or assists in the prompt transportation of freight is a railroad facility, a switch engine used only and entirely for handling freight at a terminal is clearly a terminal facility. A railroad with terminal tracks, signaling devices, and all other necessary instrumentalities but lacking motive power to operate over such tracks can not be said to have complete and adequate terminal facilities. Hastings Commercial Club v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 69 I. C. C. 489, 494.

(g) The cases are numerous holding that depots, platforms, spur or side tracks, station grounds, and elevators are parts of railroad facilities. Hastings Commercial Club v. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 69 I. C. C. 489, 494.

(h) Team track delivery is a service rendered by carriers in receiving and delivering car load freight in connection with their own line business and is over tracks owned by the carriers. It is a service for which no separate tariff charge is provided and which is analogous to freight depot service for less car load freight. A freight depot owned and maintained by a carrier is a terminal facility for use in handling business from its own line and can not, under Section 3 of the statute, be used for handling business from other lines without its consent. Team Track switching at Argentine, 73 I. C. C. 367, 370.

III. STATUS OF TERMINAL ROADS.

§7. In general.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The imposition by a state of a condition, upon giving permission to lay railroad tracks in the streets of a city, that such tracks shall be public and open to the use of citizens; and a regulation by the state of the switching rates to be charged by such railroad in the city,—do not clearly show an unconstitutional interference with or regulation of commerce between the states, although cars engaged in interstate traffic may be switched over such tracks. State of Iowa v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 425.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) The term "facility" as used in section 3 of the Act, also includes reciprocal trackage rights over terminal tracks. City of Nashville v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 33 I. C. C., 76, 85.

(c) What is true of a terminal owned jointly by two carriers is also true where there are seven joint owners, since each owns a substantial interest in the belt line. Richmond Chamber of Commerce v. S. A. L. Ry., 44 I. C. C. 455, 461.

(d) Where a belt railway is found to be a switching agency employed by the line-haul carriers in completion of contracts between carriers and shippers, its charges should be a part of the freight charge made to the shipper and not in addition thereto. Absorption of Switching Charges at Fort Worth, 61 I. C. C. 73, 76.

§8. Definition of "Terminal Charges."

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) "Terminal charges," as used in section 6, refers to the American method of making rates, and comprehends service rendered after delivery. Associated Jobbers of Los Angeles v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 18 I. C. C. 310, 315.

ALL OTHER CITATIONS

Car Spotting Charges, 34 I. C. C., 609, 620.

§9. Allowances.

See Allowances.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Where an industry has continuously for years performed terminal or spotting services and apparently has preferred to do so it can not now be heard in a demand for compensation from the carriers for such past services. Empire

Steel & Iron Co. v. Director General, 56 I. C. C. 158, 180.

§10. Discrimination.

See Discrimination; Facilities and Privileges §21.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Nor is the imposition at some locality of a terminal charge upon live stock, while no similar charge is imposed upon dead freight, necessarily a discrimination, under the 3d section, against live stock and in favor of dead freight. Cattle Raisers' Association v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513.

(aa) The imposing by a carrier of a terminal charge at one live stock market, while it does not impose a similar charge at another competing market, is not necessarily an undue preference under the 3d section of the Act. Cattle Raisers' Association v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(ab) If a carrier recognizes the right of a track owner to accord the use of its siding to one shipper the carrier must treat alike all users of the siding. Section 2 of the act expressly prohibits a carrier from charging greater or less compensation for a like and contemporaneous service dependent upon the individual served. Bartlett Haywood Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C. 151, 155.

(b) Where character of terminal services performed for consignees under the same rate differs widely discrimination results therefrom. Iron Ore Rate Case, 41 I. C. C. 181, 204.

(c) Refusal of trunk lines to maintain joint rates, including terminal and spotting services to and from the Thomas Iron Company's furnace tracks at Hokendauqua, Pa., while maintaining such rates, including terminal services at competitive furnace points in eastern Pennsylvania, found unduly prejudical. Empire Steel & Iron Co. v. Director General, 56 I. C. C. 158, 190, 191.

§11. Through routes and joint rates.

See Tap Lines; Through Routes and Joint Rates.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) It cannot be that the law was intended to mean that a competing rail line may now be built between important commercial centers served by a railroad long established and possessing adequate and valuable terminals at both points, and "by making a physical connection" "at an arbitrary point near its terminus" be accorded the right of access to those terminals for originating and delivering freight hauled by it and which the carrier owning the terminals is not only prepared but anxious to carry at rates and under rules and regulations that are subject to all of the requirements and restrictions of the Act. Louisville Board of Trade v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 40 I. C. C., 679, 690.

(b) In view of the parenthetical clause in paragraph (4) of section 15 of the act, the limitation put upon the commission's authority to establish through routes and joint rates does not apply where the commission finds it to be in the public interest to require one carrier to afford another carrier the use of its terminals. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry., 73 I. C. C., 361, 363.

(c) In determining what is in the public interest in a given case, as antecedent to the affirmative of the broad grant of power in paragraph 4 of section 3 of the act, the Commission must take into consideration not only the interests of the particular shippers located at or near the terminal involved but also the interests of the carriers and of the general public. Miller Paper Co. v. P. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 314, 317.

(d) Complainant, Upper Merion & Plymouth R. Co., alleged that the Pennsylvania and P. & R., refused to establish with complainant through routes and joint rates, fares and charges, and just, reasonable and equitable divisions thereof. Complainant operates 6.16 miles of track, maintains public team tracks holds itself out as a common carrier and has served all who have applied. It files tariffs and makes the usual reports to the Commission. Bills of lading are issued by complainant on local shipments but not on those going to trunk line interchanges. Demurrage is handled directly between the trunk lines and the shippers. HELD, complainant is a common carrier subject to the act, may lawfully receive compensation from its trunk line connections for service performed on interstate shipments, either in the form of divisions or absorption of switching charges. Upper Merion & Plymouth R. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. 81 I. C. C. 191.

(e) An order of the Commission requiring the Pennsylvania Co. at New Castle, Pa., to switch cars for the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg Ry., does not amount to a compulsory taking of the use of the terminals of the Pennsylvania company by another road, within the inhibition of section 3 of the Act, since the order gives the Rochester road no right to run its cars over the terminals of the Pennsylvania company, or to use or occupy its stations or depots for purposes of its own, and there is no requirement that the Rochester Company be permitted to store its cars in the yards of the Pennsylvania Company or to make use of its freight houses, or other facilities; but simply that the Pennsylvania Company receive and transport the cars of the Rochester Company over its terminals at New Castle in the same manner and with the same facilities that it affords to other railroads connecting with the Pennsylvania railroad at the same point. Penn. Co. v. U. S. 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 370, 376; 236 U. S. 351, 49 L. ed.

ALL OTHER CITATIONS

THREAD RATE

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) The Virginia cities' rates are line rates, extending thread-like from east to west. Massie & Pierce Lumber Co. v. N. & W. Ry. Co., 33 I. C. C., 14, 22.

§1. Jurisdiction of Commission.

See Adjacent Foreign Country; Interstate Commerce Commission I; Jurisdiction of Commission.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) If jurisdiction exists under the act to compel the establishment of a through rate, and the facts are such as to support the claim, the Commission could not order the establishment of such a rate without having before it as parties all the roads composing the proposed line. Rend v. C. & N. W. R. Co. 2 I. C. C. 313, 316.

(b) The Commission is not invested with authority to establish through routes, nor to fix through rates, between connecting lines. The English Act of 1873, amendatory of the Act of 1845, did confer such authority upon the English Commission; but our Act to Regulate Commerce contains no such provisions, and confers no such authority. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(c) Neither at common law nor under the Act of Congress of June 15, 1866 (U. S. Rev. Stat. §5258), or the Interstate Commerce Act of Feb. 4, 1887, can a common carrier be compelled to make through traffic arrangements with connecting lines. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. (C. C. D. Ky.) 2 I. C. R. 351; Overruling decision of the Interstate Commerce in the same case, 2 I. C. R. 102; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (Com.) 2 I. C. R. 454.

(d) A court of equity has no power, either at common law or under the Interstate Commerce Act, to compel a railroad company to enter into a contract with another company for a joint through rate or a joint through routing of freight and passengers. Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (C. C. E. D. Ark.) 2 I. C. R. 763.

(e) The Commission is not invested with authority to establish through routes nor to fix through rates between connecting lines. Mattingly v. Pennsylvania Co. 2 I. C. C. 806, 812.

(f) Through rates and through billing are matters of agreement among carriers engaged in interstate commerce and, as was decided in the case of The Little Rock & Memphis Railroad Company v. The East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad Company, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 454, 3 I. C. C. Rep. 1, the Commission has no power under the Statute to compel them against their consent to enter into arrangements for through rates and for through billing. Capeheart & Smith v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 3 I. C. R. 278.

(g) The Interstate Commerce Commission has no power to compel carriers against their consent to enter into arrangements for through rates and for through billing. Capehart v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Com.) 3 I. C. R. 278.

(h) Through rates and through billing are matters of agreement among carriers and the Commission has no power under the statute to compel them against their consent to enter into arrangements for through rates and for through billing. Capehart v. L. & N. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 278, 280.

(i) The power to establish joint "through rates" for connecting carriers is included within the power of the State to regulate rates of charges for transportation of freight by railroads. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey (Iowa) 3 I. C. R. 584.

(j) A railroad company is not compelled to enter involuntarily into contract relations with other companies, by a statute requiring the adoption of joint rates, or in default thereof the fixing of such rates by railroad commissioners, as in the latter case the obligation of the company as to the rates is one imposed by law and not by contract. Burlington, Cedar Rapids & N. H. Co. v. Dey, 3 I. C. R. 584.

(k) The violation, by giving special rates, of schedules of joint rates for through shipments from points in the United States to points in Canada, which have been established and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and posted in the carrier's office cannot be punished by the United States government so far as the violation was committed wholly or partly in Canada. United States v. Knight (D. C. S. D. Ill.), 3 I. C. R. 801.

(l) The total rate for through carriage over two or more lines, whether made by the addition of established locals, or of through and local rates, or upon a less proportionate basis, is the through rate that is subject to scrutiny by the regulating authority. How the rate is made, is only material as bearing upon the legality of the aggregate charge; and how any reduction may be accomplished, is matter for the carriers to determine among themselves. Trammell v. Clyde S. S. Co. (Com.) 4 I. C. R. 120.

(m) Joint through rates are matters of contract or agreement among carriers engaged in interstate commerce, and the Commission has no power under the statute to compel them to enter into an arrangement for such through rates. Independent Refiners Asso. v. W. N. Y. & P. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 163, 180.

(n) "No power exists at common law, and none is given by the Act to Regulate Commerce, to compel connecting railroad companies to unite in a joint tariff, or to enter into a through rate arrangement for transportation, unless they desire to do so. They cannot be compelled to abandon the full control of their separate roads; and neither of them is bound to adjust its own local tariff to suit the other." Case Quoted: 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 257, 52 Fed. Rep. 912, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Osborne. See also 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 389, 2 L. R. A. 325, 37 Fed. Rep. 630, Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co.; 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 765, 41 Fed. Rep. 563, Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 332.

(o) Through rates are matters of contract between carriers composing through lines, and the Commission has no power to compel connecting carriers to contract with each other. Commercial Club of Omaha v. C. R. I. & P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 647, 677.

(pq) While through routes and reduced through rates, which would facilitate the movement of traffic and thereby benefit the public, or in some cases prevent by the unreasonable refusal of carriers to unite in granting such facilities, and the statute was apparently designed to require connecting carriers to join in the formation of through routes at lower aggregate rates than a combination of locals, the machinery necessary to accomplish that purpose is not provided, and the Commission has repeatedly called attention to this defect in the law. New York N. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323.

(r) Complainant attacked rates from Memphis, New Orleans, Dallas and other southern and southwestern points to Kearney, Neb., as unjust and unreasonable. No joint through rates were published or filed, the defendants either denied or did not admit that the shipment and carriage was continuous, and no proof was submitted by complainant showing that defendants made a through route in fact by their course of business. Rates charged were the combination on Omaha, Neb. HELD, the Commission has no power to compel a through route, and, no issue of law or fact having been presented over which the Commission has jurisdiction, complaint dismissed. Gustin v. I. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 376.

(s) The Interstate Commerce Commission has no jurisdiction to grant relief under a complaint alleging that freight rates between points on connecting lines, representing the aggregate of a joint rate of some of the carriers and the local rate of another, are unreasonable, unjust, and unlawful, where the joint rate, though incidentally attacked in the complaint, is not referred to in the testimony, and no joint through rates including the latter's line have been published or filed, and the defendants either deny or do not admit that the shipment is continuous, and no proof is submitted that they may make a through route in fact by their course of business, as the Commission has no power to compel a through route. Gustin v. Illinois C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 376.

(t) Freight rates from Memphis, New Orleans, Dallas and other southern and southwestern points to Kearney, Neb., made up of rates to and from Omaha, were alleged to be unreasonable, unjust, and unlawful, but no joint through rates were published or filed, the defendants either denied or did not admit that the shipment and carriage was continuous, and no proof was submitted by complainant showing that defendants make a through route in fact by their course of business. HELD, That the Commission has no power to compel a through route, and, no issue of law or fact having been presented over which the Commission has jurisdiction, the complaint should be dismissed. Gustin v. Illinois Central R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 376.

(u) It is well settled that the Commission has no authority to order a through route or a through rate; that can only be by agreement of the carriers themselves. Gustin v. I. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 376, 379.

(v) The Interstate Commerce Commission in a proceeding to correct an unreasonable freight rate to a particular city may, where the carriers forming the through line elect to divide the entire rate and designate a certain rate for the performance of a certain service which is performed by a particular carrier, deal with such carrier and such charge irrespective of the other charges making up the entire rate. Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 513.

(w) In the matter of the rates for a continuous route operated by a single carrier, and the rates for a continuous route operated by more than one carrier the law is the same with the sole exception that the Commission may prescribe the measure of publicity which the carriers shall be required to give of their rates and fares on such continuous line or route, while such requirement, as well as the line operated by one carrier, is specified in the law itself; but such exception does not go to the form, substance, maintenance, or application of the rates in any degree whatsoever. Consolidated Forwarding Co. v. Southern P. Co. 9 I. C. C. 182.

(x) While the Commission has approved wherever established the system of through rates by connecting lines, with rates for the longer distances something below the sums of the locals, it is a matter which depends upon agreement and joint arrangements of the roads forming the through lines, and the Commission has no authority to enforce such arrangements. If the through rates are not unreasonable, the Commission can not condemn the same on account of the divisions thereof to the various roads forming the through lines, the law and the public being alike served by rates in the aggregate reasonable, and not affected by their distribution. Charlotte Shippers Asso. v. Southern Ry., 11 I. C. C. 108, 128.

(y) The Act to Regulate Commerce does not authorize the Commission to compel the establishment of joint rates by connecting carriers, nor to prescribe the divisions of joint rates or the conditions of interchange in case the connecting carriers fail to agree in respect thereto; and it follows, notwithstanding the combination rates complained of are unjust and unreasonable, and the general shipping situation is such as to work a practical monopoly in favor of the Standard Oil Company, that relief cannot be afforded by the Commission, and the complaint must be dismissed. Fred G. Clark Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 558.

(z) The N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., called the New Haven Co., refuses to make and maintain joint through rates on petroleum and its products from Cleveland, O., Pittsburg, Pa., and other points in Pennsylvania and Ohio, to points reached by its line in New England, and on all such traffic insists upon exacting the local charges from junction points with other carriers to the various destinations. The New Haven Co. does participate in through rates to New England points on other traffic generally. Ordinarily the rate to Boston applies to points in Massachusetts and Connecticut, including junction points with the New Haven Co., and it results that its refusal to join in through rates on petroleum and its products operates to increase the rate by the amount of its local charge. The Standard Oil Co. brings crude oil by pipe line to its seaboard refineries and sends the refined oil and the products by tank steamers to distributing stations at Wilson Point, Conn., and India Point, R. I., and also has distributing stations at New London, Conn., and East Boston, Mass. From the distributing stations the oil and products are shipped out locally to interior points. Independent shippers, like complainants, are obliged to send shipments by rail to the same destinations. The combination rates on petroleum and its products from Cleveland and Pittsburg to points reached by the New Haven Co. result in unreasonable and unjust rates. The refusal of the New Haven Co. to consent to and participate in through rates on that traffic is unjust and unreasonable, and the situation is such as to operate greatly to the advantage of the Standard Oil Co. There is no competitive relation between petroleum and its products on the one hand and other articles of traffic on the other, and the failure of the New Haven Co. to provide joint rates on petroleum and its products, while maintaining joint rates on other traffic, does not constitute wrongful preference and advantage. The Act to Regulate Commerce does not authorize the Commission to compel the establishment of joint rates by connecting carriers, nor to prescribe the divisions of joint rates or the conditions of interchange in case the connecting carriers fail to agree in respect thereto; and it follows, notwithstanding the combination rates complained of are unjust and unreasonable and the general shipping situation is such as to work a practical monopoly in favor of the Standard Oil Company, that relief can not be afforded by the Commission and the complaint must be dismissed. Fred G. Clark Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. et al., 11 I. C. C. 559.

(aa) The Commission can neither prescribe a rate for the future, nor determine the division of a through rate. Clark v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 558, 574.

(bb) The Act does not require carriers to make joint rates and the Commission has no power to compel such rates. Clark Co. v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 558, 580.

(bba) The Interstate Commerce Commission has discretion as to establishment of through routes and joint rates. Loup Creek Colliers Co. v. Virginia Ry. Co. 12 I. C. C. 471.

(cc) The power of the commission over a complaint requesting establishment of through routes, is not divested by the subsequent establishment of through service. Enterprise Transportation Co. v. Pa. R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 326.

(dd) Where, at the time a complaint requesting the establishment of a through route was filed, a through route had been abandoned and for a time thereafter was not in operation, the re-establishment of through service will not divest the Commission of its jurisdiction. Enterprise Transportation Co. v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 12 I. C. C. 326.

(ee) The fifteenth section of the amended act, provides, not that the Commission shall, but that it may, after hearing upon complaint, establish through routes and joint rates. It seems plain that the intention of the statute was to confer upon the Commission certain discriminatory power under which it might inquire whether, in the interest of the public, the through routes asked for ought to be established. Enterprise Transportation Co. v. Pennsylvania R. R., 12 I. C. C. 327, 332.

(ff) It is certainly doubtful whether a through route over which no joint rate applies is the kind of a through route whose existence, under the fifteenth section, will divest the Commission of jurisdiction. Such a route is a defacto arrangement. No legal notice of it is required. It may be established and discontinued by the carriers at their pleasure. The shipper at the initial point has no means of ascertaining from tariffs there on file the cost of the through transportation or the conditions which may be attached to it. There is certainly good ground for holding that the through route which the Commission should establish under the fifteenth section carries with it, under all circumstances, a joint rate, and that the kind of a route which will divest the Commission of its jurisdiction in this particular must be as beneficial to the public as the route which the Commission may otherwise establish. Enterprise Transportation Company v. Pennsylvania R. R., 12 I. C. C. 327, 334.

(gg) The law does not require the Commission in all cases where no through routes and joint rates exist to establish them, but only empowers it to do so in proper cases with the manifest intent of giving effect to the general purposes of the act by securing reasonable facilities to the public and preventing unreasonable and unjust rates, practices and discriminations, and in the exercise of this authority the Commission is bound by the same considerations of justice and fairness as it is in the exercise of the rate making power in other respects. Loup Creek Colliers Co. v. Virginia Ry., 12 I. C. C. 471, 477.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(hh) The Commission has no power under section 15, to prevent the cancellation of through routes and joint rates voluntarily established by the carriers when the circumstances and conditions are such as would not warrant an order to compel such arrangements if not already in effect. The Ogden Gateway Case, 35 I. C. C. 131, 140.

(ii) The Commission can not prescribe joint through rates from points in an adjacent or nonadjacent foreign country to points in the United States, but can control the charges for that portion of the service rendered by carriers in the United States. Carlowitz & Co. v. C. P. Ry., 46 I. C. C. 290, 292.

(jj) Under the commerce clause of the constitution the Congress has full and complete power to regulate the operations of carriers engaged in interstate commerce. This power may be delegated in an appropriate manner to a body designated by the Congress, as has been done in the Act to Regulate Commerce to the extent there set forth. That Act imposes upon the carriers subject to its provisions, including the defendants, the duty of establishing "through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto. "Among other things" every unjust and unreasonable charge" for any service rendered in the transportation of property 'is prohibited and declared to be unlawful"; unjust discrimination is "prohibited and declared to be unlawful"; and it is unlawful to "subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever." The Commission created by the act is "authorized and required to execute the provisions of this act," and "any person, firm, corporation, company, or association, or any mercantile, agricultural, or manufacturing society or other organization, or any body politic or municipal organization, or any common carrier," may complain "of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act in contravention of the provisions thereof." Railroad Comm. of La. v. A. H. T. Ry. Co., 48 I. C. C. 312, 359.

(kk) The fact that some portions of the lines composing proposed through routes are wholly within one state is not sufficient to defeat the application of the power conferred upon the Commission under section 15 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, as amended, to establish thru routes and prescribe reasonable maximum joint rates, where, as in this case, such carriers are subject to jurisdiction of the Commission and maintain local rates applicable to the interstate traffic involved. Thorpp v. B. & L. E. R. R., 49 I. C. C. 43, 52.

(ll) The railroads should be regarded more and more as one national system, and the time may not be far distant when the Commission should proceed to the establishment of joint through class and commodity rates lower than the combination of locals between practically all points in the country. Intermediate Rate Asso. v. Director General, 61 I. C. C. 226, 246.

(mm) The Commission is vested with specific authority to initiate rates that will protect revenues, and where carriers will suffer depletion of revenue by reason of the establishment of new joint rates, appropriate measures can be taken for their protection. Intermediate Rate Asso. v. Director General, 61 I. C. C. 226, 246.

(nn) That periods of congestion and car shortage may occur at times and thus render temporarily unavailable the customary through routes provided by carriers is anticipated in the act, under which the Commission is authorized to establish temporary through routes, either upon application of shippers or upon its own initiative, without complaint and without the delays incident to formal hearing. Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 62 I. C. C. 228, 230.

(oo) The act does not confer upon the Commission the power to prescribe minimum rates over a through route where one of the carriers is a water line. Rail-and-Water Rates from Atlantic Seaboard, 63 I. C. C. 267, 275.

(pp) But because a common carrier is engaged in interstate commerce it does not follow that it may be required to maintain joint interstate rates and through routes as a matter of course. Under the law the establishment of such rates and routes depends upon a showing that they are necessary or desirable in the public interest. Hood Coal Co. v. M. V. T. Co., 73 I. C. C. 54, 57.

(qq) Because a common carrier is engaged in interstate commerce it does not follow that it may be required to maintain joint interstate rates and through routes as a matter of course. Under the law the establishment of such rates and routes depends upon a showing that they are necessary or desirable in the public interest. Hood Coal Co. v. M. V. T. Co., 73 I. C. C., 54, 57.

(rr) In view of the parenthetical clause in paragraph (4) of section 15 of the act, the limitation put upon the commission's authority to establish through routes and joint rates does not apply where the commission finds it to be in the public interest to require one carrier to afford another carrier the use of its terminals. Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce v. T. & F. S. Ry. Co., 73 I. C. C., 361, 363.

(ss) The commission has no authority to prescribe joint rates over routes partly within Canada, but can require the participating carriers operating within the United States to cancel their concurrences in rates found unreasonable or in violation of the act. United Paperboard Co. v. C. N. Rys., 74 I. C. C. 733, 737.

(tt) Limitation in paragraph (4) of section 15 of act, with respect to power of commission to establish through routes, applied to "any carrier by railroad" only. Southeastern Express Co. v. Amer. Ry. Exp. Co. 78 I. C. C. 126, 129.

(uu) Where factor of through rate is assailed, and carriers parties to factors not in issue are not joined as defendants, commission has jurisdiction to examine and pass upon lawfulness of factor attacked. Petroleum and Petroleum Product, 78 I. C. C. 162, 166.

(vv) Act provides that commission may and shall establish joint rates whenever deemed necessary or desirable in public interest. Mere desire to extend markets, unsupported by any substantial indication of a public need, affords no adequate foundation for requiring establishment of additional through routes and joint rates. Western Coal Rates, 80 I. C. C. 434.

(ww) The general provision of paragraph (4), section 1, that carriers shall establish through routes and reasonable rates applicable thereto, is subordinated to specific provisions of section 15 for establishment of through routes and joint rates. Tidewater Paper Mills Co. v. B. T. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 493, 497.

(xx) The commission has no power to prescribe minimum rates over a through route where one of the carriers is a water line, except where such water line is owned or controlled by a rail carrier. Roasted Coffee from Atlantic Seaboard, 83 I. C. C. 131, 134, 135.

(yy) Shipment originated at Bunker, Mo., consigned to shipper's order notify complainant, at Leeper, Mo., and subsequently reforwarded under new bill of lading to El Paso, Tex. On complaint alleging unreasonableness of through rate because of Bunker-Leeper component, contention that inbound and outbound movements were separate and distinct, and that since rate beyond Leeper is not assailed the commission has no jurisdiction to consider intrastate movement to that point. HELD: Defendants' position untenable. Shipment was not unloaded at Leeper but moved to El Paso in original car, and prepaid expense bill for movement beyond Leeper shows point and date of shipment as Bunker, Mo., and date of original movement. Mid-Continent Equip. & Mach. Co. v. M. S. R. R. Co., 83 I. C. C. 393, 394.

(zz) Section 15 (3) of the act authorizes commission to establish through routes and joint rates applicable to transportation of property where one of the carriers is a water line. However, by that same section and paragraph it is provided that commission shall not "have right to establish any route, classification, or practice, or any rate, fare, or charge when transportation is wholly by water." Boston Wool Trade Asso. v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 83 I. C. C., 445, 448, 449.

(3a) Commission can not require establishment or maintenance of joint rates between United States and Canada. But where joint rates are in effect and there is no proposal to withdraw them save for purpose of substituting other and higher rates of same character, and commission finds in an appropriate proceeding that increases in such joint rates proposed in schedules published and filed with it have not been justified, it is not only within its power but its duty to require their cancellation. Sand and Gravel from Canada, 83 I. C. C. 451, 458, 460, 463.

(3b) The carriers deny that the Commission has the power to compel them to establish through routes and joint rates. It is admitted that all the complaining carriers were interstate railroads and were engaged otherwise in interstate commerce. It is undisputed that for many years there has been over the lines of two of these carriers a through route to Paducah via Cairo, and over the other a through route via Memphis; and that on all the lines there were through rates. But it is contended that if a carrier establishes a through route and joint rate with its connections, it creates in effect a relation of partnership; that this relation must be entered into, if at all, voluntarily; and that to "compel a carrier chartered by a state" to enter into such a relation with a carrier chartered in another state violates the Fifth Amendment of the federal Constitution. The complaining carriers having engaged in this particular commerce, it is clear that Congress has power to regulate it. Atlantic Coast Line Case, 219 U. S. 186, 31 Sup. Ct. 164, 55 L. ed. 167, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.), 7. No reason appears why the regulation might not take the form of compelling the substitution of a joint rate for a through rate made by a combination of local rates or by a combination of a local rate with a joint rate to an intermediate point. Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Railway v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 184, 16 Sup. Ct. 700, 40 L. ed. 935. So far as the orders relates to the existing routes via Cairo and Memphis respectively it did no more than this: It substituted for the through rate of 22 cents (made up on two of the lines of a combination of a joint rate or local rate of 16 cents to Cairo with a local rate on the Illinois Central of 6 cents from Cairo to Paducah), a joint rate of 16 cents from the "blanket territory" to Paducah; thus reducing the existing through rate. The carrier connecting at Cairo (the Illinois Central) and all but one of the carriers connecting with these complainants in the "blanket territory", acquiesced in the order establishing this joint rate. The Illinois Central's share of the 22-cent rate was its local rate of 6 cents. If these complaining carriers cannot reach satisfactory agreements with the Illinois Central as to what its share of the 16-cent rate should be, they may, under section 15 of the Act to Regulate Commerce (Comp. St. 1916, §8583), apply to the Commission for an appropriate order. In respect to the Rock Island the situation is similar. St. L. S. W. Ry. v. U. S., 38 Sup. 49, 51.

§1a. State Legislation.

(a) The interstate commerce law does not apply in case of a shipment from one State to another where the several lines over which the freight passes have not established a joint tariff of rates so as to subject them to penalties imposed by the law for its violation; consequently carriers so situated are not exempt from a State statute imposing a penalty upon a common carrier who refuses to deliver freight upon tender of the charges specified in the bill of lading. Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. C. O. Nelson 7 I. C. C. App. XIV.

§2. What is through route or "Common Arrangement."

See Crimes; Tariffs §10.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) When railroad companies make a through and continuous line and offer it for the use of the public, they cannot rid themselves of responsibility for unjust charges by breaking the haul in two and calling themselves carriers on the separate ends of their line. Brady v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 78.

(b) The Pennsylvania Railroad Company operates a part of a through line which it joins in making, and owns a controlling interest in the capital stock of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company by which the other part is operated. HELD, that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company cannot free itself from the responsibility of excessive through rates by getting behind the corporate existence of the other company as a separate carrier. Brady v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 78.

(c) Through and continuous lines imply through rates, which must be reasonable. Brady v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Com.) 2 I. C. R. 78.

(d) The rate of 30½ cents per 100 pounds on wheat, flour and mill stuffs from Minneapolis via Milwaukee to New York and common billing points, established by the defendants and their connecting lines February 1, 1888, was a through rate. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce v. Flint & Pere Marquette R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 393.

(e) A rate is none the less a through rate when freight is shipped upon a through bill of lading from the point of origin to destination, accompanied by a waybill showing the route over which it is to pass, with the percentages of all the other lines set forth on the waybill, because the initial carrier charges its local rate as part of the total rate and the remaining lines charge an agreed rate made by percentages. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce v. F. & P. M. R., 2 I. C. C. 393, 398.

(f) The words "common control, management, or arrangement," as found in the Act to Regulate Commerce, §1, apply to a case where the initial carrier furnishes the shipper with a car specially fitted up for his business, which is taken over connecting roads on special through time tables. Boston Fruit & P. Exch. v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (Com.) 3 I. C. R. 493.

(g) The receipt successively by two or more carriers for transportation, of traffic shipped under through bills for continuous carriage over their lines, is assent to a "common arrangement" for continuous carriage or shipment; and previous formal arrangement between them is not necessary to bring such transportation under the terms of the Interstate Commerce Law. Trammell v. Clyde Steamship Co. (Com.), 4 I. C. R. 120.

(h) The phrase "common control, management, or arrangement for continuous carriage or shipment" in the first section of the act was intended to cover all interstate traffic, carried through all interstate traffic, carried through er lines. The receipt successively by two or more carriers for transportation of traffic shipped under through bills for continuous carriage over their lines is assent to a common arrangement for such continuous carriage or shipment and previous formal arrangement between them is not necessary to bring such transportation under the terms of the law. Trammell v. Clyde Steamship Co. 4 I. C. C. 120, 139.

(i) Where two or more roads forming a continuous connecting line between points in different states bill and carry interstate traffic through to certain stations on the last road forming such line, neither the roads together nor any one of them can evade the obligations of the Act by declaring that as to such traffic destined to such stations on such terminal road it is a local carrier. Trammell v. Clyde Steamship Co., 4 I. C. C. 121, 139.

(j) The 1st section of the Act to Regulate Commerce provides that it "shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or party by railroad and party by water where both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment, etc." The Georgia Railroad extends from Atlanta to Augusta. The Georgia Railroad Co. requested its connections, that in issuing bills of lading to its local stations, no rates be inserted east of Atlanta. There is no agreement on the part of said Company for any such joint tariff, as implies a reduced rate from Cincinnati, Ohio, to its local stations. On the contrary, that company collects and retains its entire local rates on all freight shipped from Cincinnati to its local stations. HELD: That there is no such "arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment" existing between said company and its connections, as to bring the rates which are charged to said local stations, within the first sectiin of the Act to Regulate Commerce. Case Cited: 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 257, 52 Fed. Rep. 912, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Osborne Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 42 I. C. R. 332.

(k) When goods are shipped through from Cincinnati, Ohio, to local stations on the Georgia Railroad, the initial carrier at Cincinnati issues through bills of lading, and quotes through rates. Said rates, however, are arrived at by adding to the rates from Cincinnati to Atlanta, the full local rates of the Georgia Railroad from Atlanta to said local stations. The Georgia R. Co. receives the goods at Atlanta, and transports them continuously to its local stations; but it demands and collects its full local rates from Atlanta to said local stations. HELD: That the mere reception, and continuous transportation, by the Georgia R. Co., of freight which comes to it over other lines of railroads, destined to its local stations, for which the initial carrier has issued through bills of lading and quoted through rates, does not constitute such an "arrangement" as is contemplated by the first section of the Act to Regulate Commerce, where the through rates, so quoted, allow to that company its full local rates. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 42 I. C. R. 332.

(l) There must be a "common arrangement" between connecting companies, such as the making of a joint tariff, before a "new line" can be formed; and the "line" so formed under the joint tariff of connecting companies is one which is separate and independent from that of either of the connecting companies. Case Cited: 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 257, 52 Fed. Rep. 912, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Osborne. Interstate Comerce Commission v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 332.

(m) There is no "common arrangement," or "joint tariff," between the Georgia Railroad Company and its connections, as to traffic to its local stations. On the contrary, there is an express refusal by that company to make any "common arrangement" whatever, in regard to that traffic. The Georgia Railroad Company demands and collects its full local rates on all shipments to its local stations. Whether shipments come from points west of Atlanta, or originate at Atlanta, the rate is precisely the same; and, as to the Georgia Railroad, the carriage is the same. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 332.

(n) Social Circle is a local station on the Georgia Railroad, 52 miles east of Atlanta, and 119 miles west of Augusta. The Georgia Railroad Company refuses to adopt a joint through tariff from Cincinnati to Social Circle; and charges its full local rate from Atlanta to Social Circle. The rate from Cincinnati to Social Circle is a combination rate; and it is arrived at by adding to the rate from Cincinnati to Atlanta, the full local rate of the Georgia Railroad from Atlanta to Social Circle. The rate thus made from Cincinnati to Social Circle is greater than the joint through tariff rate from Cincinnati to Augusta; but that fact constitutes no violation of the "long and short haul" clause of the Act to Regulate Commerce; because the two rates are not made "over the same line." The rate to Augusta is made by the "line" formed by a "common arrangement" between said three companies for a joint tariff between those points. The rate to Social Circle is made greater than the rate to Augusta, by the Georgia Railroad Company demanding its full local rate on its own road; which road is separate and independent from the "line" made by said three companies. Cases Cited: 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 257, 52 Fed. Rep. 912, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Osborne; 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 247, 53 Fed. Rep. 229, United States v. Mellen. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 332.

(o) The continuity of the carriage of freight over a line formed by two or more roads is not broken in fact and cannot be broken in law by the charge of a local rate by one or more of such roads as its proportion of the through rate. Troy Bd. of Trade v. Alabama Midland R. Co. (Com.) 4 I. C. R. 348.

(p) The successive receipt and forwarding in ordinary course of business, by two or more carriers, of interstate traffic shipped under through bills for continuous carriage over their lines, is assent to a "common arrangement" for such carriage within the meaning of the Act to Regulate Commerce, without previous express agreement between them. Troy Bd. of Trade v. Alabama Midland R. Co. (Com.) 4 I. C. R. 348.

(q) The successive receipt and forwarding in ordinary course of business by two or more carriers of interstate traffic shipped under through bills for continuous carriage over their lines, is assent to a "common arrangement" for such carriage within the meaning of the Act to Regulate Commerce without previous express agreement between them, and the obligations imposed by the statute cannot be evaded by the demand of the local charge for the haul over its own road by one or more of such carriers or by the declaration on the part of one or more of said carriers that as to the transportation over its road it is a local and not a through carrier. (Reaffirming the doctrine laid down in Georgia R. Com. v. Clyde SS. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 120) Board of Trade v. Alabama Midland R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 348.

(r) The receipt, forwarding, and delivery of traffic by connecting carriers clearly establishes the existence of a common arrangement between the carriers for continuous carriage or shipment. Phelps & Co. v. T. & P. R. Co., 4 I. C. C. 363, 368.

(s) A railroad company which enters into the carriage of foreign freight by agreeing to receive the goods by virtue of foreign through bills of lading, and to participate in through rates and charges, thereby becomes part of a continuous line by its arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment from one state to another, and thus becomes amenable to the Federal act in respect to such interstate commerce. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission (U. S. Sup.), 5 I. C. R. 391.

(sa) A railroad company operating a road wholly within one state makes such road part of a continuous line, and becomes a party to an arrangement for the continuous carriage or shipment of interstate traffic, when it carries such traffic under through bills of lading issued by another common carrier and participates with such other carrier in through rates and charges thereon, and such railroad company is subject to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce and to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. C., N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Inters. Com. Commission, 5 I. C. R. 391.

(t) The successive receipt and forwarding in ordinary course of business by two or more carriers of interstate traffic shipped under through bills for continuous carriage over their lines, is assent to a "common arrangement" for such carriage within the meaning of the Act to Regulate Commerce without previous express agreement between them, and the obligations imposed by the statute cannot be evaded by the demand of the local charge for the haul over its own road by one or more of such carriers, or by the declaration on the part of one or more of said carriers that as to the transportation over its road it is a local, and not a through, carrier. (Reaffirming the doctrine laid down in Georgia R. Com. v. Clyde SS. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 120, 5 I. C. C. Rep. 324.) Board of Trade of Troy, Ala. v. Ala Mid. Ry. Co. et al., 6 I. C. C. 2.

(u) Joint through routes and rates are ordinarily the subject of agreement between the participating carriers; but when this is established, and until finally abrogated or changed, they are required by the statute to be kept open to public use. Consolidated Forwarding Co. v. Southern P. Co., 9 I. C. C. 182.

(v) A railway company, stage transportation company, and a hotel association which furnishes accommodations to passengers are not competent in law to form through rates and establish joint rates as provided in section 6 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, and the circular or tariff under which the rates and tickets in question are provided cannot be regarded as a joint tariff established by connecting carriers under that Act. Wylie v. Northern P. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 145.

(w) Through Route is a continuous line of railway formed by an arrangement, express or implied, between connecting carriers. Re Through Routes & Through Rates, 12 I. C. C. 163.

(x) Through billing is an indication of through route over which through rate applies. Re Through Routes and Through Rates, 12 I. C. C. 163.

(y) Where a through route has been formed the rate charged is a through rate, and the shipment will move upon the rate existing at the time it is billed by the initial carrier. In the matter of through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. 164, 165.

(z) A through route is a continuous line of railway formed by an arrangement, express or implied, between connecting carriers. It must have a rate for every service it offers; and as the route is a new unit-one line formed by two or more connecting lines—so its rate for every service is a unit, even though it be divided between the several carriers arranging themselves into the through route. In the matter of through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 166.

(aa) Existence of a through route is to be determined by the incidents and circumstances of the shipment, such as the billing, the transfer from one carrier to another, the collection and division of transportation charges, or the use of a proportional rate to or from junction points or basing points. These incidents named are not to be regarded as exclusive of others which may tend to establish a carriers course of business with respect to through shipments. In the matter of through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 167.

(bb) Through carriage implies a through rate. This is equally true whether the through rate be published as a whole by the joint action of the connecting carriers, or, in the absence of a joint arrangement, be published in portions by the several carriers. The route being one, a charge for a service over it is a charge for a single service, all the terms of which must be fixed at one and the same time; that is, at the time the initial carrier enters into the engagement for the service. The rate is either a joint through rate made by arrangement by the parties to the through route, or it is a combination through rate consisting of the separately established rates, fares, and charges applied to the through transportation. This, sum, however, is a single rate for a single service, and a contract for through transportation is a contract for transportation at the through rate, whether jointly or separately established, in force at the time the shipment is billed. Through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 167.

(cc) When goods shipped under a through bill of lading, from a point in one state to a point in another, are received in transit by a state common carrier, under a conventional division of charges, such carrier must be deemed to have subjected its road to an arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment within the meaning of the act. When the Commission speaks of a through bill of lading it is referring to the usual method in use by connecting companies, and must not be understood to imply that a common control management, or arrangement might not be otherwise manifested. Through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 167.

(dd) Whatever other facts or incidents of a shipment may serve to prove the existence of a through route, a through bill of lading is, as to the carriers recognizing it, conclusive evidence of the existence of such through route. Through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 168.

(ee) The total rate or charge for a through carriage over two or more lines, whether made by the addition of established locals, or of through and local rates, or upon a less proportionate basis, is the through rate that is subject to scrutiny by the regulating authority. Where two or more roads forming a continuous connecting line between points in different states bill and carry interstate traffic through to certain stations on the last road forming such line, neither the roads together, nor any one of them, can evade the obligations of the Act by declaring that as to such traffic it is a local carrier. Through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 169.

(ff) The law regards the substance of things, and a palpable device for evasion of the law will not be allowed to accomplish its purpose. The facts that the carriage is continuous, that the traffic is through interstate traffic, and that the carrier in due and ordinary course of business accepts and forwards it, are sufficient to establish responsibility under the law. The receipt successively by two or more carriers for transportation of traffic shipped under through bills for continuous carriage or shipment, and previous formal arrangement between them is not necessary to bring such transportation under the terms of the law. Through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 170.

(gg) Where through billings is given by the originating carrier and is recognized by all connecting carriers to destination, there is in existence a through route over which a through rate applies, which through rate is ascertained from the tariffs of the participating carriers at the date of shipment; and when such rate is made up of the sum of the locals, the locals apply as of the date of shipment. Any increase in the through rate so made after the date of shipment, or any decrease therein, is not applicable to such through shipment. In the matter of through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 171.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(hh) A through route in the sense in which this term is generally used embraces two or more lines of railroad moving traffic under conventional agreements at rates or fares made applicable for the through service; nor may a carrier take any steps that will deprive passengers of the right to use its rails between any two points on the line at the regularly established fares. The Ogden Gateway Case, 35 I. C. C. 131, 142.

(ii) Shipment by boat from New York, N. Y., to Albany, N. Y., thence rail to interstate destination, rail carrier advancing water charges, found not a through shipment; there being no common control, management, or arrangement for continuous carriage from New York to ultimate destination. Amendt Milling Co. v. M. C. R. R. Co., 83 I. C. C., 585.

§3. What is Joint Rate.

See Infra §3½.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) When a combined rate, evidenced by a through bill of lading, from the point of origin to destination, has every substantial constituent of a through rate it is not necessary that it should be formally "quoted" by one of the carriers to another who is engaged in the making of it, in order to constitute it a through rate. Names are nothing in such a transaction; the law looks at the elements and substance of the transaction itself. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (Com.), 2 I. C. R. 393.

(b) A rate is none the less a through rate when freight is shipped upon a through bill of lading from the point of origin to destination, accompanied by a waybill showing the route over which it is to pass, with the percentages of all the other lines set forth on the waybill, because the initial carrier charges its local rate as part of the total rate and the remaining lines charge an agreed rate made by percentages. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce v. Flint & Pere Marquette R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 393.

(c) The joint "tariffs" contemplated by the Act to Regulate Commerce, §6, providing that where passengers and freight pass over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several carriers establish joint tariffs of rates or fares, copies of such joint tariffs shall be filed with the Commission,—are those established by agreement and mutual consent of the several carriers, as distinguished from the mere aggregate of the separate rates of the several carriers for transportation over their respective routes. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C., 323.

(d) Rates established by a single carrier upon its route and shown on individual tariffs, and joint rates over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one carrier shown on joint tariffs, are the rates authorized by section 6 of the act, and required to be posted at stations and filed with the Commission. The word "joint" and the express reference in the statute to the several carriers over a continuous line and the joint tariffs which they establish, import concurrence and assent in fixing aggregate rates for a combined service, as distinguished from the separate rates of a single carrier for transportation upon its route. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323, 329.

(e) A carrier which has published and filed its rates as the law requires may combine such rates with the lawfully established rates of a connecting carrier or carriers, and thus announce the aggregate amount for which traffic will be transported from points on its railroad to points on the line of such connecting carrier or carriers; but one carrier cannot lawfully add to the duly established rates of another carrier any amount it pleases less than its own local rates, and publish and use that sum as a through rate to points on the line of such other carrier without its consent. Such a through rate is not a joint rate, for joint rates can be made only by concurrence or consent; nor is it a combination rate, for one of its component parts has no legal existence or sanction as a separate or local charge; there must be lawful rates upon each of the roads before there can be a lawful combination of rates. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323, 331.

(f) In the absence of some agreement or understanding with a connecting line by which a joint tariff of rates is authorized, a given carrier cannot lawfully publish or apply any other rates than those which it fixes for transportation between points reached by its railroad; and the rates so fixed are the only lawful rates which such carrier can charge for any transportation service which it may perform, whether the traffic carried is destined to points on its own road or to points on the line of some other carrier. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323, 331.

(g) Joint rates maybe so divided between the carriers that each receives less than its established local rate, or so that the full local charge is secured by one or more of the carriers, the other party or parties accepting less than local rates, but whatever the basis of division, the essential feature of such rates is that the connecting carriers have agreed or mutually consented to carry traffic over the connecting line for a less aggregate charge than the sum of their established local rates. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323, 333.

(h) There is no question that where a joint rate has been made and filed as such over any through route, such rate takes effect as one charge, and shipments must be carried through on the rate in force at the time of billing. Through routes and through rates, 12 I. C. C. 164, 166.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(i) The "joint rate" referred to in section 6 of the Act relating to the publishing of rates does not apply to the combined rates on shipments from United States inland points through Atlantic ports via ocean carriers to European points, since the Commission has no jurisdiction over ocean carriers. To permit the making of joint rates, in the strict sense used in the section between such points, would open the way for rebates and other discriminatory practices, since in publishing a joint rate under section 6 the carriers are not compelled to publish their divisions of the same and by a manipulation of divisions the ocean carriers might obtain an inequitable portion thereof wherewith to "induce" traffic. The rail carriers must therefore, on such traffic publish their rates from inland points to Atlantic ports. Cosmopolitan Shipping Co. v. Hamburg-American Packet Co., 13 I. C. C. 266, 280.

(j) Joint line means two or more lines of railroad not under same management or control. R. R. Comm. of Louisiana v. St. L. S. W. Ry. Co., 34 I. C., C., 472, 478.

(a) Respondent is engaged with other carriers in the through transportation to Chicago of freight from numerous points on its road, including Springfield and Marshall, and it cannot lawfully call itself merely a local carrier from Marshall, while engaged in through carriage from Springfield and other points on its line, and thereby justify higher rates to Chicago for the shorter distance from Marshall than for the longer distance from Springfield and more distant points of shipment. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 184, 40 L. ed. 935, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700, cited and applied. Violation of Act to Reg. Comm. By St. L. & S. F. Ry. Co. 8 I. C. R. 290.

(aa) The Pennsylvania Railroad Company operating a part of a through line which it joins in making, and owning a controlling interest in the capital of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company, by which the other part is operated, cannot free itself from responsibility of excessive through rates by getting behind the latter company as a separate carrier. Brady v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Com.) 2 I. C. R. 78.

(ab) The Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company, the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company, and the Georgia Railroad Company have formed "a new and independent line," by the adoption of a joint through tariff from Cincinnati to Augusta; but such "new line" is distinct and separate from that of either of the railroads named. Case Cited: 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 257, 52 Fed. Rep. 912, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Osborne. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 4 I. C. R. 332.

(b) Several railroad companies which bill and carry freight from points in one state to points in another will not be heard to say that the carriage by each is local and that they are not engaged in interstate commerce, for the purpose of avoiding the requirements of the Interstate Commerce Act. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 582, Rev'g, 4 I. C. R. 332.

(c) The continuity of the carriage of freight over a line formed by two or more roads is not broken in fact and cannot be broken in law by the charge of a local rate by one or more of such roads as its proportion of the through rate. Troy Bd. of Trade v. Alabama M. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 1.

(d) A shipment of live stock on a through rate from one state to another is interstate, notwithstanding the limitation of the liability of the several carriers to their own lines. Houston & Texas Central Ry. Co. et al. v. Williams 7 I. C. C. App. XLIV.

(e) A shipment of property under a through bill of lading from a point in one state to a point in another state is not an interstate shipment where the contract obligates the initial carrier to carry only to a point on its own road within the same state and no through rate for transportation is fixed. Houston & Texas Central Ry. Co. v. Davis, 7 I. C. C. App. XLIV.

(f) The defendant companies, by joint tariffs, established through lines from St. Louis and Springfield to Eureka Springs, and by an arrangement with the Harrison Transportation Company, attempted to extend by wagon carriage such through lines to Harrison, Berryville, and many other points in Arkansas not reached by either or any line of railroad, charging much less to Eureka Springs on goods to be so forwarded, than on the same goods from same points of origin for Eureka Springs proper. HELD: The provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce do not apply to transportation by team or wagon, and neither the joint tariffs nor the arrangement of defendants with the Harrison Transportation Company constitute substantially dissimilar circumstances and conditions nor make them joint carriers with said Transportation Company, nor carriers at all beyond Eureka Springs, and such unequal charges to Eureka Springs constitute unjust discrimination, and subject complainants, their business and Eureka Springs, to unreasonable disadvantage and give undue preference to Harrison, and such other localities and shippers. Cary v. Eureka Springs R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 286.

(g) Defendant companies by joint tariffs, established through lines from St. Louis and Springfield, Mo., to Eureka Springs, Ark., and by an arrangement with the Harrison Transportation Company, attempted to extend by wagon carriage, such through lines to Harrison, Berryville and many other points in Arkansas not reached by either or any line of railroad, charging much less to Eureka Springs on goods to be so forwarded, than on the same goods from same points of origin for Eureka Springs proper. HELD: The provisions of the Act do not apply to transportation by team or wagon, and neither the joint tariffs nor the arrangement of defendants with the Harrison Transportation Company constitute substantially dissimilar circumstances and conditions nor make them joint carriers with said Transportation Company, nor carrier at all beyond Eureka Springs, and such unequal charges to Eureka Springs constitute unjust discrimination, and subject complainants, their business and Eureka Springs, to unreasonable disadvantage and give undue preference to Harrison, and such other localities and shippers. Cary v. Eureka Springs R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 286.

(h) A shipment of cattle consigned to a point without the state to be forwarded by continuous shipment through connecting carriers and for which a through rate is charged to be paid at the point of destination, constitutes interstate commerce, although the carrier receiving them limits its liability to its own line. Gulf, Western Texas & Pacific R. R. Co. v. Barry, 8 I. C. C. App. XLIX

(i) Arrangment for continuous carriage outside of state subjects carrier to the provisions of the Act. Pennsylvania Millers' State Asso. v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 531.

(j) It is well settled that a railway company whose road is wholly within the bounds of a single state, when it voluntarily engages as a common carrier in interstate commerce by making an arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment of goods and merchandise, is subjected, so far as such traffic is concerned, to the regulations and provisions of the Act. Pennsylvania Millers' State Asso. v. P. & R. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 531, 549.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(k) Carriers having elected to join in through routes and joint fares can not be heard to say that possibilities of reciprocity as between themselves and smaller possibilities of reciprocity as between each of them and complainant justify the discrimination complained of. Western Pacific R. R. Co. v. S. P. Co., 55 I. C. C. 71, 81.

(l) Carrier may not rely upon a technical construction of one portion of the Act to justify a violation of another provision. Consideration must be given not alone to section 15, but also to the provision of the Act which makes it the duty of carriers to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates and charges applicable thereto, and that which forbids undue prejudice with respect to the interchange of traffic between connecting carriers. Gillespie Coal Co. v. I. T., 62 I. C. C. 335, 337.

(m) Carriers whose rails do not connect at interchange points may join in the establishment of through routes and joint rates and may employ a switching line to effect transfer of traffic between their rails The extent to which each shall participate in compensating the switching line under such an arrangement is largely a matter of agreement between the employing carriers. In the absence of agreement to the contrary it would not seem unfair that the expense should be shared equally. Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. Co. v. P. & P. U. Ry. Co., 68 I. C. C. 412, 417.

(n) Fact that combination through rates are composed of proportional factors, the use of each of which is dependent upon use of other factor or factors, does not invest them with character of joint through rates. Van Dusen Harrington Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 78 I. C. C. 729, 731.

(o) The mere participation by connecting carriers in a joint through rate does not make all of them partners, nor liable for discrimination resulting from the grant by one of them for transit privilege the payment for which is retained by the carrier granting it. Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 42 Sup. Ct. 80.

II. ESTABLISHMENT BY CARRIER.

See Common Carrier; Proportional Rates; Tap Lines §4.

§4. In General.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) If a rate when made by one company as a single rate would in law be unobjectionable, it would equally be so when made by several as a joint rate. The policy of the law and the convenience of business favor the making of joint rates; and the more completely the whole railroad system of the country can be treated as a unit, as if it were all under one management, the greater will be the benefit of its service to the public and the less the liability to unfair exactions. Martin v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 2 I. C. C. 32, 38.

(b) The Interstate Commerce Law does not undertake to require a common carrier subject to its provisions to establish through routes and through rates with all connecting lines, merely because it may have done so with some of them. Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (C. C. D., Ky.), 2 I. C. C. 351. Overruling decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the same case, 2 I. C. R. 102.

(c) The seventh section makes it unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provision of the Act, "to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, express, or implied, to prevent, by change of time schedule, carriage in different cars, or by other means or devices, the carriage of freights from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination," etc. It is no violation of said section, for a railroad company to enter into contracts with other companies for the establishment of through routes, and through rates, for the continuous carriage of interstate traffic. Such contracts are in no wise inconsistent with the things forbidden by said section. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(d) Where the charter of a railroad company provided "that any and all such railroad, or railroads, hereafter constructed, may connect and join with the road, hereby contemplated," the connection thus authorized is a physical, and not a business connection, and it does not require an interchange of traffic at the point of junction. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(e) Arrangements in respect to thru freight traffic, and joint through rates or charges, as well as the forms of bills of lading, and the apportionment to be made for such joint traffic rates, and of losses or damage to freight in course of transit, are all matters of private arrangements. Such arrangements, which usually include the reciprocal interchange of cars, and the use of each other's tracks and terminal facilities, are prompted by considerations varied and complex. In some instances, and between some companies, they may be mutually desirable and beneficial, while in other cases, and with other connecting lines, they might be prejudicial, and injurious to the interest of one, or both, and companies in the latter situation cannot properly claim, as a matter of right, what the former have acquired under, and by virtue of, private contract or arrangement. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(f) It is clear that from the provisions of section six of the Act, two or more common carriers, may lawfully enter into contracts, or agreements for the establishment of through routes at or upon joint through rates; because copies of such contracts and agreements, and of the joint tariffs of such carriers, are required to be filed with the Commission. If, in the exercise of the right, thus impliedly, if not expressly recognized, a common carrier, by private arrangements forms a through route, and establishes joint through rates, with certain connecting lines, it cannot be compelled to concede to all other connecting railroads the same or equal through rates, on traffic which the latter may offer for transportation. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(g) No authority is conferred upon common carriers of interstate commerce, to issue through tickets to passengers, or through bills of lading for property, at through rates, over connecting lines, in the absence of such arrangements between the companies. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(h) The Act does not undertake to create between connecting lines such an agency, or "quasi" partnership relation, as is necessarily involved in agreements, or arrangements, for the establishment of through routes, and the making of through rates; as such arrangements exist by contract, express or implied, the fact that a common carrier enters into them, with one or more connecting lines, does not impose upon such carrier, the duty, or obligation, to make the same or like contracts, with all other lines. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 351.

(i) Contracts by a railroad company with other companies for the establishment of through routes and through rates for the continuous carriage of interstate traffic do not violate §7 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, prohibiting a combination to prevent the carriage of freights from being continuous. Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (C. C. Ky.), 2 I. C. R. 351.

(j) Through rates, like any other agreement that parties competent to contract may make, admit of a very great variety in the forms they assume; and such rates, when reasonable and fairly adjusted in their relations to local business, are greatly favored in the law because they furnish cheapened rates and greater facilities to the public, while at the same time they give increased employment and earnings to a larger number of carriers. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce v. F. & P. M. R., 2 I. C. C. 393, 398.

(k) The active competition of rail carriers for the transportation of freight, thereby giving them the benefit of a participation in it and lowering the rates for the benefit of the producer and consumer, and furnishing many outlets to markets, is one of the results contemplated by the Act to Regulate Commerce and which it has intended to promote. New Orleans Cotton Exchange v. Illinois Central R. Co., 2 I. C. R. 777.

(l) Through rates in interstate traffic are the subject of agreement among carriers who transport the freight, and for their existence are dependent upon such agreement; and one of the features of such rates usually is that each carrier receiving the freight pays the charges upon it of the carrier delivering it. In the Matter of the Application of F. W. Clark 2 I. C. R. 796.

(m) It is indispensably necessary in interstate traffic that the consent of each of several lines over which freight is to be carried should be had in the establishment and operation of through rates. Such rates are the subject of agreement, and for their existence depend upon agreement. In the Matter of the Application of F. W. Clark, 2 I. C. C. 797.

(n) Railroad companies are not compelled to make through lines at through rates with connecting lines in the absence of any provision of law to establish such through lines, or fix the terms on which they are to be obtained. In the Matter of Alleged Excessive Freight Rates and Charges on Food Products, 3 I. C. C. 93, 106.

(o) The making or not making of through rates on the part of connecting rail carriers is entirely a matter of agreement between them, in which they consult their own business interests, and under the Act the Commission has no power to compel them to make through rates. King & Company v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 272, 277.

(p) In making contracts for through transportation of passengers, the initial carrier may lawfully prefer a road going through to the point of destination to one going only part of the way, an arrangement with which would necessitate further arrangements to reach the desired point. Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (C. C. W. D. Tenn.), 4 I. C. R. 261.

(q) Other connecting carriers are not entitled to through billing and rating and to the use of tracks and terminals of a carrier which has voluntarily made an arrangement giving these advantages to one connecting carrier. Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. (C. C. App 8th C.), 4 I. C. R. 854.

(r) Through rates are matters of contract between carriers composing the through lines, and connecting carriers cannot be compelled by the Interstate Commerce Commission to contract with each other. Commercial Club v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 6 I. C. C. 647.

(s) A carrier subject to the Act to Regulate Commerce cannot, in the absence of a joint tariff established by agreement or understanding with a connecting line as contemplated by §6, lawfully publish any other rates for transportation between points on its own line as to traffic destined to points on the connecting line than those fixed for traffic not destined beyond its own line. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323.

(t) The Commission has no doubt of the right of carrier to agree upon thru rates which shall be different from and lower than the sum of the locals. The principle has frequently been considered and applied in cases passed on by the Commission. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323, 335.

(u) Freight carried defendants from New Orleans to either Atlanta or La Grange, Ga., is through freight and entitled to through service, and the manner in which they conduct the service cannot alter the character of such freight so as to make that carried for La Grange partly local, while the freight to Atlanta is wholly through. Calloway v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 7 I. C. C. 431.

(v) Carriers who have engaged under their tariffs and course of business in the through transportation of traffic from Chicago and other points to Kearney, Nebr., over continuous lines formed by their connected roads are required by the Act to Regulate Commerce to make their rates on such transportation reasonable and otherwise in conformity with the state statutes; and such duty is not avoided by the fact that the rate to Kearney may be combinations of rates to and from Omaha. Gustin v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 277.

(w) If a railroad company cannot secure other than an unreasonably low share of a joint rate to a seaport on another road, it may be justified in declining to join in such a rate, especially when it can take the traffic to a seaport reached by its own road; but a carrier engaged in transportation over the through line finds no such justification when it is able to secure for itself a share of the joint rate which fully equals the rate established by it for purely local service over like distances on its own road. Savannah Bureau of F. & T. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 8 I. C. C. 377.

(x) Joint through rates and routes are ordinarily the subect of agreement between the participating carriers, but when they have been established, and until finally abrogated or changed, they are required by the statute to be kept open to public use. Consolidated Forwarding Company v. S. P. Company, 9 I. C. C. 182, 205.

(y) There is no competitive relation between petroleum and its products on the one hand and other articles of traffic on the other, and the failure of the New Haven Company to provide joint rates on petroleum and its products, while maintaining joint rates on other traffic, does not constitute wrongful preference and advantage. Fred G. Clark Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 558.

(z) Every joint rate is a matter of agreement between the parties to it. This agreement must determine what rate shall be charged, what division of this rate each carrier shall receive, upon what conditions the exchange of this traffic and the adjustment of these divisions shall be conducted. No just order can be made and enforced unless the authority making that order has the right in case the railways do not themselves agree, to determine these various questions. Clark Co. v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 11 I. C. C. 558, 579.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(aa) Divisions are not essential to legalize a joint rate. Germain Co. v. N. O. & N. E. R. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 22, 24.

(bb) Carriers should establish thru routes and joint rates so that there may be the freest movement of traffic without the necessity of reshipment. Chamber of Commerce of New York v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., 24 I. C. C. 55, 76.

(cc) Carriers should freely interchange freight between their respective lines to the end that interstate commerce may move without interruption or delay. Flour City S. S. Co. v. L. V. R. R. Co., 24 I. C. C. 179, 184.

(dd) Section 1 imposes on carriers the duty to establish through routes and make reasonable rates applicable thereto. Flour City S. S. Co. v. L. V. R. R. Co., 24 I. C. C. 179, 184.

(ee) A carrier cannot say that a certain through route and joint rate has been inadvertently established when the same was in effect for over a year, during which time at least 42 cars moved via that route. Joint Rates on Grain via Minnesota Transfer, 26 I. C. C. 595, 597.

(ff) The provision of section 15, that the shipper shall in all instances have the right to determine over which of several competing lines his freight shall be transported, is not a flexible rule of law to be expanded or contracted to meet the needs of carriers under varying situations which may or may not be their own creation, and the Commission has promulgated nothing in the nature of exceptions thereto or exemptions therefrom. Concentration of Cotton at Points in Arkansas, 29 I. C. C. 106, 108.

(gg) The law requires the establishment and maintenance of through routes and joint rates in order that traffic may be moved, whether in greater or lesser volume and for long or short distances, without the delays or other handicaps of reshipment. It recognizes the carrier's right to its own long haul, hence it releases it from the obligation to participate in a through route between any two points which does not include all or substantially all of its line or lines between those points, except when an unreasonably long or circuitous route would otherwise be created; but it goes further, and where through routes and through rates have been established, reposes in the shipper the right to dictate how his shipments must be routed, both as to terminal carriers and intermediate carriers. Concentration of Cotton at Points in Arkansas, 29 I. C. C. 106, 108.

(hh) Where a complainant petitioning for the establishment of through routes and joint rates is not yet participating in interstate traffic, the fact that no fares are published nor rates filed with the Commission is no bar to the complaint. Pac. Nav. Co. v. S. P. Co., 31 I. C. C. 472, 477.

(ii) Where a common carrier asks establishment in connection with it of through routes and joint rates, the burden of proof rests with such complainant to show that it has sufficient financial responsibility to undertake properly the service in which it asks to share. Eastern Shore Development S. S. Co. v. B. & O. R. R. Co, 32 I. C. C. 238, 242.

(jj) A carrier has no right, by refusing through routes and joint rates, to dictate to its shippers markets for purchase or sale, or in any other way to restrict fair competition. Lumber to C. M. & St. P. Ry. Stations, 38 I. C. C. 587, 589.

(kk) The public interest at the point of delivery is to be considered as well as that at point of origin. Mason Valley Mines Co. v. W. P. R. R., 64 I. C. C. 477, 482.

(ll) Under ordinary conditions the practice of making through rates by adding to a rate for a long distance the full local rate from the basing point to destinations a relatively short distance beyond disapproved. Edwards & Bradford Lumber Co. v. Director General, as Agent, 64 I. C. C. 503, 506.

(mm) Carriers whose rails do not connect at interchange points may join in the establishment of through routes and joint rates and may employ a switching line to effect transfer of traffic between their rails. Minneapolis & St. Louis R. C. Co. v. P. & P. U. Ry., 68 I. C. C. 412, 417.

(nn) To compel the application of short line rates over indirect and longer routes merely as a means of providing a channel of doubtful benefit to comparatively few shippers, would lay an unnecessary expense upon the railroads against the interest of the public as a whole. When joint rates that are neither unreasonable nor unduly prejudicial are maintained over direct routes adequate response is made to the reasonable requirements of the public, and carriers should not be required to perform wasteful transportation by maintaining the same rates over indirect and more circuitous routes, Michigan Railroad Co. v. P. M. R. R., 74 I. C. C. 489, 500.

(oo) Where a carrier holds itself out to carry traffic to and from a certain point, it must reach that point either over its own facilities or through those of others. Where two carriers join in the publication of joint rates and establish through routes via two junctions where their rails do not meet, there is a holding out to the public of intermediate carriage between their respective lines which must be protected. Switching Charges at Peoria, 77 I. C. C. 43, 47.

(pp) General provision of paragraph (4), section 1, that carriers shall establish through routes and reasonable rates applicable thereto, is subordinated to specific provision of section 15 for establishment of through routes and joint rates. Tidewater Paper Mills Co. v. B. T. R. R. Co., 80 I. C. C. 493, 497.

(qq) The language of Congress is explicit that commerce shall flow without hindrance or delay over through routes and upon reasonable through rates. Krauss Bros. Lumber Co. v. G. M. & N. R. Co., 87 I. C. C. 412, 413.

(rr) The Act imposes upon common carriers subject to its provisions the duty of establishing a prescribed mode the rates, whether individual or joint, to be charged for the transportation in interstate commerce of property over their lines; the rates so established are obligatory upon carrier and shipper and must be strictly observed by both until changed in the mode prescribed. U. S. v. Miller, 223 U. S. 599, 602, 32 Sup. Ct. 323, 56 L. ed. 568.

§5. Dispute on Division .

See Advanced Rates, §7 (6); Divisions, §4; Terminal Facilities, §9.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Defendant published a schedule purporting to be a joint tariff of rates on coal from a point on its road to a number of destinations reached by the complainant railroad company, whereby the complainant company received its full local charges to said destinations from junction points with defendant's road, and the defendant accepted the remainder, which was in each instance less than its established local rate from the place of shipment to the point of connection. Complainant, which also carried coal to the same destinations by a longer route over its own rails, thereby securing greater compensation than was afforded from coal coming to it by defendant's road, refused to unite in the rates named by defendant in said so-called joint tariff, and protested against the use of such rates by a connecting carrier as unauthorized and unlawful for want of mutual consent. HELD: That the complaint should be sustained and the defendant company be required to cease and desist from publishing or applying through rates to points on complainant's lines which are less than the sums of their respective local charges. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 I. C. C. 323.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) Shippers may not be deprived of just through rates merely because carriers can not agree upon a division of joint rates. Williamette Lumbermen's Asso. v. S. P. Co., 51 I. C. C. 250, 261.

(c) The failure of carriers to agree upon divisions is no justification for the cancellation of joint rates. Cancellation of through rates on apples from Pacific coast, 69 I. C. C. 679, 680.

(d) The fact that the carriers have been unable to agree upon a satisfactory division of the joint rate is no excuse for the cancellation of a rate. The Act provides a method for adjusting such controversies in instances where carriers can not reach an agreement. Limestone from Illinois Points to St. Louis, Mo., v. M. P. R. R., 74 I. C. C. 345, 348.

(e) A disagreement between carriers as to divisions is not a justification for the cancellation of joint rates. Cancellation of Joint Rates from and to Green Hill, S. C., on the Alcolu R. R., 74 I. C. C. 571, 573.

(f) Fact that carriers are unable to agree upon satisfactory divisions is no excuse for the cancellation of joint rates. The act provides a method for adjusting such controversies in instances where carriers can not reach an agreement. Limestone from Illinois Points, 74 I. C. C. 345, 348.

(g) A disagreement between carriers as to divisions is not a justification for the cancellation of joint rates. The matter may be presented to the Commission in the manner prescribed by the Act for adjusting such controversies. Cancellation of Joint Rates from and to Green Hill, S. C., 74 I. C. C. 571, 574.

(h) Disagreement between carriers as to divisions does not justify cancellation of through routes and joint rates. The Act provides the means by which such matters may be brought before the Commission, and the shipping public must not be made to suffer because of such disagreements. Fruits and Vegetables from Texas Points, 74 I. C. C. 575, 579.

(i) One of the duties of a common carrier is to participate in such joint rates as the public interest requires. This is an incident of their public undertaking, and equity does not necessarily demand that they be compensated by larger divisions in the instances where it might be more advantageous to confine traffic to their own lines. U. S. War Department v. A. & S. Ry., 77 I. C. C. 317, 355.

§6. Circuitous Routes.

See Advanced Rates, §18 (8); Long and Short Hauls, §9.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(a) Distance is an important element in determining whether a routing is satisfactory, since a circuitous route involving a longer haul and therefore greater delay would not be, ordinarily, as desirable as a direct one. Pacific Coast Lumber Mfrs. Assn. v. N. P. Ry. Co., 14 I. C. C. 51, 54.

(b) Generally speaking, shippers are entitled to a reasonable charge by the direct line of transportation, and an unreasonable rate by the direct line cannot be allowed for the purpose of permitting a circuitous line to engage in the business at a reasonable profit. Grain Rates in Central Freight Assn. Territory, 28 I. C. C. 549, 558.

(c) Carriers whose mileage exceeds that of the short line by not less than 15 per cent should be granted authority to meet the rates of the short line and to carry higher rates to intermediate points not less than 800 miles distant from Galveston. Rates on Tropical Fruit from Gulf Ports, 30 I. C. C. 621, 632.

(d) To compel the application of short-line rates over indirect and longer routes, merely as a means of providing a channel of doubtful benefit to comparatively few shippers, would lay an unnecessary expense upon the railroads against the interest of the public as a whole. When joint rates that are neither unreasonable nor unduly prejudicial are maintained over direct routes adequate response is made to the reasonable requirments of th public, and carriers should not be required to perform wasteful transportation by maintaining the same rates over indirect and more circuitous routes. Kansas City Hay Dealers Asso. v. C. G. W., 49 I. C. C. 377.

(e) A circuitous route is defined as one which exceeds the short line by at least 15 per cent. Michigan Railroad Co. v. P. M. R. R., 74 I. C. C. 489, 500.

(f) Other elements being similar, when haul of substantial distance is involved, it can hardly be said that route 388 miles in length is unreasonably long as compared with route of 304 miles, particularly when former is single line and the latter two-line movement. New Mexico Central Ry. Co. v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 81 I. C. C. 718, 721.

(g) The law does not require a carrier with a long route to meet the rate of a short-line competitor Columbus Board of Trade v. A. C. L. R. R. Co., Unrep. Op. 2062.

§7. Obigation to Carry.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) Every continuous rail line or route authorized by the sixth section of the Act is of necessity constituted by two or more separate roads uniting by voluntary agreement and fixing joint through rates over the lines thus formed. Such a route is in every instance as definite and specific a physical line as is either of the separate roads which constitute it. The formation of through routes is not compulsory, but when established and so long as they exist, the obligations, restraints, and regulations of the law attach to them in all respects as fully as to a line composed of a single road. Consolidated Forwarding Co. v. S. P. Co., 9 I. C. C. 183, 205.

(b) While defendant carrier was entitled to insist upon the application of the through rate to the through shipment on its line to Hope, Ark., instead of applying the sum of local rates based upon Texarkana, Ark., which sum was less than the published through charge, it could not lawfully refuse to receive and carry complainant's freight to Texarkana under the local rate to that point, even though the complainant's attempt to ship its freight to Texarkana was for the purpose of having it subsequently reshipped from that point by another line to Hope, Ark. Hope Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co., 10 I. C. C. 696.

(c) The amendment of June 29, 1906, makes it the duty of carriers subject to the Act to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto, and invests the Commission with authority, under certain conditions, to put in operation such through routes and joint rates where the carriers have refused to do so. Enterprise Navigation Company v. Pennsylvania R. R., 12 I. C. C. 327, 332.

(d) There are joint responsibilities assumed by carriers when they publish a joint rate, and one of those obligations is to treat that rate as a unit and to treat the shipment thereunder as a unit, and this, not because of any contractual relation between the shipper and the originating carrier but because the act of the originating carrier in accepting the shipment in conformity with its tariff provisions was the act of all its connections joining in that tariff. Pacific Purchasing Co. v. C. & N. W. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 549, 552.

(e) If a shipper, when he delivers a certain number of pounds of freight at a freight depot to be transported over a through route formed by the carriers themselves under their own agreement, can not be assured that such shipment will move under the rate legally established, there is no value whatsoever in the policy of the carriers and of the law under which through routes are established. Pacific Purchasing Co. v. C. & N. W. Ry., 12 I. C. C. 549, 552.

(f) Under the statute it is the undoubted right of any shipper to have his carload traffic transported from and to interstate points at through rates and without the requirement of unloading and reloading at his expense at points of connection of different carriers. Carriers are required to establish through routes, keep these routes open and in operation, furnish the necessary facilities for transportation, and make reasonable and proper rules of practice as between themselves and shippers. St. Louis, Springfield & Peoria R. R. v. P. & P. U. Ry. Co., 26 I. C. C. 226, 234.

(g) Carriers having elected to join in through routes and joint fares can not be heard to say that possibilities of reciprocity as between themselves and smaller possibilities of reciprocity as between each of them and complainant justify the discrimination complained of. Western Pacific R. R. Co. v. S. P., 55 I. C. C. 71, 81.

(h) Where a carrier holds itself out to carry traffic to and from a certain point, it must reach that point either over its own facilities or through those of others. Where two carriers join in the publication of joint rates and establish through routes via junctions where their rails no not meet, there is a holding out to the public of intermediate carriage between their respective lines which must be protected. Switching Charges at Peoria, 77 I. C. C. 43, 47.

§8. Relation to Similar Points.
See Relative Rates.

(a) Neither competition nor the need of greater revenue can operate to justify unjust discrimination, as is evidenced by a through rate on traffic from a competing locality higher than the combination of separately established charges to and from another competing locality on the direct through ine. Hilton Lumber Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. R., 9 I. C. C. 17, 35.

(b) Complainant attacked rates charged on furniture, carloads, from Chicago and Duluth to Norfolk, Nebr., as unreasonable. Norfolk is reached by the C. St. P. M. & O., F. E. & M. V., and U. P. There is no through rates from and to the points in question via the C. & N. W. Sioux City and C. St. P. M. & O., although through rates are published via C. & N. W., U. P., and C. & N. W., and F. E. & M. V., although the former route is shorter. Through rates are also in effect to Lincoln, Nebr., a point beyond Norfolk, and also to Columbus, Nebr. HELD: The failure of the C. St. P. M. & O. to publish through frieght rates from Chicago, Ill., and other points to Norfolk, Nebr., while such through rates are established and published by that company in connection with other carriers to other points on its line in Nebraska amounts to unlawful discrimintion against Norfolk. HELD: Further, rates from Chicago to Norfolk should not exceed those to Columbus, Nebr., and rates from Duluth should not exceed the rate from Duluth to Emerson, Nebr., an intermediate point, plus the local rate from Emerson to Norfolk, Nebr. Johnson v. C. St. P. M. & O. Ry., 9 I. C. C. 221.

(c) Complainant attacked rates from Memphis, Tenn., to local points in Arkansas on the St. Louis Southwestern Ry., and from such points on said lines to Memphis as unjustly discriminatory compared with the rates locally in Arkansas. Generall speaking, it may be stated that rates between Memphis and points in Arkansas on the Iron Mountain are the bridge tolls higher than those for equal distances specified in the Arkansas Commission's schedule. While reductions were made between Memphis and points on the Iron Mountain, corresponding reductions were not made by the defendant in its rates between Memphis and local points in Arkansas. HELD: Defendant's rates on cotton from local points in Arkansas to Memphis are not required to be reduced, but it is directed that the relation of cotton rates from such points to Memphis and St. Louis be made more uniform from particular stations. Defendant's rates from local points in Arkansas to Memphis on traffic other than cotton are not disturbed, but defendants is recommended to consider revision of its rates to Memphis on livestock and cottonseed. Defendant's rates from Memphis to points in Arkansas, as compared with the Arkansas Commission mileage rates, including those applying from Little Rock and Pine Bluff, Ark., are held to constitute a discrimination for which it is doubtful whether defendant can be held responsible, and in that respect complainants contention is not sustained: but it is found and decided that defendant's rates from Memphis to local points in Arkansas are in many instances unreasonably high and should be reduced. In the Matter of Freight Rates between Memphis and Points in Arkansas, 11 I. C. C. 180.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(d) The interests of carriers are not alone concerned in a matter of through routes and joint rates. A carrier cannot close such a route and cancel a rate applicable thereto to obtain a long haul, when to do so would be to the detriment of shippers and consumers of the territory involved. Public policy supersedes the rights of carriers. Missouri Millers' Club v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 26 I. C. C. 630, 633.

(e) A carrier has no right, by refusing through and joint rates, to dictate the markets from which shippers on its line must purchase, or the territory to which industries on its line must sell, or in any other way to restrict fair competition. Lumber to C. M. & St. P. Ry. Stations, 38 I. C. C. 587, 589.

(f) Proposed cancellation of joint rates on coal from L. & N. R. R. points in eastern Kentucky and Tennessee and southwestern Virginia to points in Minnesota, South Dakota and Wisconsin, leaving in effect combinations which became higher than the joint rates due to the application of general increases to the separate factors, found not justified. The joint rates, voluntarily established by carriers, have been long in force, and while they have never borne a definite relationship to the rates from southern Illinois, carriers are not warranted in creating an undue prejudice on the one hand simply to bring about a uniformity of rates on the other. Coal from Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia, 73 I. C. C. 447.

§9. Right to Favor Own Line.

See Discrimination, §7; §10; Origin of Traffic.

CASES 1887-1908

(a) The action of a carrier in diverting through traffic from a shorter route over which it participates in carriage, so as to secure for itself greater aggregate revenue through a long haul by a different route over which it is also engaged in transportation, sometimes results in discriminations and prejudices, both as to rates and facilities; and inequality of treatment of shippers and localities, having no other justification than this end, is indefensible. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. v. S. P. Co., 6 I. C. C. 488, 516.

IMPORTANT CASES SINCE 1908

(b) A carrier may in its own interest, if it so desires, carry for a longer distance over its own line than would be necessary if carried over the line of its competitors, in order to obtain a portion of the competitive business upon terms that will afford some profit. It does not necessarily follow, however, that a carrier not competing for traffic in this way thereby subjects itself to an order compelling it to do so. Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co., 13 I. C. C. 342, 347.
